Protect Your Eyes In the Spring

Your eyes are certainly worth more to you than the price of a pair of glasses.

Weak eyes in spring can be protected by proper lenses. If you indulge in the pastime of motoring or bicycling get a pair of glasses to protect the eyes from dust and wind.

If the eyes need glasses the sooner you know it the better. No charge for examination. That which helps you to accomplish more is an investment, not an expense. The first cost is the least cost.

"LEST WE FORGET" - - LANGEMARCK, APRIL 22nd, 1915

THE Left Flank of the Canadian Division was thus left dangerously exposed to serious attack in flank, and there appeared to be a prospect of their being overwhelmed and of a successful attempt by the Germans to cut off the British troops occupying the salient to the East.

spite of the danger to which they were exposed the Canadians held their ground with a magnificent display of tenacity and courage; and it is not too much to say that the bearing and conduct of these splendid troops averted a disaster which might have been attended with the most serious consequences.—Sir John French.

Honour Our Heroes By Flying The Flag

A year ago to-night, on April 22, 1915, the 2nd Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force, which had been resting in billets west of the Yser Canal, were notified that the French division to the left of the Canadian firing line had broken and with the other btatalions of the First Brigade, the 2nd were hurried across the canal in the darkness of the night. A year ago to-morrow morning Major Bennett led his company composed of the gallant lads from Peterborough, Toronto and Prescott, into action, and in the early morning the brave major and many of his heroic men gave their lives for the Empire.

Peterborough mourns her heroic dead to-day, but she still thrills with pride as the story of the glorious stand of her sons is recalled. It was first suggested that the flags should be flown at half mast, but the leaders on both sides of Parliament have struck the note that the best manner to show regard for the memory of our loved ones is to keep the grand old Union Jack flying proudly from the top of the mast as a sign of the memorable resolve of our people to see that the cause for which our brave citizens so gallantly died, is to be finally and successfully vindicated.

General Alderson To Canadian Troops

"I would first of all tell you that I have never been so proud of anything in my life as I am of my armlet with 'Canada' upon it. I thank you and congratulate you from the bottom of my heart for the part each one of you has taken in giving me this feeling of pride. I think it is possible that all of you do not quite realize that if we had retired on the evening of April 22nd—when our Allies fell back before the gas and left our left flank quite open—the whole of the 27th and 28th (British) divisions would probably have been cut off. Certainly they would no thave got away a gun on a vehicle of any sort, and probably not more than half the infantry would have escaped.

"This is what our commander-in-chief meant when he telegraphed, as he did, that 'the Canadians saved the situation.' My lads, if ever men had a right to be proud in this world, you have. I know my military history pretty well, and I cannot think of an instance, especially when the cleverness and determination of the enemy is taken into account in which troops were placed in such a difficult position, nor can I think of an instance in which so much depended on the standing fast of one division."—Lt.-General E. A. H. Alderson in an address to the Canadian troops after Langemarck.

PETERBORO' WILL CELEBRATE STAND OF THE CANADIANS

Great Memorial Services For Those Who Fell in The Battle of Langemark Will Be Held To-morrow Afternoon at Central Park---Big Civic Demonstration in The Armouries on Monday Night

The anniversary of St. Julien, in which the Canadian soldiers won undying fame and made for Canada a place in the sun, will be suitably celebrated in Peterborough as follows:

First.

A great memorial service in Central Park on Sunday afternoon, 4 to 4.30, to which the Sunday Schools will parade in a body, headed by the bands, and carrying banners and mottoes.

The South End procession will begin with the St. George's School, and, proceeding to Park Street, will be met at the corner of Park and Romaine by the St. James' School, thence along Park Street, when they will be joined by the Park Street Baptist School, then Knox, All Saints' and Trinity. The Salvation Army and City Missions Schools will join this procession at the corner of Aylmer and Charlotte, and the Salvation Army Band will head this procession from the Park Street Baptist Church to the Central Park.

From the West will come St. Andrew's Sunday School and the Murray Street School, headed by the 57th Band. The Government has called in the old uniforms, and new ones are not yet issued, and this band will appear in mufti to-morrow, but that will not affect the music or the patriotism.

The North End procession will be paraded by the Bugle Band of the 93rd from Grace School along George Street, and at the corner of McDonnel and George will be joined by St. Paul's and George Street Methodist Schools, and proceed to the Park.

From the East will come St. Luke's and Mark Street, to be joined on Hunter Street by St. John's and on George Street by Bethany School. This procession will be headed by the band of the 93rd. There will be short addresses at five points in the Park, and these great hymns will be sung:

"O God our Help in Ages Past."
"Nearer My God to Thee."
"Onward Christian Soldiers."

The public are invited to attend.

Second.

There will be special services in all the churches on Sunday evening at 7 o'clock. Let every Peterborough citizen stand by his own church on Sunday night as the Peterborough soldiers stood by his unit in the great battle we celebrate. Our men were not visiting other units those three great glorious days. They were at their post. The non-churchgoers, if there are any in Peterborough, will be given a cordial welcome at any church they may wish to attend. There will be no meeting in the Armouries Sunday night.

Third.

There will be a great civic demonstration in the Armouries on Monday evening at 8 o'clock. Pictures of the men who represented Peterborough will be shown. It will do us all good to look upon the faces of that glorious band who received the warm personal thanks of the Commander of the Canadian Division, the Commander of the Expeditionary Forces, the Minister of War, and His Majesty the King for the unparalleled service they rendered the Empire and the cause of civilization on the 22nd, 23rd and 24th of April in the year of our Lord, nineteen hundred and fifteen.

His Lordship Bishop O'Brien and others will speak in honour of the men whom the whole Empire has delighted to honour. The band of the 93rd will furnish music.

There will be an offering at the doors with a view to meeting the expenses of producing the pictures which will be shown. Let everybody come.

In Memorium

IN Loving and Loyal Memory of the Peterborough Boys, who on on this day, a year ago, laid down their lives, when, with glorious obstinacy they held the line and saved the situation, and, with their surviving hero-comrades, gave new glory to the name of Canada, a new meaning to Canadian valour; and set-up a new standard of sacrifice and devotion to Country, King and Empire.

LIQUID FIRE ATTACKS OF THE FOE COMPLETELY REPULSED BY THE FRENCH

Germans Hurled Heavy Forces Against The French Front Northwest of Verdun But Were Completely Thrown Out By a French Counter Attack---Enemy Assaults on the West Bank of The Meuse Stopped by The French Artillery Fire.

HUNS WILL NOT MEET U. S. DEMAND

PARIS, (French Official Communique), April 22.—Using liquid fire, the Germans last night hurled heavy forces against the French front northwest of Verdun. They succeeded in occupying trenches on the slopes of Dead Man's Hill, but were completely thrown out by a French counter-attack, the War Office announced to-day.

The flame projectors were brought into play in the attack against the French front north of Caurettes wood. The Germans were completely repulsed.

Violent fighting also developed on the west bank of the Meuse, north and northeast of Verdun, where the Germans attempted preparations for another assault on Fort Vaux. Following an intense bombardment of the whole front from the Meuse eastward to Fort Vaux, the Germans attempted to fill in the trenches before the fort prior to an assault on the fort itself, which occupies a position on a stony height with precipitous sides.

The fact that there is no shortage in the French artillery despite the large number of guns massed at Verdun, was demonstrated by to-day's official communique.

The War Office reported that French artillery had cooperated with the British in the recent fighting on the British front near Ypres and Pillicken.

British Troops Were Successful

Special to The Examiner

BERLIN, April 22.—British troop shave recaptured one-third of the six hundred yards of trench positions taken by the Germans on Wednesday in the fighting near Ypres and Langemarck, it was officially admitted this afternoon.

In the Caurettes wood, the French were successful in their attacks, gaining a foothold in German trenches.

British Success in East Africa

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 22.—General Smuts, in command of the British forces in German East Africa, reports to-day that he overtook the retreating Germans near Kondo Airangi and that an important battle is in progress. Another report says British forces have captured Umbagyo and Salango, with large forces of Germans.

Little Hope of Germany Yielding

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, April 22.—Little hope that Germany would meet fully the American submarine demands was apparent here to-day.

The statements of Admiral Von Holtzendorff, German Admiralty Staff Chief, given to the United Press in Berlin, furnished the State Department the first definite line on the German official attitude.

The conclusion was drawn by some officials that perhaps modification of the sternness of the American demands offered the only chance of avoiding a diplomatic break.

Authorities feel that the German Admiral's statement is indicative of a firm position on Germany's part of an unwillingness to make her practice square with American demands.

At the same time he apparently desires to shift the burden of responsibility to the United States should there be a break.

POLITICAL SITUATION IS EFFECTED BY THE SLOWNESS OF WAR

SEVEN LITTLE COFFINS

By T. P. O'Connor

LONDON, April 22.—This week's fierce conflict at Wimbledon is a mark of the growth of that spirit of general uneasiness and dissatisfaction with the Ministry which comes from the slowness of the war, the incessant attacks of the Northcliffe press, and the notorious division of opinion in the Cabinet, increased by the knowledge that as powerful a personage as King George is ranged against Mr. Asquith and the other conscriptionist members of the Cabinet.

The chief personal effect of the campaign is the bringing into great prominence of two personalities. One is Kennedy Jones, son of a poor Ulster Irishman and a Scotch mother, who had a youth of fierce poverty, and scraped into journalism. He was once my chief reporter. Jones got in touch with Lord Northcliffe by helping him to buy his first daily

MANY LOCAL BOYS HAVE JOINED OUTSIDE OVERSEAS BATTALIONS

The Examiner is Anxious to Get a Complete List---Will Our Readers Help Us?--Many Visit rs in Khaki---No Church Parade for 93rd Battalion---To-day's Orders and General Military News.

Many Peterborough boys have joined outside units in the Canadian Expeditionary Forces, the number probably running up into the hundreds. Yesterday the cap badges of many different overseas battalions were to be seen, evidencing the fact that Peterborough is represented in units all over the country. The Examiner is anxious to get a complete list of the Peterborough men who have joined units other than the local ones, and we are asking you, our readers, to cooperate with us in this work. If you know of a Peterborough boy who has become a member of any overseas unit outside of the city, send his name in to the Military Editor of The Examiner as soon as possible. A list of this kind is of the greatest importance, especially in view of the organizations who are anxious to send comforts to the Peterborough ment. You can help The Examiner, and more important, help the boys by letting us have the names and particulars, as battalions and point of enlistment.

Mr. Will MacPherson, of F. R. J. MacPherson and Company, has joined the Mechanical Transport Section of the Army Service Corps in Toronto. He enlisted last Tuesday, and was home on leave for three days, returning to Toronto yesterday.

Pte. Ed. Wicker, a Peterborough boy with the 208th Battalion, "Beavers," Toronto, and a brother of Corp Fred Wicker, of the 93rd Battalion, is spending Easter in town.

Lt.-Col. Jos. Mills, Inspector of Supply and Transport for No. 2. Division, is spending Easter at his home. His son, Lieut. A. B. Mills of the 146th Battalion, Kingston, is also home on leave.

The Band of the 93rd Battalion played a number of selections in front of the Soldiers' Wives and Mothers' Club bazaar this morning, and afterwards played at a recruiting meeting on the Market Square, where addresses were given by Capt. Widdifield and Adjutant McElheney. The Band is greatly indebted to Mr. Harry Halpin, who presented them with a box of "93rd" cigars, while they were playing on George St.

In yesterday's casualty lists appeared several names of local interest. Pte. Charles Raymond Armstrong, a Lakefield boy with the 21st Battalion, is reported missing and believed killed. Pte. Alex. Comego, a well known Alderville Indian, member of the 21st, is officially reported wounded. He is the third member of his family to appear on the casualty list.

Pte. E. Maudsley, a Peterborough soldier, who left here with the 39th Battalion a year ago, has been invalided home, arriving at Quebec on Thursday. Pte. Maudsley, whose home is on Smith St., did not get to the front, but is sent home on account of physical disability.

SHAKSPERE.

To-morrow, April 23rd, will mark with a white stone, the three hundredth anniversary of the life of Shakspere, the man of deathless name and deathless fame; the greatest dramatist, the most universal poet of all time. No writer, of any age, has so plumbed the depths of human emotions, aspirations and inclinations as expressed in human lives, and given so terse, vigorous, so deeply appealing, so faithful, so truthful and inclusive utterance to them as Shakspere has done. No man of any age or race has held the mirror up to nature and human nature and seen it reflect such vivid pictures of nature's bounty of flower and forest; of earth and sky; of sea and land; of tempest and calm as Shakspere has done; nor seen so many faithful and vivid pictures of the folly and the greatness, the nobleness and the meanness, the guile and the candour the tenderness and cruelty; the highness and the baseness of human nature. No man of any age has limned and finished with more skill so many characters, that have their living counterpart in men and women that we see, and speak with every day, as have done in like manner the men and women of ten generations. We find in his pages images of ourselves, as we see our faces in a glass Shakespere is the poet of humanity who has interpreted humanity to it self, as no other than God's inspired penman could have done. In no other book than the Bible do we find the robust, virile and glorious English language, used with a more homely appeal, more trenchant keenness, more vigorous beauty, than in the pages of Shakspere; or made the means of wider and more embracing human entreaty. Shakspere is the poet of humanity, by his sympathy with every passion, longing, condition and circumstance of humanity. Bar the Bible no book is more quoted than Shakspere. His language is on every tongue that uses our language. Every hour of every day men and women and even children quote Shakspere, who do not know there was a Shakspere, or if they do, only as a name. Hundreds of his phrases such as "happy as the day is long" have passed into the currency of our common speech. His works, entire or in part, have, by the human quality of their texture, the beauty and grandeur of their thoughts, been recognised as the voice of a genius, the fruits of its inspiration and have been translated into many foreign languages, German, Italian and French, there being extant eight or nine French translations of Shakspere. This fact is a tremendous tribute to the grandeur and beauty of his sentiments and ideas. In the case of foreigners there could be little appeal in the music and rythm and catching character of the language that appeals to us, who are "native and to the manner born"—who speak and write and love his speech. But neither the English nor any other language has words or meaning to tell what Shakspere is to the literature of the world, to the mind and heart and soul of human kind. His memory and his words are imperishable. His name will be prized and loved, and live "in the book and volume of our brain" as long as the English language is the language of humanity at its highest. Shakspere and his works are three hundred years old, and to-day they are as young and apt as ever to the needs of human minds and hearts in their endless moods and emotions (for to fit to himself his own words—

And cannot wither him nor custom stale
His infinite variety

ST. GEORGE, SHAKSPERE, JACK CANUCK.

To-morrow is the anniversary of three great events which have all a sentimental association of relation—St. George's Day, Shakspere's deathday, and the central day of the second battle of Ypres—St. Julien—where Canadians covered themselves and their country with glory, and "saved the situation." We are called upon—as we shall do with good heart and grateful recognition, to fly the flag on April 22nd, 23rd, and 24th, in honour of the victory gained by the Canadians, and the help they gave the British and French armies, "by holding a bulldog grip that, as Sir John French said, in his official report, "saved the situation," and "averted a disaster." The Canadians at St. Julien were vastly outnumbered, but they held their ground till the reserve Divisions were brought into action.

At this time it will be interesting to get high authority for the high opinion of Canadian soldiers we shall express by our observance of the anniversary of their gallant actions. Sir John French in his official report thus laconically pays tribute to the Canadian fighters. After describing how the French (on the left of the 2nd Canadian Division) had been driven back by the awful clouds of poisonous gas, he says:

The left flank of the Canadian Division was thus left dangerously exposed to a serious attack in flank, and there was a prospect of their being overwhelmed and of a successful attempt by the Germans to cut off the British troops occupying the salient to the east.

In spite of the danger to which they were exposed, the Canadians held their ground with a magnificent tenacity and courage; and it is not too much to say that the bearing and conduct of these splendid troops averted a disaster which might have been attended with the most serious consequences.

Here is more. Lt.-General Alderson, a Britisher, who knows good fighting men when he sees them, in resigning command of the Canadian corps to General Currie, in the course of his address to the Canadian troops, said:

I would, first of all, tell you that I never was as proud of anything in my life as I am of my armlet with "Canada" on it. I thank you from the bottom of my heart for the part each of you had in giving me this feeling of pride.

I think it is possible that all of you do not realise that if you had retired on that evening of April 22nd—when our allies were driven back by the gas and left our flank quite open—the whole of the 27th and 28th Divisions would probably have been cut off. Certainly they would not have got away a gun or a vehicle of any kind, and probably not more than half the infantry would have escaped.

This is what our Commander-in-Chief meant when he telegraphed, as he did, that "the Canadians saved the situation." My lads, if ever men had a right to be proud you have.

I know my military history pretty well, and I cannot think of an instance, especially when the cleverness and determination of the enemy were taken into account, on which troops were placed in such a difficult position; nor can I think of an instance when so much depended upon the standing fast of one Division . . . . . Now, not only the army out here, but all Canada, all England, and all the Empire are saying that you stood fast . . . You have made a reputation second to none in this war.

Another witness, and this time the Canadian "Eye Witness," Sir Max itken, in his "Canada in Flanders," says:

The battle (Ypres) which raged so many days in the neighbourhood of Ypres, was bloody, even as men appraise battles, in this callous and life-engulfing war. But, as long as brave deeds retain the power to fire the blood of Anglo-Saxons, the stand made by Canadians in these desperate days will be told by fathers to their sons; for in the military records of Canada this defence will be shown as brightly as in the records of the British Army, the stubborn valour with which Sir James Macdonnel and the Guards beat back from Hougomont the Division of Foy, and Army Corps of Reille.

The Canadians wrested from the trenches over the bodies of the dead and maimed, the right to stand side by side with the superb troops, who, in the first battle of Ypres, broke, and drove before them the flower of the Prussian Guards.

The 23rd of April has stood sacred in the calendar to Shaspere and St. George. Now it stands for another, and Jack Canuck completes the trinity. And why should we not fly the flag under whose glorious folds all three have stood for the glory of three races and the cause for which they stand?

Notice To Creditors

Pursuant to a Judgment in an action in the Supreme Court of Ontario, of Rachel Lawson, Lavina Crowe and Beta Lawson, against David Lawson, executor of the Will of William C. Lawson, deceased; the Creditors of William Chambers Lawson late of the Township of Otonabee, in the County of Peterborough, farmer, who died on or about the twenty second day of March, 1916, are on or before the 15th day of May, 1916, to send by post prepaid, or deliver to Messrs Bennet & Goodwill of the City of Peterborough, Solicitors for the Plaintiffs, their Christian and Surnames, addresses and descriptions, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their securities and the nature of the securities (if any) held by them, duly verified by affidavits or in default thereof they will be peremptorily excluded from the benefit of the said judgment.

Every creditor holding any security is to produce the same before me at my Chambers in the Court House in the City of Peterborough on Tuesday the 16th day of May, 1916 at 10.30 o'clock in the forenoon being the time appointed for the adjudication of the claims.

DATED this 10th day of April, 1916.

THE GOVERNMENT CLUB HELD OVER THE HEAD OF HYDRO AND ITS HEAD

The terms of the Act validating the purchase of the Seymour Falls Power Corporation's assets at a cost of $8,250,00 indicate that the relations between the Ontario Government and Sir Adam Beck are strained almost to the breaking point. In response to the urgent request of Mr. Rowell that Sir Adam be sent for to supply the Legislature with information on the transaction, the Hon. Mr. Ferguson stated that the Hydro-Electric Commission and the Seymour Falls Power Company had been unable to get together, and he had conducted the negotiations "as a sort of auxiliary, so that we could get this system for the Hydro to control."

But will the Hydro be given control? That doubtless depends on whether Sir Adam Beck comes to heel and responds with his master's voicelike fidelity to the commands of Mr. McGarry. If he shows independence and a desire to run the Hydro-Electric without undue interference from Queen's Park the Seymour Falls power system will be controlled and operated by the McGarry-Ferguson wing of the Government, while Sir Adam and Mr. Lucas retain control of the Niagara transmission system.

Clauses six and seven of the Seymour Falls Act, passed with indecent haste in the middle of the night, provide the anti-Beck element in the Government with a club which can be used at will to coerce the chairman of the Hydro-Electric Commission. Clause six authorizes the Government to turn over all or any part of the rights, powers, properties, franchises, privileges, plant, or other assets of the Seymour Falls Power Company to any Commission, municipal corporation, municipal commission, company, corporation, firm, or individual. Under this omnibus clause the Ontario Government could sell out, without again consulting the Legislature, to any private corporation with which the Government may care to enter into negotiations.

In vain Mr. Rowell pointed out that all the assets of the corporation, except a single pulp company, consist of public utilities, and that the Government, having bought them to make an end of a private monopoly, ought not to take authority to recreate private monopolies by sale to individuals or firms. Mr. Ferguson stuck to his position, and the Government has now the legal power—which may be exercised without prior consultation of the Legislature—of selling the various public utilities comprised in the Seymour Power Company's assets to private individuals.

Clause seven strikes even more directly at the position of Sir Adam Beck. It provides that the Trent power system shall be under the control and management of some person nominated by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council—that is, by the Ontario Government. If Sir Adam Beck becomes troublesome Messrs. Hanna, McGarry, and Ferguson, who are the controlling figures in the Government, will appoint someone else to manage the Trent power system. If he is "good" the Hydro-Electric Commission may be given control.

Will Sir Adam Beck prove submissive, and do the will of the Hanna-McGarry-Ferguson combination? And if he does, how will the municipalities interested in the Trent power system fare? These are questions of vital interest to several hundred thousand people in eastern and north-eastern Ontario, who must view with no little suspicion the circumstances attending the passage of the Seymour Falls Act.—The Globe.

The Government Weakening Itself

Its Attitude Towards the Municipalities in the Hydro-Electric Resented

Special to the Examiner:

Parliament Buildings, Toronto, April 20.—Prohibition and Hydro are the two things which made the Legislature hum this year. The prohibition attraction was expected; the Hydro excitement flared up more suddenly and yet held the centre of the stage during most of the session.

Neither of the two big features of the session has strengthened the Government, and one of them has certainly weakened it perceptably.

The Government deserves credit for introducing the prohibition bill, and the co-operation between the parties on this measure was an encouraging sign for good government in Ontario. Yet everybody knows, and it is becoming more apparent every day, that the prohibition bill in all its essentials, is an Opposition rather than a Government triumph. All through the session the rejoicings for prohibition, with a few scattered exceptions, came from the Liberal side of the House. Never was this characteristic more marked than at the final passage of the bill in its third reading, when the measure would have become law without any demonstration at all, if it had not been for the joy-making of the Opposition.

This is not to say that the Conservative voters in the Province are not enthusiastic about prohibition, but the official Conservative party is certainly not holding any celebrations over it.

The Hydro trouble is even a more serious matter for the Government. The subject is very much complicated and it is impossible at present to fathom all the motives of the principals engaged. Out of the confusion, however, emerge clearly two facts. First, the power of Sir Adam Beck has been curtailed by the Government; and, secondly, there is a serious split between the Government of Ontario and the representatives of municipalities, Conservative and Liberal alike, interested in the Hydro scheme, in both Eastern and Western Ontario.

The bitterest attacks which the Conservative Government has faced since its accession to power in 1905 have come within the last few weeks from Conservative newspapers and Conservative Mayors, who claim that the Government is doing the Hydro movement grievous harm. A section of the Conservative press, lead by the Toronto Telegram, goes so far as to demand the formation of a new party, which shows that the Conservative Government, with all its ominously large majority, is actually in a precarious position.

ENDS WIFE HUNT AT 80.

A search of more than twenty years for his bride of seven weeks ended when Frederick Grimmius, eighty, applied for a marriage license to wed Anna Brinck, seventy-four, who lives in the same house with him at 90 Coffey Street, Brooklyn.

"I have given my first wife every chance to return," he said. "She must be dead, for the last I heard from her was in 1894." Grimmius is a retired sea captain and was married to Sophie Schafer on November 16, 1873, in Brooklyn. Their honeymoon of seven weeks ended suddenly when Mrs. Grimmius dropped out of sight. One day, they met accidentally in Brooklyn and she informed him that she was about to start for Germany, never to return.

ENEMY RATIONS SMALLER.

And There Are Times When Even Small Quantities Are Lacking.

Professor Paes, the Portuguese Minister, who has been recalled from Berlin, gave an account to the Paris "Matin" of what he saw in Germany. Answering questions regarding the economic situation in Germany, he said:

"After the bread ration has come the butter ration, but I can tell you that the quarter of a pound allowed to each German as his weekly ration is very often lacking. This ration, though modest, was yet too large in view of the poverty of the market. Hence the interminable waits before the shops, the queues of housewives standing for hours, and finally losing patience and demonstrating their discontent. The public mind is feeling the effect."

TREATMENT FOR TUBERCULOSIS

JOHN A. THIRTYACRE.

TESTIMONIAL.

I swallowed a large tack in April, 1904, and it lodged in my lung. This developed into tuberculosis. Four doctors treated me but I gradually became worse. Then my sister learned of Nature's Creation and got the medicine for me. When I began taking Nature's Creation, I was having night sweats continually, pains in my chest and both lungs. Several physicians said I could not live over 30 days. After taking the first bottle of Nature's Creation, a wonderful improvement was noticeable and I continue to improve. Weighed 107 pounds; now 130, and never have had any return of the old trouble.

Political Situation is Effected By The Slowness of the War

paper. Finally Jones left journalism altogether with three quarters of a million sterling.

PEMBERTON BILLING.

But the hero of the election was Pemberton Billing. He is the only member of Parliament who took a place on the Jones platform. The campaign which had begun hopelessly obscure suddenly began to burn fiercely. Billing did it. Dashing through a wide and populous constituency, covering 60 miles, and a hundred thousand people, on a torpedo motor car, violating all speed laws, Billing was everywhere, speaking with lurid fierceness and passion. His excitable, forceful nature and whirlwind oratory were just the kind to capture the crowds who did not know quite what they wanted, but found relief in cursing and swearing at the government, especially at Mr. Asquith, the destruction of whose pregtiership is the chief object of the Northcliffe campaign.

Meanwhile the newspapers are publishing accounts of his hitherto unknown life. It is one of the most varied careers of adventure. There is scarcely anything he has not been since he ran away from home at the age of 14 to go to sea. He spent a good part of his life in South Africa, and has taken every possible job from actor to journalist, brickmaker, street car conductor, soldier at Ladysmith and Spionkop, manager of a circus shooting gallery and land speculator, he finally turned to aviation. He took out innumerable patents and became a promoter of aviation companies. Of course he is now being subjected to severe criticism, and his records are examined to discover how far his own achievements correspond with the severity of his criticisms of others. The violence of his language has led to it being called Billingsgate.

A FREAK CANDIDATE.

The other night I dined with Mr. Billing, the Air candidate, as he has come to be called. He is one of the most curious of the phenomena that are thrown into political life at a time of storm and stress. Nobody thought that he was anything but a flash in the pan. His candidature for the Mile End of London was put forward by some journalists—it is said that Lord Northcliffe was the chief contributor, though the name of Mr. Bottomley was also mentioned. Mile End is a curious kind of constituency. Every London constituency in the poorer parts is in fact curious, because of the unaccountable foreign as well as the unaccountable native vote. It was therefore quite possible that even a freak candidate like Mr. Billing might get returned from such a constituency; but he was defeated.

It was not the end of him, as everybody knows; but when he stood for East Werts nobody had any doubt at first that all chance of his surviving was at an end. There is no stodgier Tory constituency in all England. It has nearly always been represented by a strict Tory. The constituency is one of those sleepy old-world corners of southern England where people seem to have arrested all political development about the time that William the Conqueror had won the battle of Hastings. Hatfield, the seat of the great Cecil family, looks down upon it and anybody not countenanced by a Cecil was always regarded as a hopeless outsider intruding on a family seat.

THE TORY MEMBERS.

Tory members of Parliament went down and spoke on the same platform as Liberal members; both the money and the agents of the two great parties were given with equal lavishness to the candidate of the Coalition; the Churchmen for the first time in the history of the constituency stood on the same platform as the Non-Conformist in opposing the daring upstart who threatened the existence of a ministry composed of the best men of the two great parties.

How then could such a man win as such a fight? It was all the Zeppelin raids. Of course every government which does not win battles, and win them pretty rapidly, is bound to be unpopular. The story of Abraham Lincoln in the first years of the Civil War, is one of the historic examples of that truth. And there is a good deal of underground resentment against the government in this country because of that fundamental fact, though less than one might have expected considering how much Germany has been able to gain. The robust good sense which is at the bottom of the British mind recognizes that such vicissitudes are inevitable. The same good sense demonstrates to the overwhelming majority that just as in the case of the North against the South in the Civil War in America, the weight of metal is on the side of the Allies, and must ultimately win. But all the same, there is the inevitable impatience; and this impatience is being as seduously increased and is fed daily what is another of the strange phenomena of the war—namely the attempts of the press to carry on the war and the government of the country. Lord Northcliffe is the chief figure in this press campaign, partly because he loves power, and partly because he is a violent conscriptionist, and seeks to use the different disappointments of the war as a weapon for forcing conscription on the Ministry. His success would mean of course an entire upheaval of the politics.

SEVEN LITTLE COFFINS.

The Zeppelins have brought all these discordant elements to a head, and Pemberton Billing, speaking as an airman and roundly denouncing the aviation service of the government, was just the man to be the embodiment of this dim, fierce resentment. You can understand the resentment. A Canadian officer whom I saw a day or two ago told me how he had seen seven little coffins stretched out together at ——— (place deleted by the censor). They were the coffins of seven little children whom the Zeppelins had killed a few days before. And in several towns of England there has been the same cruel maiming and murder of babies and women; and the assassin machines, and assassin crews that did the work, had been able to fly away with perfect impunity. It was more than flesh and blood could be expected to bear.

Pemberton Billing was fashioned by nature to be the spokesman of such a feeling. He is very tall, thin almost to fleshlessness, the whole body gives an impression of whipped cords—perhaps of chilled steel. Every movement is vivid, alert, almost feverish. He talks rapidly and continuously; he is full of his subject and full of himself; though I must add that he is so good-humored and so humorous that he is just saved from taking himself too seriously, and amid his story of his adventures the vein of egotism is constantly interrupted by a smile that is simple and almost childlike. He looks at such moments, just an excitable and truant boy, so that you can't really help liking the fellow. I certainly took to him at once. The face is also striking. Like the body it is long and thin; the complexion also is pale, the cheek bones prominent. He looks to me as the late Joseph Chamberlain must have looked as a young man. The resemblance is increased by the fact that he, like Joseph Chamberlain, wears a monocle, but there is a difference. Chamberlain's monocle was held by a string; Pemberton Billing just puts the eye-glass into his eye, and takes it out now and then, which gives a curious, weird expression to the face.

THE CAMPAIGN.

Whatever else he is, Pemberton Billing is an electioneerer by instinct. Nobody but a born electioneerer could have won such a fight. He had nearly two hundred villagers to address, and to do this within a week. The organization which he created though improvised was perfect. Before he reached any village, he was preceded by a number of heralds. There was first a band of motor cyclists who announced the coming of the hero. Then they were followed by several motors carrying a woman's delegation; then came other motors with another body of heralds. And finally the hero himself appeared, and of course had before him a crowd and an enthusiastic audience. The motor cyclists meantime had left for the next village; and thus the whirlwind campaign reached every nook and corner of the scattered constituency, and everybody had an opportunity of seeing the dashing young candidate.

Where will Pemberton Billing end? It is impossible to say. He kept himself well under control the first time he addressed the House; was moderate statement, courteous and modest, and everybody was agreeably surprised. But the second time he spoke he threw all self-restraint to the winds, and brought things to a crisis when he accused the government of having "murdered" aviators by sending them up in defective machines. There is in the House of Commons a universally respected member called Sir Charles Nicholson, and his son—a delightful boy, handsome, frank, simple, courageous, husband of a beautiful young wife, the sister of Lord Murray of Elibank—had a few days before been killed on an aeroplane; and the angel of death thus brought home to the House hovered over the House at this terrible young, new member spoke of such an accident as "murder." The government was disturbed and infuriated, and the House felt that there must be some exaggeration. But a few days afterward Pemberton Billing, who was supposed to have killed his reputation, was addressing an excited and enthusiastic meeting in the city, and made no apology for his terrific onslaught. Where will he end? I ask again; and again I have to answer—I don't know. Wild youngsters have got to a great place before in our parliamentary history.

To Absorb Freckles And Other Blemishes

Every spring numerous inquiries are made by girls seeking some reliable recipe for removing freckles. Last year very favorable reports were received from many who had used mercolized wax during the freckling season. The wax seems to possess unusual properties which completely absorb the freckles, with no harmful effect. The complexion improves wonderfully, becoming as soft as a rose petal, and as delicately tinted. Get an ounce of mercolized wax at any druggist's, spread a thin layer of it over the entire face every night for a while, washing this off in the morning. For rough, spotty skin, sallowness, blackheads, pimples, and all cutaneous blemishes, this treatment is superior to any other.

Springtime also brings wrinkles to many sensitive skins that are much exposed to winds and changing temperatures. To a half pint witch hazel add an ounce of powdered saxolite, which quickly dissolves. Bathe the face in this; the effect on a wrinkled skin is remarkable.

ARE YOU WEAK INSTEAD OF STRONG?

Make Yourself a New Being:—Renew, Revitalize, Reinvigorate Your Lost Strength.

You're a discouraged, weak miserable wreck — old before your time. Instead of a place of happiness the world is full of strife, worry and distress.

You are sick and not aware of it just able to drag yourself around, but totally incapable of exertion or hard work.

Your stomach is crying out for assistance. Hadn't you better give it some Ferrozone?

Your nerves require a good bracing tonic, and the best thing for them is Ferrozone. Why don't you use this sovereign remedy? It is intended for cases just like yours.

Ferrozone is superior for the blood and nerves to any curative agent the world has ever known. Its recuperative powers are beyond description as a trial will demonstrate.

With the use of Ferrozone comes strength to overcome the difficulties and battles of life. Digestion and assimilation will improve, appetite will grow better. You will sleep soundly, and presto—before long you will be healthy, strong and well.

These blessings are all obtained by the regular use of Ferrozone, and can be purchased at any reliable drug store for 50c., or three boxes $1.25.

Trades and Labour Notes

Delegates to the Trades and Labor Council turned out this week in fair number, the meeting being presided over by Chas. Hammacott of the typo union.

A NOVEL PROPOSITION.

The secretary if the Calgary Trades and Labor Council caused the biggest debate of the evening. Now that the country is doing what it can for returned disabled soldiers in placing them in suitable jobs, yet the danger exists that these men, not being altogether dependent on a weekly wage, having more or less of a pension granted them by the Government, can work for less than the average stay at home.

There is also an added danger, they can be used as strike-breakers. President Hammacott who has the privilege of sitting with the local committee of the Soldiers' Aid Commission explained that one of the ideas suggested in Peterborough was to get the men in touch with the Toy Factory run by the Labor Educational Association. Here was work that could not possibly interfere with workers and their living wage. Still the danger as pointed out by the Calgary Secretary was one that would have to be met, as the least we can do for disabled soldiers was to provide them with a means of livelihood without penalizing non-combatants.

A LOCAL ORGANIZER

Though trades unions have had their membership somewhat depleted owing to the demands of war, still there is no authority that can state that the good old proverb "Union is Strength" has lost its savour. Labor must still keep aware of the fact that it has not yet fully come into its own, and the strength that comes with unionism is still wanted. The American Federation of Labor, on the recommendation of the Trades council has appointed G. L. Myland local organizer. Here is a good man as a labor official any member of the types will say that, as representative Myland has been their Financial Secretary for some time, the duties of said office he has performed with great credit.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION

Capt. Burnham's offer of an address on Technical Education was re-considered. After much parleying much the same decision was reached. It was felt that not enough could be induced to come out, and the audience would not be inspiring to the speaker. The need of education was felt to be great, and probably talking it up from now on would have good results by the fall. It was not advisable to turn down Capt. Burnham's offer altogether, but at the present time the war is the all absorbing topic.

MACKENZIE & MANN INTERESTS

The above came in for some scathing remarks and Peterborough Trades and Labor Council go on record as being against any further concessions from the Government.

What is the 7th Point?

From the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Gulf of Mexico to Hudson Bay, millions of people have been asking "What is the 7th Point in Sterling Gum?" In practically every town, city and village in the United States and Canada, the published six points of superiority have brought Sterling Gum fast-growing popularity.

But the seventh point still remains a riddle.

Point ⑦ What?

Now, we are offering liberal prizes to those who send us the best suggestions for the Sterling Gum Point 7.

The Following Story Unfolds the Secret of the Famous Point 7

To most people chewing gum is a mystery. They may know that different chewing gums are made from different ingredients. But that is about all. Here are facts which we believe you will be glad to know about Sterling Gum:

Your Sterling Gum is made from the following materials:

This natural Sapota Tree sap is boiled, sweetened and flavored. The sweetening is simply pure cane sugar and pure corn syrup.

There are some twenty varieties of the mint plant. The Sterling Peppermint is a product of the choicest, smoothest-flavored of these many mint varieties.

The sap of the Sapota Tree, the cane sugar, the corn syrup, the Peppermint and Cinnamon flavors all come from the sap of some plant or tree. Nature herself supplies these delicious materials from which your Sterling Gum is made.

Requirements for Winning Phrase

When you read the above facts on the materials that Sterling Gum is made of, you will know all that it is necessary for you to know in entering this contest.

The first prize will go to the one whose suggestion, based on the above story, most impressively presents the natural purity of Sterling Gum—in the opinion of the judges.

Remember that your suggestion must be in six words or less.

The next best suggestion will win the second prize—and so on down.

It is understood that the Sterling Gum Company will have the right to use the 7 Point suggestions sent in by the prize winners.

The contest is easy to enter. Just think out your way of expressing the 7th Point. Then write it out in six words or less and send it in as directed in the conditions printed below. Even if you don't win the first prize of $1,000, you stand a chance to win one of the 7,777 smaller prizes.

PEPPERMINT IN RED WRAPPER CINNAMON IN BLUE WRAPPER

70 Prizes—each	$2.50

Conditions of the Contest

If two answers are entitled to the same prize, the full amount of the prize will be paid to each.

All answers must come in on a postal card. On the back of the postal card write nothing but your 7 Point suggestion (six words or less) and your name and address. The postal may be mailed in an envelope if you choose.

Mail answers to

Sterling Prize Judges
Room 319, 405 Lexington Ave.
New York City

You may send in as many suggestions for Point 7 as you choose. But each suggestion must be written on a postal card as directed above.

Contest Closes

All answers must be received in New York by midnight of May 15, 1916.

Answers will not be examined by the judges until after that date. The judges, therefore, cannot mail acknowledgments of the suggestions received.

Judges

The prizes will be awarded by the following committee of five well-known men:

John A. Sleicher, Editor of Leslie's Weekly.

Edgar Sisson, Editor of the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

Jno. M. Siddall, Editor of The American Magazine.

Frederick L. Collins, Editor of McClure's Magazine.

Robert H. Davis, Editor of Munsey's Magazine.

Announcement of Awards

The winners of the first three prizes will be announced in the July first issue of the Saturday Evening Post. Please do not write to the judges. They cannot correspond with individual contestants. Just make a note now of the date on which the prize winners will be announced in the Saturday Evening Post.

Now put on your thinking cap. Get your family to help you. Send in as many suggestions as you want to. All will be considered in awarding these many prizes. Do not write the Sterling Gum Company regarding the contest or its conditions—all suggestions will be judged by the Prize Committee named above.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Upper Storey of The G.T.R. Station Swept By Fire

Damage of $3,500 From Early Friday Morning Blaze—Caused by Defective Wiring—Plans Were Under Way for Complete Rewiring.

MAY WORK TO-MORROW

Defective wiring is blamed for a $3,500 fire that broke out in the upper storey of the G. T. R. station on Friday morning at 1.05 o'clock. Only ten days ago the G.T.R. inspector of electric wiring, Mr. Fay of Belleville, examined the wiring of the station, which had been installed a number of years ago, according to the methods then in practice. As the result of his visit, it was proposed to re-wire the station, employing the tubing insulation that is now required, also putting in new lights throughout the building and providing illumination in the G.T.R. park on Charlotte Street.

The fire originated either at the wooden switchboard, in the upper storey or somewhere between the floors. The flames had broken through the roof when they were first noticed by a home-going citizen, a few minutes after 1 o'clock. He ran back to the fire hall and informed the night-watchman at the hall. The firemen soon had six lines of hose at work, four of them playing on the exterior and two in the rooms upstairs. The blaze had made considerable progress before it burst through the roof.

The office of Mr. Yerrow, Superintendent of Tracks, was swept by the flames. It was on the upper floor to which the firemen succeeded in confining the fire, and provided a spectacular effect that attracted hundreds of citizens. The flames devoured the roof and upper section of the central and main body of the station. The only damage on the ground floor was a thorough drenching in the ladies' waiting room, the ticket office and the room at its rear.

Immediate Rebuilding.

The work of cleaning up the debris was begun Friday morning by twelve men under Superintendent W. J. Cairns of the Bridges and Building Department, and this morning the staff was increased to twenty-four. It is desired to replace the roof as soon as possible, in order to protect the interior from rain, and the work will likely be continued to-morrow.

Telegraph Wires Were Broken.

It was not until about noon on Friday that the telegraph service was repaired, but it is expected that the station will be without light for several days. In the fire-swept upper storey were kept the records since 1906 of the details regarding business with other railways and which were needed for the adjustment of details regarding cars and similar business. Their loss will be of considerable inconvenience to the local office of the Company.

Building an Old One.

The G. T. R. station was built in 1868, and its honest timbers, some of which successfully defied the flames, bore testimony to the palmy days of the lumber age when beaver board was undreamed of. It was used as the head office of the Midland Railway, which the late Senator George A. Cox controlled. The previous headquarters of the Midland Railway were in the offices now occupied by Dumble and Johnston, at the corner of Brock and George Streets.

The fire loss of $3,500 was estimated by a representative of the joint insurance department conducted by the G.T.R. and C.P.R. All their property is thus insured, and the expense of rebuilding is covered by simply charging the $3,500 to the insurance department and crediting it to the building department.

Station Agent A. MacNab was on duty early Friday morning. Fortunately the ticket rack escaped the water and the outgoing Easter excursionists were attended to without serious delay.

Y. M. C. A. NEWS

The boys' hike that was to be held this Saturday morning has been postponed until Tuesday morning on account of inclement weather.

The results of the Bible study examinations will be made known to the boys in the next few days. These papers will have to be passed first locally and then by a committee in Toronto.

The advance copy of the triennial report of the International Y.M.C.A. has been received and it is interesting to note the great advance that has been made by the American Associations during the past three years. The number of Associations have increased 18 p.c. The amount expended in current expenses increased 20 p.c. Students in Bible study have increased 28 p.c. The amount invested in foreign work of the Association has increased 45 p.c. 1915 as compared with 1900 shows an unbelievable increase.

During this time the number of Associations have increased from 1439 to 2583 a net gain of 79 p.c. In 1900 there were 255,472 members, in 1915, 799. The amount invested in property 1900, $20,246,437, in 1915 invested in buildings $80,388,492, an increase in property in 15 years of 341 p.c. The number of students in Bible study in 1900 was 30,051, in 1915 163,833, an increase of 445 p.c. The number of students in educational classes 1900 was 25,909, in 1915 83,771, an increase of 223 p.c.

Great advancement is shown along all other lines, the greatest advance being in foreign work of the Association which during the past 15 years has increased 1,211 p.c., there now being annually expended in foreign work considerable over $400,000.

The International committee has placed in its budget for 1916 a special item of $400,000 for work among soldiers in the European war. This added to the 250,000 being raised by the National Council of Canada means that a total amount will be raised in America and expended in military work amounting to $650,000.

In the mind of the leaders of our Association movement the great war offers the greatest single opportunity for service that Association has had during its 72 years history, since at the present time twenty-eight million men and boys are engaged in the world's struggle, and millions of other men are engaged in producing munitions of war. It is the purpose of the Y.M.C.A. to follow the boys of the Allies to the front and give them such aid and comfort as they may require. We have no information as to what the German Y.M.C.A.'s are doing in behalf of their young men, but presume that they also have establishments for the relief of suffering among their soldiers. The International committee is by special arrangement caring for the British prisoners of war in Germany and is also doing work among the German prisoners in England and France. The National Council of Canada has a special secretary who devotes his whole time to work among prisoners interned in Canada, so the great work being done touches all classes of men who are undergoing privations and sufferings of war.

LIEU. HAZEN LOSES HIS LIFE

Younger Son of Minister of Marine and Fisheries is Killed in Action

OTTAWA, April 20.—Word reached Ottawa this afternoon, by cable, of the death at the front of Lieut. James Murray Hazen, younger son of Hon. J. Duglas Hazen, Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Hon. Mr. Hazen was in attendance at a Cabinet Council when the brief message informing him of his bereavement, was handed to him.

Details of the manner in which Lieut. Hazen was killed are lacking. His death occurred 'somewhere in France,' and not improbably in the St. Eloi region, where the Canadians have been holding an important section of the British line against successive German attacks.

Lieut. Hazen, who was about 23 years of age, was a student at the Royal Military College, Kingston, when war broke out. Without waiting to complete his course, he went into training and qualified for his lieutenancy, leaving Canada last Fall. He went with the 30th Field Battery, but was transferred later.

Sir Sam Hughes Here Yesterday

Minister of 'Militia' Spent Several Hours in The City

Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, was in the city yesterday morning on his way through to Lindsay. A number of Peterborough citizens, including the 93rd Battalion, called upon the minister in his private car at the station.

Service Was Largely Attended

A large crowd gathered at the S. A. Temple last night to witness the service prepared for the occasion. The illustrated songs thrown on the sheet were heartily sung by the audience and the splendid tableaux entitled "The Floral Cross" and "Rock of Ages" were rendered beautifully. Coloured spot lights were thrown on the scenes which made it very much more effective.

All credit is due to those who had to do with the arrangement of the programme.

None of Patrioitc Fund For Soldiers' Relief Association

Decision Regarding Remainder of a Portion of First $50,000 Which Was Given for Relief of Those in Need as a Result of the War —Is Now an Emergency Fund.

Citizens who contributed to the first Patriotic Fund in this city will remember that 25 per cent. of the $50,000 subscribed was set aside for the relief of those persons who were in need as the result of the war. The winter of 1914-15 threatened to be unusually severe in the expected demands for charity because of the industrial flurry in the anticipation of blue ruin. About $7,000 or $8,000 of that sum remains unused, and the recently organized Soldiers' Relief Association for the assistance of returned soldiers desired to know if any or all of that sum could be diverted to the new association, which, to accomplish adequate and permanent results, feels that it will require a considerable sum of money to come from some source or other.

It was for a conference on this subject that representatives of the association, including Mr. E. F. Mason, Mr. G. H. Logie, and others, waited upon the Executive of the Patriotic Fund on Thursday evening. Mr. Logie detailed at considerable length something of the problem that will have to be faced if the Soldiers' Aid Association is to be of the greatest benefit to the returned invalided soldiers. He divided them into four classes—the educated and uneducated seriously and slightly wounded. Of the four classes the uneducated seriously wounded will present the greatest problem. To teach them some occupation at which they can employ themselves with more or less profit will be to their own benefit, morally, mentally and otherwise, and will also make them more valuable members of society, than if they merely live in idleness on their pension and whatever support they receive.

Hence, the Soldiers' Relief Association desired to secure means to begin their work, and simply wondered whether the $7,000 could be transferred to them. Legal advice, however, showed that the returned invalided soldiers were not contemplated when the fund was organized, and at that time many subscriptions were marked specially for the relief of those thrown out of employment by the war.

The Patriotic Fund Executive therefore decided that as trustees of that fund they could not hand over the money to the association. It was even stated that after the war the question of unemployment may be more serious than at any time since July, 1914, and the money now in the bank would be needed for such a contingency.

FOX IN PORCH SWING.

Apparently Found Cushion a Comfortable Sleeping Place.

When C. A. Werner of Duarte, Cal., opened his house the other morning he found his swinging seat occupied by a full grown fox. With the cushion for a nest the fox was resting comfortably and evidently enjoyed his quarters.

When his presence became known the members of the family came trooping out to see the porch climber. Then the fox disappeared under the house, where his nature prompted him to hide until the spectators left the porch, when, finding the coast again clear the fox gracefully jumped on the porch and into the swinging seat, and, with an almost human air of comfort and satisfaction, adjusted the pillow and settled down to complete the morning nap.

When again interrupted the fox disappeared and headed for the mountains. The theory that it had escaped from a luxurious captivity probably accounts for the domestic tastes of the visitor.

The Easter breakfast may be a little short of the usual ham, but the "and" should be plentiful with eggs at 20 and 21 cents a dozen on the market this morning. For dinner of course there is prime beef, but you could get a husky turkey for $2.50, and it was reduced from $2.55, or a tempting chicken of last year's spring for $1.25 and $1.50. Turkey doesn't agree with most persons these days. It's a trifle dear, but there are always those fortunate individuals to whom price is the last consideration. If it were not for their well-weighted purses the "turks" could live on until Santa Claus called them to the block.

Butter sold, for the most part, at 33c. a pound, but at 11.30 the remnant of the morning's supply was down to 30c, and it was good-looking butter at that. Mr. Loader dispelled the unseasonable gloom this morning with phonograph selections, such as the lilting "Dancing Around" and the patriotic "Keep the Home Fires Burning."

It was not the usual large Easter market to-day.

Y. W. C. A. NOTES.

Everyone is talking of the closing exercises of the Y.W.C.A. gymnasium classes in the Y.M.C.A. on the second and fourth of May. This will be an exhibition of first year work, and will include marches, wand drills and folke dancing. At least fifty children will take prat.

The annual meeting of the Y.W.C.A. will be held on May 12th, when Miss Eunice Saunders, National Secretary, will be present and give an address.

OSWALD MEAGHER MAY LOSE SIGHT OF ONE EYE

Oswald Meagher, son of Detective Wm. Meagher, will likely lose the sight of one eye as the result of an accident that occurred a few days ago. His older brother threw a stone at a bird and in some manner it bounced up and struck the younger boy on one eye. Mr. Meagher said this morning that there was not much hope of preserving the sight in that eye, although it may not have to be removed.

ASSISTANT NEEDED TO CARRY ON WORK OF HEALTH ASSOCIATION

During the past year our citizens have been called upon for monies for many purposes, the Patriotic Fund, Red Cross and others, all of them funds to which we contributed with willingness and with pleasure, particularly because they nearly all represented the contributions of those at home to assist, in some way, those who were offering their lives at the front as a sacrifice that the civilization which we hold so dear might be saved. While, then, our minds are occupied with these great world-wide struggles it is almost with a note of apology that we ask our citizens to stay for a moment while we try to present the claims of a worthy organization carrying on its work right here among our own citizens.

The Peterborough Health Association is carrying on a splendid work among the people of this city and in order to continue its activites must again make its annual appeal to the kindness and generosity of the people of Peterborough. Last year funds sufficient to prosecute our work up to the first of May, 1916, were secured and now we must ask our friends to be as generous as last year in helping us, to these we believe that to mention the necessity will promptly bring their contribution. To the many hundreds who did not assist last year we more particularly present our needs and ask their kind consideration of the work we are attempting to d in their midst, believing that such consideration will prompt them to give us the financial assistance we so urgently need if our assistance, to the less fortunate of our fellow citizens, is to continue along the same lines it has for the last five years.

With the kindness of the press, it is the intention of the Association to present, from day to day, some information dealing with the objects and actual work of the Association, and we trust that when our canvassers call upon our citizens they will, if unable to give a larger contribution, at least become members at one dollar a year.

FORMER PETERBORO' BOY A PROMINENT VANCOUVER DRUGGIST

Mr. T. Hall Robinson, born in Smith Township, who has risen from a druggist's apprenticeship with late Peterborough firm of Ormond and Walsh, is the subject of a biographical sketch in the National Drug News. He is now a resident of Vancouver and has risen to a prominent position in British Columbia. The sketch is as follows:

The accompanying photograph is of Mr. Thomas Hall Robinson (Georgia Pharmacy) Vice-President of the British Columbia Pharmaceutical Association, who came to British Columbia in 1907, from Montreal, taking a position with Messrs. McDowell, Atkins, Watson Co., in their Homer street Branch, which position he held until that Company sold out all their stores. He then took a position with Mr. Leslie G. Henderson (Georgia Pharmacy) which he has held ever since. He was elected to the position of Councillor in the British Columbia Pharmaceutical Association in 1914. Mr. Robinson was born in the Township of Smith, in the County of Peterborough, on November 20th, 1851, reciving his education in the Grammar school of Peterborough, starting in the drug business as an apprentice to Messrs. Ormond and Walsh, Peterborough, afterwards taking a position with Messrs. Kenneth Campbell & Co., in their Phillips Square Branch, Montreal. He passed his senior examination in the Quebec Pharmaceutical Association, in 1876, going into business for himself in Orillia, for a time. After passing his O.C.P. examinations in 1879, he moved to Montreal, going into business on the corner of Sherbrooke and City Councillors streets, where he remained until coming to the Coast. Although known among the boys as "The old man" he is still, at the age of sixty-five years, as smart and active as most of the younger ones.

KNOCKED DOWN BY HORSE.

But Little Girl Was More Frightened Than Hurt in Friday Afternoon Accident.

The little daughter of Wm. Warren, Brown street, North Monaghan, was knocked down on Charlotte street near the George street corner on Friday at 8:25 o'clock by a horse driven by Mr. John Clancy, 716 Water street. She was taken to Dr. Greer's office and was found uninjured, but considerably frightened by her experience. The police reported the affair an accident.

A BUGLE CALL FROM YOUNG'S POINT

The industrious Young's Point lady workers on behalf of the Red Cross movement, are inviting everybody to attend their grand patriotic entertainment and supper to be held at South Beach summer resort on Easter Monday evening, April 24th. The programme for the evening will consist of a special supper between 5 and 7 o'clock, and a musical and literary entertainment commencing at 7.30. During the evening, a priceless quilt will be drawn for. After all is over, those who wish to remain to spend an hour of Terspicorean enjoyment can be gratified to their heart's content. An orchestra will furnish enlivening music. South Beach affords ample room for all who can attend.

Nearly all people can prevent colds by keep active through proper diet, the organs of excretion and by always living in an abundance of pure air.

A SCENE IN "ROLLING STONES"

Few plays presented in New York during the past few seasons have enjoyed a more notable career than "Rolling Stones," which comes to "The Grand" next Thursday, April 27. For six months it ran to capacity houses at the Harris Theatre in New York, and now comes to Peterborough direct from a long engagement in Boston. The same New York and Boston cast intact will present the play here, including Leonard Doyle, Harrison Ford, Marie Carroll, Margaret Brainard, Arthur Aylesworth, and all the others who so largely contributed to its success. "Rolling Stones" is by Edgar Selwyn, and the company is under the direction of Selwyn and Company, which means that the production will be elaborate and complete in all its details, and the entertainment worth while. The same cast and production as will be seen here is now playing in Toronto.

YESTERDAY AT ALL SAINT'S CHURCH

A most delightful programme was rendered last night by the choir of All Saints' Church, who had the assistance of Miss Edwinna Palmer in violin selections.

The programme consisted of well-selected numbers, particularly suited to the solemnity of the day. To say the least, the anthems and choruses by the choir were splendidly sung. The attack, phrasing, crescendos and soft passages were well marked and showed careful training.

The tenor solos from Stainer's "Crucifixion" were beautifully rendered by Mr. Geo. Chandler, as was also the duet from the same work for tenor and baritone, Mr. T. H. Boddy singing the baritone part with taste and expression.

The quartette, "God So Loved the World," sung unaccompanied, left nothing to be desired, those taking part being: Sopranos—Misses Williams and Timm; altos—Misses Gollop and Purseglove; tenors—Messrs. Gladwin and Raybould; basses—Messrs. East and Melton.

The soprano solo in Calvary by Miss Melton was nicely sung and showed a wealth of tone, supported with sincerity.

The hymn anthem, "O God our help in ages past," revealed a solo for Master Harry Murduff, the boy soloist of the choir, which was very pure and sweet.

"Behold the Lamb of God" (from the "Messiah"), was perhaps the gem of the choral work, followed by that supreme alto air, "He was despised," by Mrs. Lloyd, with violin and organ accompaniment, was greatly admired.

Miss Edwinna Palmer is no stranger to Peterborough audiences. Her playing last night revealed the true artist, and we are sorry to announce that Toronto will soon claim her, as she will shortly take up residence in the Conservatory there.

The whole programme was under the conductorship of the choirmaster, Mr. Geo. E. Chandler, who, with the organist, Miss Flowers, are to be congratulated upon their combined efforts.

"How Dead Heroes Live"

Subject To-morrow Night at The Murray St. Baptist Church

The contrast for the floral decorations of Murray Street Church for Easter Sunday has been given by the Men's Association to Messrs. A. Blade and Son, and the beautiful auditorium will present a splendid appearance to-morrow. The pulpit platform will be banked with palms, ferns, and lilies, and the Church otherwise arranged in keeping with the Easter thought. The music under the direction of Mr. Asa Huycke, the choir leader, will be of a high order. The pastor, Rev. J. R. Webb, will preach morning and evening, the evening subject being "How dead heroes live," with special reference to the anniversary of the Battle of Langemark. The service will include the singing of Ebenezer Elliott's great hymn:

"When will thou save the people
Oh, God of Mercy, when!"

18th Presentation of "The Crucifixion"

Was Successfully Made Last Night By The Choir of St. John's Church

The eighteenth presentation of Sir. John Stainers "Sacred meditation on the Passion of Our Blessed Lord" "The Crucifixion" was successfully made last night by the choir of St. John's church, assisted by Miss Kathleen Moore, soprano, and Mr. Asa Huycke, baritone, choir leader of Murray Street Baptist church. Both singers and new to this form of work, and their splendid success last night proved them to be adapted for its performance. Both are young, have good tonality and range of voice, and have received their musical training in our own city. M. H. W. Morphet, tenor was, as usual, reverently earnest in his numbers, a feature, which in addition to excellent staging, is so heartily appreciated by St. John's congregation. The unaccompained work was good, and the double quartette composed of Mrs. Devey, Miss Horsfield, Mrs. Evans, Mrs. Tucker, Sergeant Coleman and Mr. Flowers, gave a fine rendering of "God so loved the world." The singing of the choruses and hymns was distinctly good, most of the singers being new to the work for many of last year's choristers are now either in the trenches or training in England for their noble part in this awful war. The organ accompaniment by Mr. Cyril Devey were effectively and tastefully played, this being his second year in that capacity Mr. R. J. Devey conducted with the usual precision shown whether in big oratorio like the "Messiah" staging and directing a "San Toy" or a devotional work in the chancel, as in last nights "Cruxifixion". Canon Cornish cinducted the devotional part of the service and in the vestry, congratulated the choir on their excellent presentation, especially those singers from other churches who so kindly gave their assistance.

The offertory taken up will be given to the choir fund.

Heavy Grain Traffic From Midland East

Local G.T.R. Office Will Have Night Operator—Empty Cars Going To Midland

The first signs of the spring grain rush from Midland were evident on the G.T.R. yesterday when four double-headers went to Belleville to bring up empties to the grain sidings at Midland. It is expected that the first movement over this division will be on Monday or Tuesday. The first vessels cleared from Midland on Friday morning for the upper Superior ports, and the complete activity over the G.T.R. will soon be at its height. The grain to be first freighted from Midland is some that has remained in the elevators since last fall.

Owing to the night traffic that is now expected, the local G.T.R. office will be open at nights, and an extra telegrapher arrived yesterday to take charge of the night wire. The office has been dark at nights for many months past.

The Veterinary Department of the State Agricultural College at Brookings, S.D., announces that the popular belief that the mule-foot breed of hogs is naturally immune to cholera, is without foundation.

BANISH PIMPLES AND ERUPTIONS

In the Spring Most People Need a Tonic Medicine

One of the surest signs that the blood is out of order is the pimples, unsightly eruptions and eczema that come frequently with the change from winter to spring. These prove that the long indoor life of winter has had its effect upon the blood, and that a tonic medicine is needed to put it right. Indeed there are few people who do not need a tonic at this season. Bad blood does not merely show itself in disfiguring eruptions. To this same condition is due attacks of rheumatism and lumbago; the sharp stabbing pains of sciatica and neuralgia; poor appetite and a desire to avoid exertion. You cannot cure these troubles by the use of purgative medicines—you need a tonic, and a tonic only, and among all medicines there is none can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for their tonic, life-giving, nerve-restoring powers. Every dose of this medicine makes new rich blood which drives out impurities, stimulates every organ and brings a feeling of new health and energy to weak, tired, ailing men, women and children. If you are out of sorts give this medicine a trial and see how quickly it will restore the appetite, revive drooping spirits, and fill your veins with new, health-giving blood.

You can get these Pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Some More Convincing Evidence

If more evidence were needed to demonstrate the exceptional value of the total abstainer as an insurance risk than what has already been published by this Company, it is found in the following Table covering the experience in the two Departments of the Company for the period of ten years.

Year	PER CENT OF EXPECTED TAKEN
	Abstainer	General
1905	36.96 per cent	74.39 per cent
1907	37.61 per cent	69.13 per cent
1909	38.50 per cent	68.45 per cent
1911	40.87 per cent	77.09 per cent
1913	40.42 per cent	64.94 per cent
1914	41.88 per cent	71.68 per cent
	Average for Last 10 Years
	39.46 per cent	64.19 per cent

Why not reap the advantages of Total abstinence by insuring in a Company which grants the special terms and rates which the above Table clearly shows are deserved by those who classify for insurance in the Dept.

Still Sticks By Allison

Sir Sam Hughes Says He Will Come Through the Investigation All Right

OTTAWA, April 22. —"Allison will come through all right. He has more honour in his little finger than his traducers have in their whole bodies." This was the declaration made by Sir Sam Hughes, who was in his office at the Militia Department this morning, having returned from his home in Lindsay, where he spent Good Friday.

Gen. Hughes had his coat off and was hard at work when seen by newspaper men who asked him what he thought of the interview given by Allison at Ogdensburg yesterday.

The Bugle Call For South Beach

All Young's Point is astir over the grand patriotic entertainment to be held at South Beach summer resort on Easter Monday evening, April 24th. The lady workers, on behalf of the Red Cross funds, have a great treat in store for all comers. The programme starts off with a savory supper, a la Delmenico, from 5 to 7 p.m. At 7.30 a musical and literary feast will follow, including patriotic addresses by Mr. D. O'Connell and Mr. Wearing of Peterborough. Last, but not least, the radiant and fascinating quilt of many colours and pieces will be drawn for, proceeds in aid of Red Cross funds. Let everyone come, as there will be lashens of room at South Beach for the whole countryside.

Patriotic Bazaar of Soldiers' Wives And Mother's Club

The bazaar that has been conducted by the Soldiers' Wives' and Mothers' Club in the office formerly occupied by the G. N. W. Telegraph Co., adjoining Mr. Porter White's grocery store, has been an encouraging success during the past three days, and the ladies hope to be permitted to occupy the premises on Monday, as there is still a quantity of women's and children's wear to be sold. The proceeds are to be used for the supply of comforts for the men at the front, especially socks. Already this club has forwarded extensive supplies of socks to Peterborough boys alone. To continue their work they have busied themselves for months in making all kinds of articles for children and women, and have been selling them during the past three days. Dinner has also been provided and altogether the bazaar has been a fine success. Mrs. Stanley, who is convenor in charge of the work, stated to-day that the public had been very generous, and the members hoped to be able to dispose of the remaining articles either to-night or on Monday. Meals are served and also tea and refreshments.

Union Service at Trinity Church

A union service to commemorate Good Friday was held yesterday afternoon at Trinity Methodist Church, when this large edifice was filled with people from the various congregations of the city churches. The service was conducted by Rev. J. P. Wilson, who offered the opening and closing prayers. The lessons were read by Rev. Robt. Pogue and Rev. B. Greatrix, and prayers were said by Rev. J. R. Webb and Rev. R. G. Peever. Two addresses were given, one by Rev. Canon Davidson and the other by Rev. D. Brown, of Park St. Baptist Church. A choir composed of choristers from different churches, rendered special music. Mrs. Stewart also sang a solo in splendid voice.

At the conclusion, Mr. John Allan, of St. Paul's Church, rendered the dead march in Saul.

The Sign of The Cross, To-night

The Empire Threatre Presents This Most Excellent Film Again To-night

We owe an apology to our patrons for not being able to present the Sign of the Cross yesterday afternoon. The express carried the parcel through to Cavanville, and we received it only in sufficient time for the evening performance, which drew a crowded house. It will be shown for the last time to-night.

Any of those who bought tickets yesterday afternoon expecting to see this picture and did not may do so to-night without further admission.

On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday next, Ethel Barrymore, in "The Nightingale."

All in life worth having has its price. It must be paid for in effort, and in tears, and can be had on no cheaper terms.

"I suppose," said a lady to a car conductor, "if I pay the fare for my dog he will be treated the same as other passengers, and be allowed to occupy a seat?" "Oh course, madam," the conductor replied politely, "he will be treated the same as other passengers, and can occupy a seat, provided he does not put his feet on it."

WILLIAM SHAKSPERE

Born April 23, 1564 (St. George's Day) — Died, as to the body, April 23, 1616

"Shakspere is the most modern writer in our language. It would seem that in one fruitful moment the genius of England gave birth to a poet, who interpreted his country to itself and to the world, once and for all time; his thought and language being the everlasting mind and utterance of his race at its highest."

Springfield Machinists on Strike

Special to The Examiner:

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., April 22.—In accordance with their threat to strike at 9:30 this morning unless granted demands for increased pay and better shop conditions, six hundred machinists joined the two hundred already out at the New England Westinghouse Co. plant.

It is believed that the employees of the Chicopee plant, same company involving, 1,200 men, will go out.

Say Germans Are Losing 3 to 1

Examiner Special:

LONDON, April 22.—Col. Repington, war expert of the London Times, said that the German losses in the neighbourhood of Verdun are three men to every one that France loses, and the percentage of killed in German attacking ranks is enormous. He expects big results shortly from the new French offensive.

Mark St. Church To-morrow

Services of unusual interest will be held in Mark Street Methodist Church to-morrow. The Sunday School will assist in the morning service while the Leader family will contribute a number of vocal and instrumental selections. Special music will be provided by the choir in the evening. In the morning the Pastor will take for his subject "The Resurrection of Christ," while in the evening the subject will be "The call of Four Anniversaries — Easter, St. George, Shakspere and Langemarck."

Sandpaper will remove spots of rust from the kitchen range.

Dry cut glass with soft tissue paper if you want it to be brilliant.

Perfect cleanliness does much to prevent rats and mice from congregating. If food is not left around the room or closet the rudents rarely favour an occupied house.

ARTHUR LEWIS, Sec.

April. These rates will only be granted to the military men in uniform and on presentation of the usual certificate."

Commad; Struck off.

No. 195220 Pte. C. Ferguson (Signalling Section) having reported from Kingston, is struck off command from April 17th.

Leave of Absence.

The Commanding Officer has been pleased to grant leave of absence to Lieut. R. L. dePuyjalon from reveille 22nd April to reveille 25th April.

J. E. R. MUNRO,
Captain,
Adjutant 93rd Overseas Battalion, C. E. F.

COBOURG PRESENTED.

BELLEVILLE, April 20.—In the presence of thousands of spectators regimental colors, were this afternoon presented to the 80th Battalion, which will leave this city in a few days for overseas. The colors were the gift of the members of the Ketcheson family of Hastings County, and were most beautiful in design. The gift was in recognition of the fact that Lieut.-Col. Ketcheson is the commanding officer of the regiment. The battalion, 1,110 strong, presented a most imposing appearance, and previous to the ceremony was inspected by Col. Hemming, officer commanding the 3rd Military Division. The colors were consecrated by Rev. Canon Bemish, rector of St. Thomas' Church, after which they were paraded before the battalion. Addresses of a patriotic nature were given by Mayor Ketcheson, of this city; Col Hemming, of Kingston; Sir. M. Bogell Col. Ponton, and a reply by Col. Ketcheson, the commanding officer. Miss Nettie Ketcheson, a daughter of Mayor Ketcheson (who has two sons at the front and one with the 155th Battalion being mobolised here,) read an address in making the presentation of the colors on behalf of the donors. The affair was most impressive in its character. In his remarks Colonel Hemming referred to the fact that the 80th Battalion was in every respect one of the best battalions leaving Canada.

Corp. Jack Common an old Peterborough boy and former student at the Peterborough Collegiate Institute is here for a couple of days on leave. Corp. Common is a member of the 171st Battalion, C.E.F. at Quebec.

Sergt. Major Geo. W. Allen of the 49th Battery, C.F.A. Toronto is home on Easter leave. Sergt. Allen who has already seen service at the front leaving with the first draft of Peterborough artillerymen and who was invalided home as the result of being blown into the air by a shell in the picture of health at the present time.

Signalling Sergt. Ecobichon of the 93rd Battalion who has been attending the school of Signallers at Kingston is home on a few days leave. The Peterborough Signallers who are in attendance at the Kingston school have been making good progress. Their examinations begin on Tuesday and the squad will likely be home a week from to-day.

Sergt. Herb O'Hearn if the Machine Gun Section of the 93rd Battalion who has been attending the Machine Gun School at Kingston is home on Easter leave. He returns to Kingston Monday to complete his course.

Many Peterborough boys home for Easter are wearing the khaki and as a result the numerals of many different overseas units were seen yesterday. Among those the Examiner noticed were the 116th Ontario County Battalion, the 107th, the 136th Port Hope, the 139th Cobourg, the 146th Kingston, the 171st Quebec the 177th Simcoe, the 109th Lindsay, the 204th Toronto "Beavers" and the Mechanical Transport, A.S.C.

The death of Private James Barry, the first Hastings boy killed in the war, occasioned a memorable service in the town hall last Sunday night. Among the speakers were Rev. M. Thompson, Rev. Mr. Snell and Rev. Father Brotherson, pastor of the church of which Pte. Barry was a member. Reeve Fowlds presided. The young Reeve Fowlds presided. The young men were urged to fill up the gaps, and it was suggested that after the war a monument be erected to bear the names of the Hastings men who fall in battle.

A labour man's battalion will be formed shortly with headquarters in Toronto. The unit will be modelled after the "Navvy" Battalion of the Imperial Army. These are composed of men to old or slightly unfit for fighting. They are used on roadmaking and repairing and other work of a similar nature behind the lines in France.

Lt.-Col. Sam Sharpe has purchased four knitting machines, costing $21 each, and will place one at the disposal of the Patriotic Society at each of the four Companys' headquarters, viz.: Beaverton, Uxbridge, Whitby and Oshawa during the war, so as to enable the members to provide socks for the members of the 116th Batt. Col. Sharpe is arranging to pay the expenses of a representative from each Society to Toronto, to learn how to operate the machine. The machine will knit a pair of socks in 20 minutes, including all of the feet except a small part of the toe which has to be completed by hand. The boys of the 116th Battalion should be well provided in the way of foot wear.

The Uxbridge Junior Relief Society is purchasing the colours for the 116th Battalion, and the formal presentation will take place on the arrival of the Battalion at Uxbridge on the County route march. The ladies of the town are donating one field kitchen to the Battalion and the Town Council has donated $500 to the Battalion Fund—in all about $1,000 for the Town of Uxbridge.

LINDSAY, April 20.—Another Lindsay boy has made the supreme sacrifice for king and country, and has shed his life blood on the fields of France in order that liberty might triumph.

This morning Mr. and Mrs. Samuel McGill received this sad message:

Deeply regret to inform you Pte. Ivan Elmer McGill, infantry, officially reported killed in action April 8th.

ADJT.-GENERAL.

The receipt of this message was a great shock to the parents of the lad soldier, as their had been receiving letters of a most cheerful character from their boy. He had spoken of the great dangers, and had assured his parents that he was prepared to acquit himself as a true soldier of the king. Mr. and Mrs. McGill had been awaiting a letter from their boy, but instead they received the sad intelligence that his life had been given for his country.

Ivan Elmer McGill enlisted with the 4th Regiment for overseas service last spring.

The Kingston Whig says: The battalions coming to Barriefield camp will likely be located as follows: 93rd (Peterborough), 77th (Ottawa), 109th (Lindsay), 130th (Perth), 136th (Port Hope) in a direct line on the north boundary line of the camp. The 139th (Cobourg) will be between the old moving picture theatre and the main road.

Beaverton, April 20. — The 116th Overseas Battalion, C.E.F. (Ontario County) is receiving generous assistance from the patriotic citizens and municipalities in the county. Beaverton and Cannington have made substantial contributions to the battalion funds, Beaverton donating $150.00 and Cannington $225.00, and the ladies are organizing to help equip the Battalion.

W. F. Cowan, Esq., of Oshawa, generously donated a $500.00 cheque, Real Estate, of Toronto, gave a Field Kitchen and two sets of artillery harness; Brock Township gave $500.00; Uxbridge Town (headquarters) gave $500.00 cash; the ladies are giving a Field Kitchen, $525.00 and the Junior Relief Society (young ladies) are presenting the colours to the Battalion. Others are to follow and the Ontario County Battalion will go into camp one of the best equipped battalions in the Province. The people of Ontario County want their battalion as well equipped as any other.

So far the 93rd Battalion has received very little assistance of the kind given to the 116th.

Mrs. Thomas Dale, 275 William St., who enclosed a letter in a pair of socks sent to Bdr. R. J. Black of the 8th Battery, 2nd Brigade, by the Canadian Kitchener League, has received the following reply from him: "I have just come back from taking the rations to the boys at the guns, and was having a change of socks when I found your kind letter in one of the socks, and so I am hurrying up to write you to thank you for your kindness in sending them. It is a great pleasure to know you are so well thought of so far away and especially by the people of Canada; though not a Canadian myself I greatly appreciate all that is done. My dear old home is in England among the beautiful scenery of Leicestershire, not far from the historic park where once Lady Jane lived and within two and a half miles of the birthplace of Hugh Latimer. His old house is still in good repair and the bridge that he was so fond of walking over still spans the river. It is indeed a lovely spot. I was travelling in Canada at the outbreak of the war and so enlisted in the artillery and have been with them ever since. I have been through some great battles and had some rare adventures, and I can only thank Almighty God for bringing me through safe and sound and for giving me good health and strength. What a great blessing it will be when this terrible war is over and we have peace again. I have great confidence now of it being over soon. The Germans are really beaten but of course they will not admit it, so the sooner they give in the better it will be for themselves and the rest of the world. So now I must conclude my letter to you as time is getting on."

Capt. F. D. Lee, of the 109th Batt., formerly known as "Judge" Lee, left on Tuesday for Victoria, B.C., having been appointed signalling instructor officer for western military division. He will take with him Sergt. Slater, another Lindsay boy, who has been associated with Capt. Lee for several months past in the signalling work.

Capt. Lee will be missed by many in town, not only in the battalion, but also amongst citizens in general, but although sorry to see him going, one and all are pleased to know that he has received a well merited promotion.

It is understood that Lieut. Brokenshire, of the 109th Batt., will succeed Capt. Lee and that Corporal Houlihan has been appointed to his staff, as well as Corp. Brodie. —Lindsay Warder.

Capt. Lee is a son-in-law of Mr. James Faux.

Mrs. Knowlson of Lindsay received the following letter:—

Ohrdruf, Feb. 18, 1916

Dear Madam.—This is in answer to your letter, also parcel you sent, which I must thank you for your kindness towards me. I would be very pleased if you could send me a pair of boots, which I am badly in need of, a pair size 9. If you see Mr. Crosier, remember me to him, and give him my best wishes, and tell him I am now in the infirmary suffering from my wounds, which I received from May.

PTE. CHAS. SHARMAN.
K.O.T.L.I.

The camp at Barriefield will mean a weekly expenditure of at least $160,000 in pay alone. In addition to this it will cost the Government at least $50,000 every week to feed and house the ten battalions in camp. Here is a total of $220,000 a week for six months which with extras, must mean a total expenditure of at least five million dollars at Barriefield for the summer.

The 5th Field Battery of Engineers, Queen's, will go into camp at Barriefield on Thursday. The Ordnance Corps will also go into camp to-morrow. There will be about 30 Engineers in the Queen's corps. Many of the men who were in last year, will go to camp with the college corps again this summer.

Three Peterborough boys have enlisted in the new draft of the Cobourg Heavy Battery, which is now being organized. They are Sid. Armstrong, Robert Thompson, and Sidney Thackeray.

The sock shower for the 93rd Peterborough Battalion, which was announced some time ago by the 57th Chapter of the Daughters of the Empire, is to be held on Saturday, the 13th day of May, 1916, at the Recruiting Station on Simcoe Street.

The rooms will be open all day, and the committee in charge will be available to give any assistance necessary. Any person having socks intended for any particular person in the battalion may leave them there with the recipient's name attached.

The object of the shower is to provide every man of the Peterborough battalion with a fresh pair of socks before they move out for good. The returns now in show that this object is not going to be attained unless the ladies of the city and county come to the assistance of the Chapter, at once. The end in view is a most worthy one, and it is to be hoped that it will be accomplished.

Any further information may be obtained on inquiry made to Mrs. W. H. Hill, 363 Brock.

COBOURG, April 19.—Five of the past season's O.H.A. junior team and two of the St. Michael's intermediate team, have enlisted with the new draft being raised here for the Cobourg Heavy Battery. Practically every player of last year's team enlisted from here a year ago.

The following letter has been received by Mrs. S. Thomas, wife of Q. M. S. Sam Thomas of the 21st Battalion, from Sergt. R. C. Constance of the same battalion dated March 31.

Just a few lines in haste to thank you on behalf of the Peterborough boys for your kindness and thoughtfulness in sending us the bale of socks which I received last night. I guess it is not much use me telling you that socks are a great necessity and are playing a great part in this war, for I guess that Sam has already informed you to that effect. I might say that I distributed the gift as well as I possibly could and the socks which were intended for men who are now away either wounded or sick in hospitals I gave to the most deserving ones among men from other towns. I am pleased to say that I am much alive and getting along very good considering the situation we are in. I might say that it has been pretty lively around here the last few days, but the weather is improving and the mosquitoes a great deal. Well I must now close, hoping to see you again in the near future and thanking the Soldiers' Wives and Mothers Club, yours very sincere.

R. C. CUSTANCE, 59290

Mr. J. Warboy has received the following letter from his son, Pte. Fred Warboy, with the 5th C. M. R. in France:

Dear Father and Family, — I received your welcome letter and was glad to hear from you, and also glad to hear you are all well. I am feeling fine myself.

I received your parcel all right, and certainly enjoyed the tobacco. It is great to get anything from home like that. The socks and handkerchiefs also came in quite handy. I would like you to send me some cake. Don't be afraid of it getting stale. It will be all right.

We are in the worst point of the line now. It is the first line of the trenches. Well I will close now, hoping to hear from you soon again. With love to all. I remain, your loving son,

Fred.

ENEMY TIRED OF WAR.

Letters to New York Man Declares Teutons Want Peace.

New York, April 22.— An interesting letter from Budapest was received by a business man in this city. It was delivered to him by a civil engineer who had travelled through Austria and Germany.

The writer of this letter, an observant gentleman, speaks of the high prices of food prevailing everywhere and of real suffering among the people in consequence. Coffee, which the Germans and Austrians like so much, no longer graces the table except in the homes of the wealthy residents. In Austria the price of coffee, when this letter was written two weeks ago, was sixteen kronen a pound, which represents $7 in United States money. Meat is really out of the question for the poorer classes.

Milk, eggs and other necessities have become luxuries and there is much complaint. The people says the writer of the letter have lost their enthusiasm and optimism, for they feel now that, despite the successes of the Teutonic armies, they cannot win and the best that is to be expected is a draw in the conflict. The people pray for peace; they want it now whatever the issue of the war may be, and if they had their way they would have peace at once.

RAILWAYS KILLED LIST IS GROWING SHORTER

For Year Ending July 1st Last Only 360 Persons Killed and 1578 Injured.

There were killed through the movement of trains on Canadian railways in the twelve months ended with July 1st last 360 persons, the number injured being 1,578. The number killed was the smallest in nine years, the number injured the smallest in five. Of the number killed 168 were trespassers, for whose conduct the railways were not responsible. Only seventeen of the killed were passengers, being at the rate of one for every 2,724,000 carried.

PIMPLES ON HANDS ITCHED AND BURNED

Healed by Cuticura Trial Free

"My son got his hands covered with pimples or little blisters. They were just as thick as could be and were about the size of a pin head. When he put his hands in water or washed they itched and burned awfully. His hands looked very bad and the skin had thickened and cracked. Then I got some Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I only used them about a week and his hands were healed." (Signed) Mrs. A. Clarkson, Knowlton, Quebec, December 27, 1915.

New York Stock Market

Summary of To-day's Activities on the New York Stock Exchange

NEW YORK, April 22.—Liquidation was general during the closing hour of the stock market and prices slumped badly. The losses extended throughout the list. Mexican steel showed the heaviest drops, but they were followed closely by munition stocks. Mexican Petroleum dropped over nine points to 91, Crucible steel dropped to 77 1-4, while American Loco dropped to 64 and Westinghouse dropped a point, selling as low as 53 3-8. U. S. Steel was off 1 1-2 a point, at 80 3-8.

The market closed weak.

ST. GEORGE'S DAY.

Service will be held next Thursday at St. John's Church, at 8 p.m. to commemorate the Patron Saint of England. The Colonel and officers of the 93rd Battalion, and the Mayor and City Officials will attend in state.

The sermon will be preached by the Rev. Canon Cornish; the first lesson will be read by Capt. Rolline and the second lesson by His Honour Judge Huycke. A new feature in this celebration of St. George's Day will be the rendering of the Hallelujah Chorus (Handel) by the band of the 93rd Battalion.

Thus it will be seen that this celebration of our Patron Saint's Day may be considered as national: Church and Army, to say nothing of Law and State being represented therein.

WEDDING BELLS

JOHNSTON—McCONNELL.

The marriage of Miss Mabel McConnell and Mr. E. Gordon Johnston, both of this city, was solemnized by Rev. A. E. Johnston, of Bethany Tabernacle, at 213 Brock St., on Thursday afternoon.

After a short honeymoon with relatives of the bride at Collingwood, Mr. and Mrs. Johnston will reside in Peterborough.

MADILL—McKIBBIN.

The marriage of Jean McIntyre, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David McKibbin, to William Stanley Madill, L.D.S., D.D.S., son of Mr. and Mrs. William Madill, of Peterborough, was solemnized at the bride's home on April 20 by the Rev. R. B. Cochrane, in the presence of only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties. The bride, in a suit of blue silk and taffeta, with hat of old rose, was given away by her father, and the wedding march was played by the bride's sister, Evelyn. Mrs. C. J. Paynter attended the bride as matron of honour, while Mr. J. M. Laing acted as best man. After supper the bride and groom left for a short honeymoon extending over the holidays.—Toronto Globe.

PITCHFORD—SMITH.

A very pretty little wedding was celebrated this afternoon in St. John's Anglican Church on the occasion of Miss Ethel Maud Smith, of Lock street, city, being united in the bonds of Holy matrimony, with Mr. Albert Edward Pitchford, son of Mr. N. Pitchford, of London street, in this city.

The church looked very pretty, having just been decorated by the Chancel Guild for the Festival of Easter. The Sanctuary was ablaze with lights.

Immediately after the ceremony the party drove to the home of the bride's relatives where an elegant dejeuner was provided; at the conclusion of which the newly married couple left for Kingston on taheir honeymoon trip.

WM. LECH & SONS BUY 9000 PELTS

And More Will Likely Be Brought in Next Week

Wm. Lech and Son have purchased over 9,000 rat pelts from the Indians of Rice Lake and Chemong within the past week or two, getting 1,800 of them to-day. The price has been 60 and 61 cents. Of the Rice Lake trappers, Alfie Cr[illegible] had the largest catch with over 700 to his credit, and he would have had 1,200 but for the death of his wife, who was buried last Tuesday. He had 240 traps out, but with the illness of his wife, could not give the same time and attention as formerly to this work. Mr. Cyril Lech stated that the Rice Lake rats probably provide the finest pelts in Canada, and are now bringing as high a price as is quoted anywhere for green hides. The Indians set their traps in the marshes at the mouth of the Indian and Otonabee Rivers. The channel from the Anglers' Cottage around to Jubilee has provided at least 1,000 pelts this spring, and is one of the most productive short stretches of water around the lake. Further up the river there are numerous other notable trapping grounds. All told, this spring has been a profitable one to the trappers.

Robert Dale's Fine Easter Meats

There was no larger or more attractive display of choice meats selected for the Easter market than that shown by Mr. Robert Dale in his busy meat market at 245 Rubidge street. There must have been fully twenty-five extra fine looking quarters of prime beef on the hooks, besides four specially fed calves and several extra choice pigs, besides a good showing of fancy meats, Swifts bacon, sausage, etc. Among the finest of the beef were several fattened heavy two-year old steers and heifers from the herd of Mr. F. Staples, of North Monaghan, which were a credit to his feeding. Mr. F. McFee of Emily, also contributed a number of excellent young heifers which are deserving of special mention. An extra large calf weighing 380 pounds of dressed veal, as well as three others of lesser weight, are splendid samples of good feeding, etc. See them—they are worth inspection.

Voice of The People

Editor Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Don't you think it is time that some supervision should be exercised over tag selling on the streets of Peterborough. In Toronto the Police Commission regulate this matter and permission must be given before anybody or bodies can use the streets as a collecting agency. Here, however, there is no supervision. The Society for the supplying of mouth organs to the Fiji Islands" or "The Young Men's Knitting Circle," or any other organization that chooses, can go out on the street and gather in money. I don't mean to say that there is anything dishonest in any of this business, but the fact remains that the public is not protected in any way. Only a week ago about $700 was collected on the street for a patriotic society. No doubt this big sum of money will be wisely spent, but the public who subscribed have no check upon any of it. They have no guarantee that it might not be used in a duplication of what some other body is doing, for there are scores of organizations of this kind in the city. To-day the people are being asked to buy roses to support a church. A very estimable object, but as the collection is being taken in Red Cross boxes many people contributed in the belief that their donation was for patriotic work. And so it goes on and will go until the proper authorities exercise a supervision over the matter. The Police Commission should know the objects of the collection and the manner in which the funds are to be used. Then, if they are satisfied, let them give a permit. As it is now the public is considered legitimate prey for anybody who wants to start a tag-day.

Yours, etc.,
"SANITAS".

GERMANY BACKS DOWN ON THE SUBMARINE ISSUE

Gen. Smutz Takes Several Towns in German East Africa

Will Return The Papers At Bernstoff's Demand

United States Officials Will, However, Retain Photographic Copies.

WASHINGTON, April 24. — State and justice departments announced to-day the Government's willingness to return to the German embassy all the papers seized in New York with the arrest of Von Igel which Count Von Bernstorff will identify as official. Should the ambassador assert all the documents are openal, it is understood they will be returned to him. It is said, however, to be the intention of the Government officials to keep photographic copies of all documents. Whether Secretary Lansing will send a note of apology to Bernstorff for the seizure of the papers has not yet been decided.

NERVOUS BREAKDOWN

Stamford, Conn., Nurse Tells How She Found Health.

Stamford, Conn.—"I am a nurse and suffered from a nervous breakdown. I had no appetite and could not sleep at night, and nothing seemed to help me. By chance I heard of Vinol, and after taking the first bottle I noticed an improvement, and four bottles made me well and strong, it gave me a hearty appetite, so I can sleep soundly night or day. I consider Vinol a wonderful tonic." Edith R. Forbes, Stamford, Conn.

The reason Vinol is so successful in overcoming such conditions is because it is a constitutional remedy and goes to the seat of the trouble. It is the greatest strength creator we know— due to the extractive medicinal elements of fresh cod livers without oil, combined with peptonate of iron and beef peptone, all dissolved in a pure medicinal wine.

We have seen so many wonderful recoveries like this right here in Peterborough caused by Vinol, that we feel perfectly safe in offering to return money in every such case where Vinol fails to benefit.

British Line Completely Re-established on The Ypres-Langemarck Road

Germans Launched Two Violent Attacks Against French Positions at Bethincourt Stream But Were Repulsed With Heavy Enemy Losses.

LONDON, April 24.—The British line is now completely re-established on the Ypres-Langemarck road.

PARIS, April 24.—After a violent bombardment the Germans launched two violent attacks against our positions at Bethincourt stream which were repulsed with very heavy enemy losses. Our airmen dropped twenty shells on enemy bivouacks, northeast of Verdun.

PETROGRAD (Official), April 24.—Russian troops continue to progress still further along the coast west of Trebizond.

ROME (Official), April 24.—Our guns destroyed enemy defences at Seagora, causing the enemy to evacuate, who were caught by our fire while retiring.

LONDON, April 24.—A Norwegian bark was torpedoed by a German submarine yesterday. The crew was saved.

BERLIN, April 24.—Ambassador Gerard had an hour's conference with the German Chancellor Saturday night. It is thought the reply to the American note will not be ready until Wednesday at least.

ROME, April 24.—Field Marshal MacKensen and Enver Pasha, the Turkish Minister, have left Constantinople to dierct operations on the Armenian front against the Russians. An Austro-German corps has been sent to reinforce the Turks.

LONDON, April 24.—It is thought very likely the Fourth Canadian Division will be held in reserve to supply reinforcements to Canadian divisions in Flanders.

BERLIN, April 24.—A Geneva despatch says the Allies have decided on an intensified blockade of Germany and will give no notice before putting it into effect.

Barbarous Treatment of British In South West Africa

Children Also Confined in Common Jails Full of Disease.

LONDON, April 24.—A Reuter despatch from Cape Town, dealing with the report of a commission of inquiry into the treatment of prisoners of war, by the Germans in Southwest Africa, follows:

"A sensation has been caused by the publication of the official report of the commission of inquiry into the treatment of prisoners of war by the Germans in the Southwest African campaign, revealing another story of the shocking treatment of British prisoners and showing a complete lack of organization or central control.

Conditions Were Filthy

"Food rations were coarse and became so insufficient that men were reduced to waiting in line to drink the blood of slaughtered ozen and to boiling the soft parts of hides to extract nourishment. They were scantily clad and harshly treated, some being sent on long railway journeys clad in tunic, a short loin cloth and sandals and a helmet, a spectacle, says the report, 'for women natives who saw them on the road.' The German Governor, Seitz, ordered them placed in irons during their transit. One officer, Capt. Geary, was held in solitary confinement for six months in a small cell of filthy sanitary conditions and infested with vermin and threatened with confinemet in a dark cell if he dared to look out of the window.

Civilians Badly Treated.

"When officers complained to Governor Seitz he told them they ought to be thankful for what they got. The ill-treatment was not confined to war prisoners. British civilians who were political prisoners, with women and children, were confined in common jails, sleeping ten in a single cell with locked doors, resulting in sickness and dysentery owing to the disgusting sanitary conditions.

"The report was discussed in the House, assembly members demanding that the guilty German officers be brought to justice. Gen. Louis Botha in reply deprecated hate or revenge. He said that he had already protested to the German authorities, and was in communication with the home government, and adding that happily the prisoners had been released and were no longer suffering."

Delicious!

That is the likely comment on pie made with

CRISCO

For Frying—For Shortening—For Cake-Making

Made at Hamilton, Canada

Made at Hamilton, Canada

First of all, pie properly made with Crisco looks tempting. The crust has a rich, flaky appearance that puts a new edge on the appetite no matter what dainties have gone before.

Then, it is so tender that it breaks at a touch of the fork. Even the under crust which becomes tough so easily, cuts as readily as the upper crust.

PLAIN PASTRY

1½ cupfuls flour — 1 teaspoonful salt
½ cupful Crisco — cold water
(Use half measurements)

Sift flour and salt twice and cut Crisco into flour with knife until finely divided. Finger tips may be used to finish blending materials. Add gradually sufficient water to make stiff paste. Water should be added sparingly and mixed with knife through dry ingredients. Form lightly and quickly with hand into dough; roll out on slightly floured board, about one-quarter inch thick. Use light motion in handling rolling-pin, and roll from center outward. Sufficient for one pie.

A Crisp, Delicious "Snack" for luncheon or after-the-theatre, or any old time when the appetite craves "something different" is TRISCUIT, the Shredded Whole Wheat toast. Heat it in the oven to restore its crispness, then serve with butter, soft cheese or marmalades. As a toast for chafing dish cookery it is a rare delight. It is full of real nutriment.

Made in Canada.

Want Further Information on Certain Points

Germany's Answer to Latest American Note Will be Delayed—Britain Offers Spain a Possession for Certain Concessions

BERLIN, April 24.—Germany's answer to the latest American note will be delayed by requests for further information on certain points.

BERLIN, April 24.—Britain has offered Spain the possession of Tangier if she will seize German ships in her ports and consent to the closing of Gibraltar Straits to the neutrals.

ROME, April 24.—The War Office to-day recalled to the colours classes of 1896 to 1894, which will bring men of 57 years to the colours.

PARIS, April 24.— French parliament adjourned for the Easter holidays until May 18.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—General Funston has recommended the redisposition of American troops in Mexico.

BERLIN, April 24.—Yesterday's official statement admits the evacuation of ground on the western front on account of floods.

PARIS, April 24.—Germans continue a heavy artillery bombardment of French positions on the Verdun front but have made no infantry attacks.

Russian Pole Charged With Cruelty to Babe

Alleged He Broke Infant's Skull Because it Cried.

CORNWALL, April 24.—Mike Evanik, a Russian Pole who went to Massena recently to work in the aluminum works, has been lodged in jail to await the action of the grand jury on a charge of extreme cruelty to his 4-months-old son.

The story told by the other occupants of the house, also Russians, was that Evanik became angered at the child disturbing his slumbers by crying, and after shaking the infant violently threw it on the bed, its head striking the wooden side rail of the bed, which was a rough affair made in bunk style. The baby died soon afterwards. Its skull was broken.

First Man To Die In War

Corp. Peugeot, Mortally Wounded, Killed Officer Who Shot Him.

At 4 p.m. on Saturday, Aug. 1, 1914 mobilization of the French army was decreed, but to avoid giving Germany possible pretext for declaring war, all French troops along the frontier were ordered to retire to a distance of ten kilometeres back from it.

Next day, Sunday, Aug. 2, Corporal Peugeot, with four men, was at the little village of Joncherez, when, about 10 a.m. he heard a girl's voice cry out, "The Prussians! Here are the Prussians!" Starting up, he saw four German cavalrymen, with an officer at their head, riding through a lane betwen two wheat fields.

War had not yet been declared on either side, and the corporal stepped forward to halt the trespassers. Instantly the German officer — who proved later to be a Lieut. Mayer, of the Fifth Horse Chasseurs, in garrison, at Mulhouse—drew his revolver and fired three shots in quick succession, one passing through Peugeot's body. Mortally wounded though he was, the corporal was yet able to raise his rifle and fire one shot, and the German officer, also mortally wounded, fell from his horse. A second later the Corporal plunged forward, dead.

PREFERS WIFE TO $3,000.

So Gypsy Drops Suit Against His Father-in-Law.

Better than love his wife, for whom he had paid $2,000, Pedro Demetrio, a gypsy, dropped a suit against his father-in-law and mother-in-law in the South Clark Street Court, Chicago, through which he sought to recover $3,000 he accused them of taking from his trunk.

"His wife has threatened to leave him if he persists in suing her parents," the attorney for Demetrio explained to Judge La Buy. "He would rather take a chance on not recovering the $3,000."

It was a year ago that Demetrio paid Alec Ronche and Mrs. Boko Ronche $2,000 for Tina, their daughter.

GIRLS MARRY AT ELEVEN

A Few Odd Customs of the African Gold Coast.

The natives of Western Africa, and especially orditar d doiral prdtaly especially those on the coast, retain many quaint customs. When a girl has reached her eleventh or twelfth year she is considered quite old enough to enter into the bonds of matrimony.

She is taken to the bank of the nearest river, and an offering to the particular deities that she and her tribe worship is made with all due solemnity beside the stream. The dusky maid is then publicly washed in the river; a bracelet of black and white beads and gold is placed around her wrist.

She is then dressed in the best of the family wardrobe, and is escorted in a procession through the town, to show all beholders if her beauty that she has reached the marrying age. Heh hair is fantastically plaited, the upper parts of her body are quite bare, and she is perfumed with scents.

All this done, if she is lucky a number of eligible young bachelors come forward and make offers for her hand and heart, and the match is arranged on a strict cash basis.

The soil is not dead, inert matter it is teeming with life in the form of thousands of minute plants and animals, which bear an important relation to fertility and crop production.

Lindsay Autoist Struck a South Ops Crater

LINDSAY, April 24.— That horrid sink hole on the 5th concession line in South Ops, near Mr. P. J. Clancy's farm, is becoming noted as a place where automobiles become engulfed and unwary chauffeurs are often compelled to remain over night on the roadside to await the coming daylight and assistance from the settlers.

The last man to drop into one of those craters that lie there waiting like an alligator for its victims was no less a personage than Mr. John McLean, of Lindsay, who was bowling along on Thursday last at a ten-mile-an-hour clip when he went plump into the yawning mud hole, tank, tire and timer. "Jack" jumped from the machine like a lamp lighter and made for a big bank on either side of the road, where he gazed from a ponderous ant hill on his car, and ruminated on the futility of automobiles to cope with neglected highways. The good roads scheme was uppermost in his mind, and he became an apostle of Reeve Kylie's doctrine to pave Kent street to the hospital in a jiffy.

Mr. P. J. Clancy and son saw "Jack's" predicament, and came with two teams of horses to pull out the disabled car. They were also assisted by Mr. Joe Fisher, who took a hand rail from the bridge; this he used as a lever to raise the hind wheels from the sticky and murky mud hole. Once on hard earth the chauffeur sailed away to Lindsay, meeting with no other mishaps on the road to town.

COMB SAGE TEA INTO GRAY HAIR

Darkens Beautifully and Restores Its Natural Color and Lustre at Once.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use preparation improved by the addition of other ingredients, costing about 50 cents a large bottle, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

AN OUT OF DATE LOVE LETTER.

[Copyright, 1916, by American Press Association.]

"Tom," said my sister, with an impressiveness that denoted she had something very important to say to me.

"What is it, Molly?"

"Before you go away this time I've something to say to you."

"Proceed."

"You have ceased to be a lover to your wife. I don't mean you have ceased to love her, but you've become so undemonstrative. When you are away and write her she tosses me your letters to read, half the time before she has read them herself, and they might as well come from a business partner. Not a word of love from beginning to end. If I had a husband who wrote me that way it would break my heart."

"Haven't I a lover?" she bristled.

"That's different. Nevertheless I'm always grateful for any points that will enable me to draw Edith closer to me. To me my wife and children are more than all the world. You know how dear John is to you. Multiply that by a hundred and you'll get some idea of my affection for my family."

"That's simply and absolutely impossible."

I kissed her, went into the kitchen, where Edith was baking bread, and kissed her, too—not the usual perfunctory marital kiss; I gave her one at which she looked a trifle surprised—hugged all the children and went for the train.

Since I came and went frequently I was accustomed when I arrived late at night to let myself into the back of the house and go to bed without waking the rest of the family. I was so busy during my absence that I hadn't written a word. On my return, which was at night, I went to my room as usual, mindful of my neglect and Molly's advice. In a desk in my room were some of my old love letters to Edith when we were engaged. I read one of them and it occurred to me to copy it, take it out to the post, and it would be delivered the next morning before breakfast. This I did and went back to bed and to sleep, conscious of having performed my full duty as a loving husband.

The next morning I was awakened by a whistle and ring at the front door bell. I went to the landing and looked over. The postman brought my letter. Molly received it and took it into the dining room, where I could hear the children's voices and a sister of dishes at the breakfast table. I heard my wife say, "Read it to us, Moll," and the reply: "I'll do no such thing. Read it yourself." My wife's voice was next heard reading:

"Dearest, sweetest, loveliest Edith"—

A brief pause, at the end of which I heard a burst of laughter from the selfsame Edith.

"I'm ashamed of you," said Molly. "Every husband should write his wife that way."

Edith read on: "Though I have been absent from you but a few days, every moment has hung heavy on my hands. I have counted the hours till I may fold my darling again in my arms."

"Goodness gracious!" exclaimed "my darling." "Has he lost his senses?" A brief pause. "Oh, heavens! He may be sick and delirious!"

Edith read on: "When morning comes I say, 'Another long day,' and at evening, 'Another long night.'

"For heaven's sake, something dreadful has surely happened! Where can he be—in a hospital or"—

"Nonsense!" from Molly. "He is as well as you or I. What is there in the letter to make you think he's ill? John writes me that way?"

Edith read on: "Of course there are your letters. I read them over again and again till I can repeat them by heart"—I haven't written him a line—"then I sit down and, with your sweet words before me, reply to everything you have written me."

There was a pause—I may say a dreadful pause.

"Well, I declare! I never before knew that my husband was an idiot. Oh, Molly" (in a wail) "can it be that he has written this twaddle to some other woman and sent it to me by mistake. I'll leave him! I'll be out of this house when he comes back."

This was followed by hysterical sobs. Running downstairs in my nightshirt, I advanced to take my agonized wife in my arms. She repulsed me.

"Don't ever let me see your face again, you monster!"

"Why, darling, it's a love letter—a copy of one I wrote you when we were engaged."

"Wrote me?"

"Yes, you."

"Do you mean that you wrote that inanity to me?"

"I did."

"And I didn't send it right straight back to you?"

"You sent its twin."

"Oh, my gracious goodness!"

Here Molly interposed. "I suggested,

PAINS IN SIDE AND BACK.

How Mrs. Kelly Suffered and How She was Cured.

Burlington, Wis.—"I was very irregular, and had pains in my side and back, but after taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Tablets and using two bottles of the Sanative Wash I am fully convinced that I am entirely cured of these troubles, and feel better all over. I know your remedies have done me worlds of good and I hope every suffering woman will give them a trial."—Mrs. ANNA KELLY, 710 Chestnut Street, Burlington, Wis.

The many convincing testimonials constantly published in the newspapers ought to be proof enough to women who suffer from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the medicine they need.

This good old root and herb remedy has proved unequalled for these dreadful ills; it contains what is needed to restore woman's health and strength.

If there is any peculiarity in your case requiring special advice, write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass., for free advice.

Suffered Constantly FROM HEADACHE.

To suffer from headache makes life miserable, and it takes a person who has been or is subject to headache to describe the suffering and agony that goes along with it. The dull throbbing, the intense pain, sometimes in one part of the head, sometimes in another, is caused by some disturbed condition of the system. The stomach may go wrong, the bowels become constipated, the blood may not circulate properly, but whatever the cause, the presence of headache clearly shows that there is something wrong somewhere, and unless the cause of the headache is removed, some serious trouble is very liable to assert itself.

The fact that Burdock Blood Bitters reaches the seat of the trouble, and banishes the headache is due to its success in first relieving, and then permanently curing the cause of the trouble.

Mrs. Wallace J. Boyd, Millbrook, N.B., writes: "Several years ago I was a constant sufferer from headache. I was all run down, and nothing seemed to do me any good. I read of Burdock Blood Bitters, and decided to give it a trial, and the result was marvellous. The headache stopped at once, and I feel better in every way since. I recommend it to all sufferers."

B.B.B. is the oldest and best known blood medicine on the market to-day, having been manufactured for the past forty years by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Everyone Should Drink Hot Water in the Morning

To feel your best day in and day out, to feel clean inside; no sour bile to coat your tongue and sicken your breath or dull your head; no constipation, bilious attacks, sick headache, colds, rheumatism or gassy, acid stomach, you must bathe on the inside like you bathe outside. This is vastly more important, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do, says a well-known physician.

To keep these poisons and toxins well flushed from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, drink before breakfast each day, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from your pharmacist. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant. Drink phosphated hot water every morning to rid your system of these vile poisons and toxins; also to prevent their formation.

To feel like young folks feel; like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became saturated with an accumulation of body poisons, begin this treatment and above all, keep it up! As soap and hot water set on the skin, cleansing, sweetening, and purifying, so limestone phosphate and hot water before breakfast act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

ST. THOMAS TULIP FESTIVAL MAY 11 TO 14

Western Ontario City Has a Horticultural Society of 1,500 Members.

A festival of tulips. Twenty-five thousand tulips growing along the streets in public boulevard beds. Two hundred thousand more tulips in the park and private grounds. A tulip show including two hundred varieties of every shade and colour. This is what the St. Thomas Horticultural Society is doing. The festival is scheduled for May 11th to 14th inclusive, and the 14th will be known as 'Tulip Sunday.' The programme is under the auspices of the Ontario Horticultural Association, which arranged to have all railways run special rates for the week. Any Horticultural Society in the province may enter tulips in the open competition for the St. Thomas Tulip Cup and the Mitchell Medal.

St. Thomas will bloom out in all the glory of Springtime and every visitor will be a welcome guest. This speaks well for a republic spirit of the citizens and indicates a love for the beautiful. Over 1500 of the St. Thomas people are members of their horticultural society.

GERMANY BANS ALL PLEASURE TRIPS

Will Refuse Passports for Travel Abroad for Any Except Urgent Reasons.

BERLIN, April 21. — No passports will be issued in the future to persons desiring to go to foreign countries purely for pleasure. The ruling applies also to Austro-Hungary, to which passports will be granted only on a physician's certificate that treatment in a specified Austrian or Hungarian resort is urgently necessary.

The restrictions imposed last year on journeys to bathing resorts along the Baltic and the North Sea, making passes necessary, are still in operation and trips to certain islands are forbidden.

Truth and Tact in Character

By Lyman P. Powell, President of Robert College

No two would ever agree, however, many dictionaries they consult, as to the necessary content of character. Opinions differ because people differ. Not even is there any agreement as yet throughout the world concerning this matter, except that character is the aggregate of man's sense of what we call moral obligations.

It is regarded in Australia as a weakening of adolescent character for a native to eat a female opossum, no matter how hungry he may be. A beefsteak suggests no moral problem to us, but the Hindu who ventures to eat a steak would suffer ostracism.

The most we can say of right character is that those who do what is regarded as the proper thing wherever they may be. The best men have characters most sensitive. The worst, we all agree, are hard.

[illegible] to live together in society, is to maintain the proper love of truth and to practice tact in its expression.

No matter what character may signify, it must hunger for the truth. It must have the straightforwardness and directness which indicate the presence of the truth.

It must have a highly visualized imagination to seek for truth still undiscovered. It must hold what it thinks to be the truth no matter how the world around may differ.

TACT AND ALLIED TRUTH

Many people of the noblest character confuse the truth tendency with the crassness which goes muddling through, wounding feelings, and never more certain to find truth than those we call more tactful.

In fact, truth never does exclude tact, which after all, enables us to be artistic in our search for truth. Tact and truth can keep house together without insincerity. The white lies of society are just as black where tact does not abide as where it does. Professor Edward S. Morse came home from his long stay in Japan some years ago telling something which I have often since recalled—that one can go through the length and breath of Japan, through any crowd, in any circumstances, by exercising that courtesy which is inexpressibly charming when we see it transplanted by some Japanese to our own land.

One can love truth and yet not obtrude it where it is unwelcome. There is a time to speak and a time to be silent. One can harbor truth without launching it out on every storm sea. There never was an American who more perfectly personified truth in his character than Lincoln. Nor has there ever been an American who exercised more tact in the presentation of the truth to those about him.

Did the Cabinet differ because not all understood a special measure under their consideration? Lincoln took infinite pains to make things clear. Was his party discordant because he went too fast for some, too slow for others? With divine delicacy of touch Lincoln could allay the worst discord or extract the sting most painful.

LINCOLN KEPT BALANCE

He valued truth so highly that he was willing to spend and be spent in its effective presentation. He never put on a superior air. He never lost his native sweetness of temper. He was willing to hold the stirrups for McClellan if McClellan would only win victories, and when Stanton was reported to have called him a fool, with an adjective before it, Lincoln kept truth and tact in such perfect balance that he could answer without irritation: "Did Stanton say that? Then he must be right. I have noticed that he almost always is."

On Tap Day a few years ago one of the most remarkable men at Yale stood in front of the old oak tree waiting in vain for the call to "Skull and Bones" or another of the three senior societies. He had won his place in Yale. He was that year football captain. He had strong confidence in himself; even to the extent of telling his good friend last Fall, "I never met the man I could not either thrash or out-talk." He stood for the truth. His luck was perhaps tact—the human touch.

If you care more for the truth than for yourself you will follow ways that lead to the acceptance of the truth. There is a kind of selfishness in insisting on acceptance of the truth because you say it is the truth. There is always danger, even among the best men that conceit may get confused with truth. People cannot long be fooled. They will not "tap" the man who tears tact away from its connection with the truth. Truth and tact belong together in the strongest and the finest character.

NO HARM IN SHORT SKIRTS.

Everybody Knows a Woman Has Legs, a Suffragist Says.

Short skirts are not immoral, because everyone knows anyway that a woman has legs.

This was the view expressed by Miss Ruth Astor Noyes, prominent suffragist, while in Chicago with the Congressional Union's party touring the suffrage states.

"What if short skirts do show a woman's legs?" queried Miss Noyes. "Everyone knows we have legs. We want freedom in our walk and movement, just as we want freedom in other things in life."

"ANURIC!"

THE NEWEST DISCOVERY IN CHEMISTRY

This is a recent discovery of Doctor Pierce, who is head of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute at Buffalo, N. Y. Experiments at Doctor Pierce's Hospital for several years proved that there is no other eliminator of uric acid then can be compared to it. For those easily recognized symptoms of inflammation—ah backache, scalding urine and frequent urination, as well as sediment in the urine, or if uric acid in the blood has caused rheumatism, it is simply wonderful how surely "Anuric" acts. The best of results are always obtained in cases of acute rheumatism in the joints, in gravel and gout, and incidentally the pains and stiffness which so frequently and persistently accompany the disease rapidly disappear.

Go to your nearest drug store and simply ask for a 50-cent package of "Anuric," manufactured by Dr. Pierce, or send 50 cents to Dr. Pierce for a large trial package. If you suspect kidney or bladder trouble send him a sample of your water and describe symptoms. Doctor Pierce's chemist will examine it, then Dr. Pierce will report to you, without fee or charge.

Note:—French scientists affirm that "Anuric" is thirty-seven times more active than lithia in eliminating uric acid, and is a harmless but reliable chemical compound that may be safely given to children, but should be used only by grown-ups who naturally wish to restore their kidneys to perfect health, by occasionally using one box—or more in extreme cases—as "Anuric" (thanks to Doctor Pierce's achievement) is by far the most perfect kidney and bladder corrector obtainable.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets are the original Little Liver Pills. One little Pellet for a laxative—three for a cathartic.

THE BIBLE HOPE COMPREHENSIVE

Hope the Source of Consolation to All.

The Church's Hope the Grandest and Highest—The World's Hope Also Glorious—Six Thousand Years of Experience With Sin and Death—Why Permitted—Blessings and Favors Prove a Curse to the Unsanctified and Selfish—Present World-wide Trouble the Forerunner of a Better Day—Deliverance of Both Church and World at Hand.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

Wilmington, Del., April 23.—Pastor Russell addressed the public here today in his usual impressive manner. His text was from Hebrews 6: 18, 19: "That by two immutable things [His word and His oath], in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us; which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil." He said in part:

The Apostle's words here intimate that there is but one hope set before the Church—the hope presented in the Gospel of Christ. It is very important, then, that as Christians we understand what that hope is. Once we had such confused ideas respecting our Heavenly Father and His glorious Plan that we could not understand what constituted our hope. Many supposed that it was a hope set before a few and a threat set before everybody else—the threat of endless torment. How we misunderstood "the God of All Grace and the Father of Mercies!" Now we can see that there is a glorious hope for all who will come to love righteousness and hate iniquity, although the world's hope is not the Christian's hope.

The hope set before the Church is the hope of reigning with Christ, as His joint-heirs, His Bride. (Romans 8:17; 1 John 3:2; 2 Peter 1:4.) It is the hope of attaining the Divine nature. This hope has been held out in advance of the blessings which will be proffered to the world later. The Church has no part in the hope of the world. But we have the admonition of our Lord and of His Apostles that we "follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." We are enjoined to put off the works of darkness—anger, malice, hatred, strife, and all other works of the flesh and of the Devil—and to put on meekness, gentleness, patience, brotherly-kindness, love—the fruits of the Spirit of Christ, the Holy Spirit.—Hebrews 12:14; Galatians 5:19-23. First Intimation of Church's Hope.

The first intimation that God would raise up a class who would roll away the curse from Adam's race was given to Abraham. God said, "Abraham, I will call you My friend because of your faith." He could not call Abraham His son; for there could be no sons of God amongst the fallen race, because all were condemned to death in Adam. Not until the death sentence should be lifted from Adam's posterity could any of them become sons of God. Therefore there were no human sons of God after Adam. But since the time when our Lord died a Sacrifice for human sin, a special class of humanity have been given the great privilege of becoming sons of God, as St. John tells us.—John 1:12.

But God said to Abraham His friend, "I have a Plan by which to bless the world." The Almighty was the very One who had placed the condemnation of death upon the world. The Great Judge had determined that man was not worthy of everlasting life. Two thousand years after He had pronounced that curse, the Eternal One declared that it should be rolled away; for when He promised that a blessing should come to mankind, He implied that the death penalty should be removed.

It required great faith on Abraham's part to believe God in this matter. But he felt that in some manner God would roll away the curse. Put yourself into Abraham's place and you will realize how remarkable this was. He knew that the death penalty was upon the race. After God had said that mankind should die, it was not easy to see how He could reverse His own sentence and declare that man should live. Would He say one thing at one time, and then two thousand years later say another? For a time there must have been great perplexity in Abraham's mind. But he appreciated God's Promise.—Genesis 12:3; Romans 4:3.

And now, four thousand years after Abraham's time, we are proclaiming that same great Promise; for it has never yet been fulfilled. God promised to bless the whole world through Abraham's Seed. That Seed, the Apostle Paul assures us, is Christ and His Church. (Galatians 3:8, 16, 29.) The hope of being this Seed is the great hope to which St. Paul referred in our text and its context.

Abraham's Two Seed.

This hope is based upon a comprehensive Promise: First, that the world was to be blessed; second, that this blessing was to come through Abraham's Seed. God showed that there would be two different seeds of Abraham; for He said, "Thy seed shall be as the stars of heaven, and as the sand of the seashore"—a Heavenly and an earthly seed, though the Heavenly was to be the Seed of blessing.—Genesis 22: 15-18.

Four hundred and thirty years later, God said to the children of Israel, in substance, "You know that I promised your father Abraham that through his Seed I would bless the world. As his natural seed, are you ready to have that Promise fulfilled in you? If I bring you up out of Egypt, will you appreciate My will and do it?" And they replied, "We will." Then the Lord said, "I will give you My Law. If you cannot keep My Law, you cannot be proper teachers and blessers of the world. I have promised to bless all mankind, and I will do it. As the children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, are you ready to be heirs of that Abrahamic Promise?"

You remember that Moses read the Lord's message of the Law to the people; and that they heard the blessing that should come upon them if they would keep the Law, and the condemnation that should come upon them if they failed to do so. Then the people said, "All these things will we do."—Exodus 19: 1-8.

God designed that the whole world should come to a knowledge of the fact that no fallen human being could possibly keep the letter of the Divine Law; for it is the measure of a perfect man's ability. But He dealt with the Israelites just as though they could do it. They had typical sacrifices. For sixteen hundred years they tried to keep that Law; yet year after year they failed to do so; and hence they failed to be the Seed of Abraham which was to bless the world. As St. Paul showed us, "By the deeds of the Law shall no flesh be justified in God's sight." (Romans 3:20.) God was merely teaching them, and through them all of His intelligent creatures, that it is impossible for sinners to justify themselves in this night. Therefore it was impossible for any of them to bless the world.

Then, in due time, God sent forth His First-Begotten Son, the Logos, His great Mouthpiece. To Him the Father had made the proposition that if He would become a man, live a while on earth amongst sinners, and accomplish a great work for mankind, He would afterwards be received back to greater glory than He had before He undertook this mission.

The Son knew that if the Father had anything to make known in His Plan, it must be for good. So we read that "the Logos was made flesh," and "for the joy set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame." (John 1:14; Hebrews 12: 2; Philippians 2: 8-11.) Jesus was born a descendant of Abraham, through the Virgin Mary. He kept the Jewish Law inviolate, and thus proved Himself worthy to be that Seed who would bless the world. He died, to redeem the race—"the Just for the unjust." He rose again, qualified for the great work of the world's deliverance. To Him is given all power in Heaven and in earth.—Matthew 28:18.

The Bible tells us that the salvation of the world is waiting until our Lord shall take unto Himself His great power and reign. God has been holding this salvation in reservation for over 1,800 years, during the selection of the Church, the Bride of Christ—the work of the Gospel Age. Before the Church He has set this great hope of being associated with our Lord Jesus, of constituting with Him this Spiritual Seed of Abraham, which is to bless all the families of the earth. For this reason our Lord is first delivering the Church class. This hope of being of the Seed of Abraham is "the hope set before us in the Gospel," of which our text speaks. "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's Seed, and heirs according to the Promise."

God has still in reservation the work of blessing the world, this great work of a thousand years. But it is now almost due to begin. The promised Spiritual Seed is about completed. Under them the earthly seed—the faithful Worthies of previous ages, who will be raised from the dead, and Natural Israel, who will be restored to Divine favor—will ere long be ready to co-operate; and then the world's uplift will begin.

Our Anchor Sure and Steadfast.

In the dream which God gave to Nebuchadnezzar, there was a stone taken out of the mountain without hands, and it became a great mountain that filled the whole earth. (Daniel 2:31-45.) This stone represented Christ's Kingdom. The power which has taken this spiritual Stone out of the mountain—the world—is simply the hope inspired by God's Promise to Abraham. Some of us have heard the Call to follow Christ, and have responded. (Matthew 5:6; 11:28; 16:24.) The Word of God has entered into our hearts. Our minds, our aims, our ambitions—everything—are being transformed, are being set on Heavenly things.—Romans 12:1,2; Colossians 3:1-3.

How precious is this hope! It is indeed "an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast." By this expression St. Paul suggests the picture of a ship at anchor during a storm. So in the storms of life the child of God has a firm anchorage. This anchor of hope takes hold even upon the things within the veil.

The basis of our hope is the Word of God. If we let go of our hope, we are letting go of everything. The "hour of temptation" is now upon the whole world; and a still greater stress is coming. (Revelation 3:10.) All the more, therefore, shall we need our anchor of hope, of faith. Through the Prophet the Lord points out that He is about to "do His work, His strange work, and to bring to pass His act, His strange act." (Isaiah 28: 20-22.) The world will not be able to understand it. As they see the trouble extending everywhere—to all governments and institutions—and realize that it will terminate in anarchy, they will cry, "Where is God? What is coming to this Great Babylon that we thought was about to bless the world? What is about to happen to us?"

The Unsanctified Heart Selfish.

We are now living in the day when the light is shining more brightly than ever before, and when the darkness is gradually disappearing. We whose eyes of understanding have been opened see the hope for mankind, see that blessings are soon to be showered upon the world during the Messianic Kingdom.

More and more it is impressed upon my mind that the numbers of humanity who love righteousness and who prefer it to unrighteousness are very considerable. The major part of the world would rather do right, than wrong, provided that it did not cost sacrifice to do right. If the world were in a healthy, normal condition, it would not cost sacrifice to do right. It should be easier to do right than wrong, and it would be if things were as they were originally. When God created our first parents, it was easier for them to obey than to disobey; and when the Divine Kingdom shall introduce the New Order, it will become easier to do right than to do wrong.

As the days go by, we see still more clearly the glorious hope of the groaning creation, groaning now in weakness, sin, and bondage to death. After the Church is delivered, the creation is also to be delivered, set free from the bondage of sin and death into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. (Romans 8:19-21.) Mankind will have the same opportunity for life that Adam had at first. But they will have the advantage of Adam in that they have had six thousand years' experience under the degradation of the fall, during which the world has been learning the exceeding sinfulness of sin and their need of Divine assistance.

The Present Outlook.

Yet with all the experience of six thousand years behind us, the world to-day is plunged into the most terrible war ever known. Each nation imagines that God is with it. The spirit of anger, bitterness, and hate is spreading everywhere. Yet these are blessings, comforts, and conveniences to-day such as the world never even dreamed of before. These blessings are coming because we are living in the dawn of the New Dispensation. But the fact is apparent that people are being injured by the wealth and other favors of our day. We have an increase of education far above any previous time. And what is the result? It is being used to defraud and overreached fellowmen. It is being utilized to destroy man's lives. In another century, if present conditions were permitted to continue, it would be worse.

Light and knowledge entering the heart that is unsanctified, unconsecrated to God, merely increase the power to do evil. Through sharpened intellectual perceptions, the increase of ability operates along the lines of selfishness. The only ones ready to receive aright God's favors and to profit by them are those who have yielded themselves to God, who have renounced their own wills and have accepted His will. Upon these the blessings of God have a sanctifying effect. Increased knowledge adds to their power for good.

We are glad that we have given our hearts to God, and that our eyes of understanding have been opened to see more and more the lengths, breadths, heights, and depths of God's Justice, Wisdom, Power, and Love. How refreshing this is to our hearts. It is good to be so near to the ushering in of the New Dispensation; for our anchor of hope is grounded firmly in God. Soon He will deliver Zion—"when Morning appeareth."

Trouble Precursor of Coming Glory.

Thank the Lord that He has given His people to know what is to follow this dark night of trouble. What a blessing He has granted in the knowledge that there is a golden lining to the black clouds now gathering thick around humanity! Let us not dwell too much on the coming trouble, however. Rather let us point men to the time beyond. Let us tell them that God has a great blessing in store for all the families of the earth. Let us show them how comprehensive is the Bible hope. It will be a sad day for the world when the plowshare of trouble shall go in deep; and yet the experience will prove to be a blessing. When mankind see everything beginning to collapse, then they will begin to realize that there is no hope except in God, then they will be willing to be taught. Then they will say, "Lo, this is our God! We have waited for Him, and He will save us!"—Isaiah 25: 6-9.

Then unto our Master "every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess," Then "the knowledge of the glory of God shall fill the whole earth as the waters cover the sea." (Isaiah 11:9.) Let us rejoice, then, even though "clouds and darkness are around us." Let us realize that we have set before us a glorious hope, and not some theory of man—not the theory that there is no death; not the theory that if you have a pain you have no pain—none of these nonsensical hopes! Let us accept what the Bible says. Let our hope be in God, and our faith grounded in His Word. Thus abiding in Christ, we shall stand unshaken, "Though the earth [society as now organized] be removed, and though the mountains [kingdoms, strong governments] be carried into the midst of the sea [the enraged and turbulent masses of mankind]." God is in the midst of Zion. She shall not be moved. He will help her "early in the Morning" of the New Dispensation.—Psalm 46.

SIGNS OF KIDNEY TROUBLE.

In the early stages kidney troubles are known by backache and urinary disorders. Later come dropsy, edema, rheumatic pains and perhaps Bright's disease. Don't wait for these. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will help you in a few hours. Their thorough action on the liver, kidneys and bowels will clear away the poison and the ashes and make you well again.

Do you ever feel that you must have some rest for that tired and aching back?

Do you ever feel that those dizziness, sinkings, darting pains must be gotten rid of before you can get into condition, whereby you can attend to your household duties without a pain or an ache?

When the back begins to ache it is a sure sign that there is something radically wrong with the kidneys.

Mrs. L. Melanson, Plympton, N.S., writes: "I am sending you this testimonial, telling you what a wonderful cure Doan's Kidney Pills made for me. For years I had suffered as with my kidneys. I could hardly do my housework. I used several kinds of pills, but none of them seemed to be doing me any good. At last I was advised to try a box of Doan's Kidney Pills. When I had taken the first box I found relief. I have used five boxes, and to-day I feel like a new woman. I cannot recommend them too highly."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Production and Thrift

"GAIN or no gain the cause before the farmers of Canada is as clear as it was last year—they must produce abundantly in order to meet the demands that may be made, and I believe this to be especially true in regard to live stock, the world's supply of which must be particularly affected in this vast struggle."—Hon. MARTIN BURRELL, Minister of Agriculture.

LIVE STOCK—The herds and flocks of Europe have been greatly reduced. When the war is over there will be a great demand for breeding stock. Canadian farmers should keep this in mind.

MEATS—In 1915 Great Britain imported 664,509 tons of beef, mutton and lamb, of which 264,245 tons came from without the Empire. Out of 420,420 tons of beef only 104,967 tons came from within the Empire.

The demands of the Allies for frozen beef, canned beef, bacon and hams will increase rather than diminish. Orders are coming to Canada. The decreasing tonnage space available will give Canada an advantage if we have the supplies.

DAIRYING—Home consumption of milk, butter and cheese has increased of late years. The war demands for cheese have been unlimited. The Canadian cheese exports from Montreal in 1915 were nearly $8,500,000 over 1914. Prices at Montreal—Cheese: January 1915, 15½ to 17 cents; January 1916, 18½ to 18¾ cents. Butter: January 1915, 24 to 29½ cents; January 1916, 32 to 33 cents.

EGGS—Canada produced $24,000,000 worth of eggs in 1915 and helped out Great Britain in the shortage. Shippers as well as producers have a duty and an opportunity in holding a place in that market.

WRITE TO THE DOMINION DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND TO YOUR PROVINCIAL DEPARTMENT FOR BULLETINS ON THESE SUBJECTS

Tens of thousands of Canada's food producers have enlisted and gone to the front. It is only fair to them that their home work shall be kept up as far as possible. The Empire needs all the food that we can produce in 1916.

TALKS TO MOTHERS ON THE BOY PROBLEM.

Miss Mary J. Harrington, a teacher in an Iowa City school, recently gave an address at a Mother's and Teacher's Institute that every mother should read.

Miss Harrington's address was one of special merit in that it was practical and logic and the idea beautifully expressed.

QUESTIONS MOTHERS CAN ANSWER.

"Some of the neighborhood questions which might be controlled by the co-operation of the mothers are

"Why is there a different standard of action and ideals for the boys, than for the girls?

"Can the night street corner boys be kept at home?

"Why was home good enough until he was ten, eleven or twelve years old when he answered the call of the street?

"Why do the girls consider it their place to be at home?

"Will this double standard of action for the girls and boys even conflict?

CHIEFLY BOY PROBLEM.

"I believe the neighborhood problem is chiefly a boy problem. The boy's life is divided into three periods infancy from birth to six years of age, childhood from six to twelve, and the adolescent period from twelve years to manhood. The trying time in the government of a boy is in the adolescence. One-third of all the population of this city is in the adolescent age and so you see we are dealing with one-third of all the people.

"Why should parents relax the reins of guidance for the boy in his teens, when he is in the most critical stage—the 'street gang' stage. This relaxation is not intentional on the part of the parents, it is only that the boy himself feels the call of the street and the gang and the parent fails to go with him. In giving the gang spirit it is legitimate, but the father should in spirit go with the boy and the mother and the home should receive the gang. Recall in memory to pleasures of your young days when you went with a crowd and have sympathy with our child in that same enjoyment.

BOYS' CLUB MEETS AT HOME

"The best type of boys' club is the world men's in the home kitchen or in the living room. The evening lamp is the home's light house and the hour after supper is the Sabbath of the day. The evening hour and the home ought to be made so that the children will love it. The parents should provide books and papers and magazines games for school day evenings. On Friday and Saturday evenings extra social affairs may be held, as occasional party and a meeting of the crowd or the gang in some home under careful supervision. The boys and girls ought to meet together at these evenings and there should be an understanding and a neighborhood standard for going home in time. So every mother could know just when the children would be at home.

"Do you know your boy's friends' mothers, will it pay to know them?"

Do you ever take time to take an extra loaf of raisin bread or an extra pan of ginger bread so your boy can share with his friends, who will by that token know that mother is also their friend?"

MOTHERS, WILL IT PAY.

We were forcibly struck the other day by the truth of a remark made by a man who at the time was under serious difficulty over the crop that had sprung up from the wild oats he had sown when a boy. A little friend of his was pouting over some chastisement, when he gently remarked, "Take all your corrections kindly and be thankful to any one who cares enough for you to tell you if your mistakes or warn you when you first begin to go astray. For, he continued sadly, "the more corrections you receive and profit by when young, the less you will receive from the world when older."

A truer statement was never uttered. What a responsibility, then, upon parents. Will it pay to close our eyes to the fact? All our corrections should be made with an eye to the future as well as the present. There should be a principle involved. Let our children see that it is our duty to punish them sometimes, never a pleasure. In our desire that their young lives be full of joy and gladness, will it be wise to refrain from imparting to them a knowledge of the sterner realities of life? Will it pay to allow them to go untaught? We must teach them as judiciously the difference between the trend upward and the trend downward, that of their own accord they will eschew those pleasures of a doubtful nature.

We cannot guard our boys and girls too closely. Many a fair flower languishes and dies before its time. It will not pay to close our eyes to the signs around us, thinking our boys and girls proof against these influences. Above all things, teach the girls to be natural. Do not allow them to get into those simpering, giggling, foolish ways that so many young misses appear to think smart, and yet do not cause them to feel that you desire to put "old heads on young shoulders". Far from it. Let young people be young people still, but the while not forgetting that there is far more real happiness in being pure and true than can be found along any other line.

DETAILS OF THE PLOT AGAINST CANADA ARE NOW REVEALED

Who First Planned to Have an Invasion of This Country by German Reservists in The United States, But Afterwards This Was Dropped in Favour of Campaign of Frightfulness

LONDON, April 20.—The Government to-night issued a lengthy sworn statement by Horst von der Goltz, the secret agent of the German Government, who is now in the United States in custody, giving full details of his activities in America.

The statement bristles with dates and names of places and of persons associated with him. The Government prefaces it with a memorandum relating to von der Goltz's identity and the manner of his arrest in England.

The memorandum says that when von der Goltz was shown a check signed by Captain von Papen, the former military attache of the German Embassy at Washington, which had been seized at Falmouth, he admitted his endorsement, and asked to be allowed to make a voluntary statement. He was thereupon given writing materials and, spent the night of January 31 in compiling a statement, which he afterwards swore to.

Is Fully Confirmed.

The Government's memorandum remarks: "Von der Goltz's statement finds detailed corroboration in the von Papen checks, which he cannot have known were in the possession of the British authorities." The statement of von der Goltz as given out by the Government is in part as follows:

"On August 3, 1914, I left the Mexican army on leave and arrived at El Paso, where Consul Kuck directed me to report to von Papen. After visiting Washington I arrived in New York in August.

"I visited Vice-Consul Kraske, who suggested that I avoid being seen about the Consulate, and he would notify me when to meet von Papen. A few days later I met von Papen. I was asked my opinion of a scheme suggested by a certain Schuhmacher for raiding Canadian towns on the coast of the Great Lakes with a motor boat armed with machine guns. The proposal later was rejected owing to the Embassy reciving unfavourable information about Schuhmacher.

"I was then requested to assist in a scheme for the invasion of Canada by a force recruited from reservists in the United States, aided by German warships then in the Pacific.

"This scheme, which was proposed by von Papen and Boy-Ed, later was abandoned on the advice of Bernstorff.

Hoped to Terrify Canada.

"Next, von Papen asked me to confer with two Irishmen, who proposed the dynamiting of railway junctions, grain elevators and the locks of the canals connecting the Great Lakes. It was hoped thus to terrify Canada, preventing the Dominion from aiding the Mother Country.

"I received the Irishmen, who brought maps and details of the plan. Before going to Baltimore to consult Consul Leuderitz recarding the scheme I employed one man, Charles Tucker, aliasa Hucsheimer, as an assistant. I then went to Baltimore and consulted Leuderitz, who obtained a passport in the name of Taylor. He also introduced me to the captain of a German ship at that time in the harbour, proposing that I make use of part of his crew and one officer.

"Returning to New York, I selected three men to assist me and acquainted them with part of the details of the scheme. I received a check from von Papen, which was cashed for me by Mr. Stallford, a member of a German club.

"Regarding the material, arms and dynamite needed, von Papen informed me that Captain Hauscher, of Krupps' agency, had agreed to furnish them. I saw Tauscher. He gave be a letter of introduction to the Du Pont Powder Company, recommending B. H. Taylor and Co., and supplied me with an order to the man in charge of dynamite barges lying in New York harbour.

"Tauscher told me he would send pistols by messenger to Hoboken, to be delivered there to one of my agents at a certain restaurant.

How Dynamite Was Obtained.

"In order to get dynamite it was necessary to hire a motor-boat in New York and put the dynamite aboard in suitable cases. After getting the explosive I went by taxicab with two suitcases to a German club and saw von Papen. I then took the dynamite to my rooms, where I also kept a portion of the arms packed in a small portmanteau. The remainder were in keeping of two agents, one being Mr. Inritzen, the discharged purser of a Russian steamer, the other a Mr. Busse, a commercial agent, who formerly lived in England.

"The only other agent I employed was C. Covani, who attended me personally, Tucker not being entrusted with any of these things.

Why Plan Was Abandoned.

"Two or three days later I received from von Papen at his rooms at the club in the presence of Fritzen and Covani a supply of generators and wire, which I took to my rooms in a taxicab. A few days later we left the Grand Central station for Buffalo, Fritzen, Busse and Tucker taking care of the munitions, Covani attending me.

"In Buffalo, I hired rooms at 189 Lelamare Avenue. I had the dynamite brought there and spent some days gathering information about the precautions taken by Canada. Then I myself and my agents went to Niagara Falls, N.Y., September 15.

"While still in Buffalo, I received a telegram from von Papen, signed Steffens, informing me that a lawyer, John Ryan, had money and instructions. I received the money, but no instructions. Being thrown on my own resources, I determined to reconnoitre the terrain where I wanted to act, but on the 25th Ryan summoned me.

"Having received privately information that the first Canadian contingent had left Valcartier camp, I knew I should be recalled, as the object of my enterprise was thus removed. Ryan handed me a telegram of recall.

"As my funds were insufficient, I discharged Busse and Fritzen at Buffalo and left the munitions in the keeping of an aviator, who was manager of Fels' Restaurant at Niagara Falls, and returned to New York.

Sent to Germany.

"Von Papen now directed me to proceed to Germany. He said he would arrange with Count von Bernstorff for my passage. I paid off Covani, directing him to remove from the house at 113 or 115 Fifteenth Street, New York, two suit cases filled with dynamite. I sailed the eighth of October for Italy. Since that time I have had no communication with von Papen."

"Information, the accuracy of which I have no reason to doubt, makes me believe that the United States secret service knew about the matter from beginning to end. I was watched in New York, Baltimore and Buffalo. I told von Papen so. He said the men had orders to watch me, but on no account to interfere.

"I received no remuneration except expenses, which only once was paid by cheque, all other payments being in United States notes. I was frequently present when von Papen received information from and paid money to men who came to see him about matters connected with German, Irish and other associations. Von Papen told me he was short of money until Dr. Dernberg arranged matters."

The statement ends as follows:

"I make these statements on the distinct understanding that the statements are not to be used against me, that I am not to be prosecuted for participation in any action directed against the allies, and that the promise has been made to me that I am not to be extradited to any country where I am liable to punishment for political offences made on behalf of his Majesty's Government."

MAKE 50 ARRESTS ONE DAY.

Zeal in Stopping Automobiles Causes Officer to Lose Job.

Raymond V. Allison, Deputy Sheriff of Ypsilanti township, Mich., has been removed from office by Sheriff Linneshmidt as a result of what is said to be unnecessary zeal in arresting automobiles just east of this city.

The deposed official was especially active on the days of the big football games at Ann Arbor last fall and is said to have made as many as fifty arrests for speeding on the day of the Cornell-Michigan game.

Detroit motorists are said to have been influential in bringing about the action. Petitions by residents of Ypsilanti township asking for Allison's removal were signed. Petitions protesting at the action have since been presented to the Sheriff.

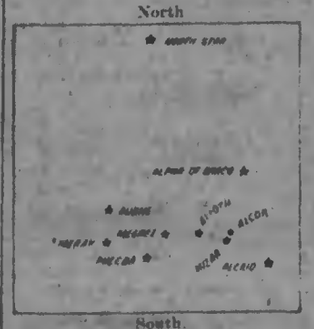
THE KINGDOM OF THE SKY

These articles are written for The Examiner by the Peterboro branch of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada. Any citizen may join the Society. The annual fee is two dollars. In addition to the lectures given monthly the government sends, without further cost to each member, twelve books and the Observer's hand book, which contains detailed maps of stars as they appear each night, and much detailed information.

One of our enquiring friends has requested us to tell him how to find the big dipper.

The big dipper forms a part of the great constellation Ursa Major or the Great Bear. It is a very prominent constellation in the northern sky. It wheels around the north star once a year, and is always visible during any hour of the night in this latitude. Just now about 9 p.m., it is directly south of the north star, high up in the northern sky.

North



South.

Hold above diagram in your hand and face to the north, directly above your head, you will see the big dipper outlined on the sky. Half way down the sky, half way between the zenith and the northern horizon, you will find located the north star. To prove that you are looking at the right star follow with the eye an imaginary line drawn through the two outside stars of the bowl of the dipper, the two stars which are farthest from the handle, and continue the line nearly five times the distance the two pointer stars are apart. If you follow this rule you cannot fail to locate the north star, as it is always approximately in the same place.

The three stars to the east form the handle and the four stars to the west are very like the bowl of a dipper.

Study the above diagram. If you get it well impressed on your mental vision you will have little difficulty in locating other groups of stars, until the whole heavens will appear to you like a well read story.

On a clear, bright star-light night, when the stars are twinkling, scintillating in all their glory, singing their wordless song of praise, how uplifting, how inspiring it is; how whole-heartedly you yield your soul in allegiance to the Great All-Wise Infinite Power who fashioned it all!

The two stars at the western side of the bowl are called the pointers. They point to the north star which is always situated about half way between the northern horizon and the zenith. If you will remember that the pointers are always about five degrees apart it will greatly help to visually measure stellar distances.

With the eye draw an imaginary line through these two stars and continue it about 28 degrees, you will find a comparatively bright star among many fainter ones. This is the north star. It is almost stationary. It describes a small circle, just about the size of four and a half diameters of the moon. All the stars appear to swing around it.

When once you locate these stars you will always be able to direct your course. When your friends the stars are shining they will never fail you as compass and guide.

All the stars in the big dipper, with the exception of Alcaid and Dubhe, are moving together and are supposed to have had a common origin. All of these stars are supposed to be over a hundred light-years distant from us.

"4,700 years ago the bright little star Alpha of Draco (you will see it marked on the diagram above) was the north star. So at that thime the big dipper was very much nearer to the north than it is at the present time. The philosophers of Greece noted that it did not sink below the horizon. If these same gentlemen were to return to-day they would see the big dipper sink below the horizon and remain out of sight for a portion of the year.

12,000 years from now, Vega the bright star in the constellation of Lyra, will be the north star.

Many of the constellations will have greatly changed their appearance by that time.

All the stars of the big dipper with the exception of Dubhe (the pointer nearest to the north star) are just great balls of gas. They belong to what are known as the Sirius class.

At the extreme end of the handle you will find Alcaid. Next to Alcaid at the bend of the handle is Mizar. Very near to Mizar, almost lost in its rays, you will see a very pretty little star called Alcor. Little Alcor is sometimes called the test star. It was considered to be a test of good eyesight if you could see it. But when once you locate it it is very easy to see. Between Mizar and Alcor there is still another smaller star. The telescope shows Mizar to be a double star and the spectroscope reveals the larger of these two to be also double. So you see Mizar is a secondary star only by reason of its great distance from us. It is really one of the great suns. It radiates 40 times as much light as does our sun. It moves around its inner companion in 20 days. It is the centre of a great system of giant suns, the magnificence and the greatness of which we as yet but faintly understand. Mizar was the first binary to be discovered as such and the first binary whose orbit was computed.

This article on the big dipper will be continued next Saturday.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new, rich blood and restores the feeble wasted nerve cells.

Choice Recipes

Russian Steak.

Take half a pound of beefsteak, one sheep's kidney, one dessertspoonful each of flour, chopped onion, chopped parsley, and water. Trim the steak, and divide it. Skin the kidney, and cut in quarters, removing the fat from the centre. Roll the meat in the flour, and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Put the chopped onion at the bottom of a basin. Then put in the steak and kidney, and the water; cover the basin with a plate and steam until the steak is tender. Serve on a hot dish, with the gravy poured round, and sprinkle the parsley over.

SWISS PUDDING.

Take a cup and a half of flour, half a cup of breadcrumbs, two tablespoonfuls sugar, a dessertspoonful of butter, a table spoonful of marmalade, a teaspoonful of baking powder, and one egg. Beat all up together thoroughly, put into a pudding basin, cover with greased paper, and steam for two hours.

Bird's Nest Pudding.

Pare and core some good baking apples, and fill the cavities, where the cores were removed, with sugar. Soak tapioca for an hour, then bring to the boil, and boil for five minutes. Butter a pudding dish, put the apples in, and arrange the tapioca in "nests" around them. Bake in an oven from half to three-quarters of an hour.

DELICIOUS DISHES.

Normandy Roast.

Peel, wash and slice thin, ten small, sound potatoes. Thoroughly beat four egg yolks and two egg whites, stirring in one cup of beef broth. Season the liquid with one teaspoonful salt, one-half teaspoonful white pepper and one-fourth teaspoon grated nutmeg. Place the potatoes in a deep baking dish, pour over the liquid, lightly stir, and bake in a moderate oven for forty minutes.

Steamed Rhubarb Puffs.

Cream together one cup of sugar and two tablespoons of butter, add two well-beaten eggs, one-fourth cup of milk, one teaspoon of baking powder and sufficient flour to make a thick batter; then stir into the mixture one cup of finely chopped rhubarb; half fill well-buttered cups with the mixture, and steam for half an hour. Serve with cream or a pudding sauce.

Potato Scones.

Mash half a dozen large boiled potatoes. See that the potato is free from lumps, and knead it with a little flour, enough to bind it together. Form into scones an inch thick. Prick the surface to prevent blistering, and bake in a moderate oven. Split, butter liberally, and serve at once piping hot.

TWO DEATHS FROM BRAWL

FORT WILLIAM, Ont., April 22.—Two deaths have resulted from a brawl between members of the 213th Batt., American Legion, which started on Tuesday night in a boarding house on Brodie street, this city. Thomas Minns, coloured, struck by some one unknown, died in the Fort Arthur Hospital, and Private Moran was found dead in the "snake" room of the West Hotel here after a fight with another member of the battalion in the barroom. Moran is supposed to have been the man who struck Minns with a chair, causing the coloured man's death. Moran's assailant is now in the toils.

By Purifying The Blood You Get Rid Of Pain

Here is the Sworn Statement of a Lady Who Was Cured by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

BY PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

Poison causes pains and aches, tired, languid feeling and derangements of the vital organs of the body. By ridding the human system of poisonous impurities Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills cure rheumatism, headache, backache, and pains through the body and limbs.

As an illustration, we would refer you to the sworn statement of Mrs. Berglund. It is just such experiences as this that has made so many thousands of people enthusiastic about Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This why they are to be found in the great majority of homes.

Mrs. O. Berglund, Dunkirk, Sask., writes: "I can hardly recommend Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to all who are suffering from weak kidneys. I suffered from headache and backache, had heart flutterings and my ing that it was with difficulty that I could get any rest. I had rheumatism and always had a heavy feeling in the region of my kidneys. I was nervous and often dizzy. Reading about Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills led me to use them, and with the most highly satisfactory results, and I can recommend them to everyone who wants to be cured of kidney troubles."

Mr. W. E. Johnson, Commissioner to take oaths writes: "This is to certify that I know Mrs. Berglund and believe her statement in regard to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to be true and correct."

Put Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to the test when suffering from torpid, sluggish action of the liver, kidneys and bowels and you will soon appreciate their value. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

BOY'S SUIT.

By Anabel Worthington.

7665

Although the clothes for children are designed with the idea in mind that "comfort" is the first consideration, we notice a great variety of interesting touches added for style effect. Even the very small boy may wear a suit with a vest and coat to make him feel big and proud and his mother will be repaid for making her boy's new suit when she sees how much pride he will take in one that is out of the ordinary. In the illustration, No. 7,665, the coat is cut on the sacque order, slashed so as to give a well open front in order to display a vest that buttons down the centre but which is attached to the coat fronts at their outer edges. A handsome collar of contrasting goods fits the neck and finishes with a tie. The sleeves have a turnback cuff of material similar to that used for the collar and vest. The trousers are the straight cut, open at the knee and made with a roomy seat and a pocket at the right back and under each front. The picture and description truly express the attractive features of this little suit, but cannot do justice to it when made up in serge, Palm Beach cloth, duck, linen or other suitable material with contrasting goods. The pattern is cut in sizes four, six and eight years. To make for a boy of six years will require just 2 yards of 36 inch material and ⅝ yard contrasting goods. By sending 20 cents to the office of this publication you may secure the pattern.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

NO INFANTRY ACTION ON VERDUN FRONT

A Big Memorial Service At The Armouries To-Night

No Important Infantry Moves Recorded on The Western Front

Violent Bombardment Around Caurettes Wood and Mines Are Exploded by Germans Without Doing Any Damage ---French Aeroplanes Raid Railway Station Dropping 48 Bombs and Returning Unhurt.

GERMAN REPLY TO U. S. EXPECTED

PARIS (French Official Communique), April 24.—A rather violent bombardment occurred northwest of Caurettes wood last night, but there were no important infantry actions on the Verdun front, the War Office reported to-day. Aside from the cannonading northwest of the fortress, the only activity on the whole Verdun front occurred southeast of the city, near Eparges, where the Germans exploded mines without doing any damage. North of the Aisne a German reconnaissance in the region of Passy was repulsed, the enemy suffering heavy losses. The French made some progress by grenade attacks, capturing thirty prisoners. In Alsace the French captured a small German position near Bonhomme. French aeroplanes made a raid on the Vyt Wege station in Belgium, dropping 48 bombs and returning unhurt.

BERNE, Switzerland, April 24.—German submarines have abandoned the periscope in most instances, and are shooting without looking. According to reports current in Berne, torpedoes are now fired by sound alone. During the past twenty sinkings in British waters, no one has seen a submarine, and in but a few cases has the white wake of the torpedo been observed.

German Attitude May Soon Be Revealed

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, April 24.—There were indications in official quarters to-day that the tenor of Germany's forthcoming reply to the United States' demand concerning the submarine warfare is known. A long message from Ambassador Gerard is believed to have conveyed the information. Whether Gerard's advices support the unofficial reports that show likelihood of German concessions to the American view could not be told. No word of the actual contents of his report was available. Germany is expected to understand that unless she can make an unexpected demonstration of ability to operate submarines against shipping, such operations must cease entirely.

MESSAGE DESPATCHED.

BERLIN, April 24.—President Wilson may know within twenty-four hours what reply Germany will make to his demand that she curb her submarine warfare under penalty of a diplomatic break. Ambassador Gerard despatched long message to Washington last night following a Sunday afternoon conference with Secretary Von Stumm of the Foreign Office, and Dr. Heckaher, of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Reichstag. This despatch should reach Washington to-day. Its contents are a secret, but it was freely rumoured that it contains at least an outline of the stand Germany will take in her formal reply. Chancellor Von Bethmann Hollweg, who returned from the Kaiser's headquarters Sunday afternoon, has held no conference thus far with the Foreign Office officials, and has given no intimation of the result of his talk with the Emperor. But the general feeling among officials to-day is that the position is still hopeful, and that a solution is possible without a break.

Germans in Quandry Over American Note

Special to the Examiner:

WASHINGTON, April 24.—Official information reaching Washington indicates German officials do not want break with America. But it also revealed that they are in quandry how to meet the American demands and the popular desire in Germany for continuing the submarine warfare at the same time. The United Press learned these facts to-day from a high official source. The advices forwarded from Berlin were described as squaring with the "United Press interview with Admiral Von Holtzendorff, Chief ofthe German Admiralty Staff." In this interview the Admiral said Germany could make no more concessions to America, but that Germany positively did not want to break with the United States. Authorities here think the German officials will find a way in which to make concessions. No report has been forwarded by the Embassy to show the exact time Germany will reply.

Authorities merely have promised to answer at "the earniest possible moment." It was admitted German officials are having a particularly difficult time putting into writing such an answer as will satisfy both America and the German people.

Col. Allison to Reach Ottawa To-day

Special to the Examiner.

OTTAWA, April 24.—Col. J. W. Allison is expected to reach Ottawa from Morrisburg at five o'clock this afternoon. After that things will move. Colonel Allison is reported by his counsel, Mr. Henderson, to be a very sick man, but there are three commissions who desire his presence and he will likely start with the Davidson Commission. Colonel Allison will scarcely appear before the Meredith-Duff Commission for a few days. The opening days of the session will likely be taken up with legal discussion as to the admissability of evidence, the calling of witnesses, etc. The coming week promises to be a busy one. With interesting developments anticipated the most strenuous week in the Commons since the session commenced is looked for.

General Hughes is firmly esconced in his office. Bright and early this morning he was there in shirtsleeve and busy with his correspondence. Despite the statement of Sir Robert Borden there are no indication that the Minister is anything less than the administrator of his department or intends to be anything less. He appears to be confident in connection with the situation.

British Reply to U. S. Is Received

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, April 24.—Ambassador Spring-Rice to-day delivered Britain's reply to the American note protesting against alleged illegal blockade. French Ambassador Jesserand also transmitted a note in agreement with Britain. The British note is a refusal to acknowledge the justice of the American argument, and a contention that the British blockade conforms to recognize the law as laid down by the United States in her blockade of the Confederacy during the Civil War.

CERTIFICATE SAYS OLD OLIVER COUPLE LAWFULLY MARRIED

The Old Man Died in The Jail and His Wife Removed to House of Refuge—Rumored Illegal Cohabitation Disproved

BROUGHT FROM MONAGHAN

An echo of the Oliver incident that occurred in North Monaghan, last fall, and was followed by the death of the old man, Alexander Oliver, was heard this morning in the finding of the certificate of the old couple's marriage.

Mr. George Sidy recently moved to the Kincaid property on which Mr. and Mrs. Oliver had located, and in the house found the marriage certificate with a few other articles belonging to them. When the Olivers were placed under arrest as vagrants and brought in from Monaghan to the County jail, it was rumoured that they were not married, although living as man and wife. This was rather widely circulated and accepted to the discredit of the old couple. It will be remembere that Oliver died in jail.

The certificate shows that on July 6th, 1915, Alexander Oliver of Toronto and Elizabeth Wyley of Toronto were married in that city by Rev. W F. J. Campbell, and the witnesses were Fred George Spurr and Emily A. Campbell. It was about that time that they appeared on the Kincaid farm, and apparently had come to the Peterborough district on their honeymoon.

The finding of the certificate provides a belated denial of the rumours concerning their lawful cohabitation, and is also a vindication of their characters to that extent at least.

Mr. Oliver is dead and his wife is in the County House of Refuge. It will also be remembered that Mr. F. D. Kerr actively concerned himself in the affairs of the Olivers when their position was made known to the public. At that time he expressed the opinion in a letter that the treatment of the old couple had been uncharitable, if it had been coldly just. Mr. Oliver has been dead for months and his wife forgotten, in the House of Refuge. The least that can be done is point out that if they were poor and friendless, the recovered certificate proves the validity of their marriage.

A. A. Fowler Buys Out C. A. Primeau

Mr. C. A. Primeau, who has been carrying on an optical business in connection with the jewellery business of Frank Clarke on Charlotte street, having enlisted in the 93rd, his business will be discontinued and his stock and records have been purchased by A. A. Fowler, who is prepared to take care of Mr. Primeau's patrons in his well known, careful and scientific manner. This notice will advise parties who have bought glasses from Mr. Primeau, that the same free courtesies that are extended to Dr. Fowler's patrons, such as tightening screws, adjusting and polishing frames, etc., will be available for them at Fowler's Optical Parlours.

BIG SERVICE TO BE HELD TO-NIGHT AT THE ARMOURIES

Pictures of Peterboro Soldiers Who Have Fallen in Battle Who Are Missing or Wounded Will be Thrown On The Screen---Pte. Howard Curtis and Pte. J. G. Hadden Wounded---New Recruiting Campaign for 93rd Battalion---To-day's Orders and General Military News.

To-night at the Armouries there will be a great civic service in commemoration of the Peterborough boys who fell at Langemarck. Pictures of the local boys who have been killed, wounded or are missing or prisoners, will be thrown on a screen and His Lordship Bishop O'Brien will give an address. Music will be supplied by the Band of the 93rd Battalion. Arrangements have been made to seat a huge crowd and no doubt the Armouries will be crowded.

The 93rd Battalion opened a new recruiting campaign this morning, when every member of the Battalion who thought he could secure a recruit was given leave to go out after his man. The policy started out successfully as before noon seven new recruits were sworn in and a number more are expected to-day. The strength is now 950 and Lt.-Col. Johnston is anxious to get over the 1,000 mark before the end of the week if possible. The Battalion will be moving to camp within a few weeks so that men who join now will miss the barracks training and will have the freedom of a life in the open in a camp in which there will be over 10,000 soldiers.

A field post card from a well known Peterborough boy, Pte. A. Murray Carlisle, son of Mr. John Carlisle, Euclid Ave., East City, who is at the front with No. 5 Canadian Field Ambulance, brings the information that Pte. Carlisle has been slightly wounded and admitted to hospital, but expects to be discharged soon. Pte. Carlisle was a student in medicine at Toronto University when he enlisted 3 to 4.30—March out.

Strength Taken On—

The following men having enlisted, are taken on the strength of the 93rd Overseas Battalion, C.E.F., and posted to the companies placed opposite their name from the date mentioned:

No. 195920 Pte. David H. Pollard, "D" Company, April 20th, 1916.

J. E. R. Munro, Captain,
Adjutant, 93rd Overseas Batt., C.E.F.

Pte. F. Tamblyn, of the 146th Battalion, Kingston, a brother of Pte. B. Tamblyn, is visiting his home here.

Bandsmen W. J. Walno and W. G. Walno, of the 120th Battalion Band, Hamilton, and fasher and brother respectively of Bandsman Fred Walno, of the 93rd Battalion Band, are visitors in the city. They played with the Salvation Army Band yesterday.

For the third time Pte. Wm. Howard Curtis, a Peterborough member of the 2nd Battalion is reported wounded. Pte Curtis, who is a son of Mr. Geo. Curtis, and who was born here, enlisted with a western battalion in Edmonton, where he was when war broke out. At Salisbury Plain he transferred to the 2nd Battalion to be with the Peterborough boys. He went through Langemarck without a scratch, but a little later was wounded slightly. He returned to duty in a short time and was again wounded, this time more seriously. Now word has been received that he has been wounded again. The telegram received by his father states that he has been wounded slightly in the leg and admitted to hospital.

Word has been received that Pte. J. G. Hadden, who left here with B Squadron, 9th C.M.R., has been admitted to hospital suffering from shell shock. Pte. Hadden had been a resident of this district for ten years, coming from Ireland, and for some time was employed at the C.G.E. He also worked around Bethany for some time. He has number of warm friends in Peterborough, who will regret to hear that he is in hospital.

Mrs. A. Reid, 212 Aylmer St., where Lance-Corp. Ted. Shrimpton, of the 21st Battalion boarded, has received two messages in regard to the Peterborough boy who was last week reported wounded. The first telegram stated that Lance-Corp. Shrimpton had been admitted to St. John's Ambulance Brigade Hospital at Etaples on April 14th, seriously wounded in the back. The second message was more reassuring, as it stated that his condition was improving and that he had been transferred to hospital in England.

The Apsley platoon of the 93rd Battalion are now at Lakefield, where they will drill this week. The boys from the northern outpost route marched to Lakefield last week. Next week they with the Lakefield platoon, will march into Peterborough. Speak-

LANGEMARCK ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATED YESTERDAY

Sunday Schools Parade to Central Park Where Fine Memorial Services Were Held — Music By Four City Bands—An Enormous Crowd on Hand.

SERVICES IN CHURCHES

Peterborough observed the first anniversary of the battle of Langemarck yesterday in appropriate manner, by a huge memorial service in Central Park in the afternoon, followed by special services in the city churches last evening.

In spite of the dull threatening weather and the lack of sunshine a monster crowd assembled at Central Park in the afternoon, one of the largest gatherings of its kind ever held here. Fortunately this had been foreseen by those in charge of the arrangements, and instead of only one meeting, in which case only a comparative few of the crowd would have been in a position to hear the addresses, five impromptu platforms were utilized in different parts of the Park, and instead of one memorial service hve were held, each platform being surrounded by an attentive audience.

The Sunday Schools of the city marched in a body to the Park, the parades being headed by bands. The band of the 93rd Battalion supplied the music for the East City schools, who were joined en route by the children of St. John's Church and Bethany Tabernacle.

The South End procession, composed of the St. George's, St. James', Park Street Baptist, Knox Church, All Saints' and Trinity Schools, was headed by the band of the Salvation Army, the children from the Salvation Army and City Mission joining in the parade. The band of the 57th Regiment marched at the head of the St. Andrew's and Murray Street Baptist Sunday School, while the Bugle Band of the 93rd headed the parade of the Grace Church School, which afterwards was augmented by the scholars from the George Street Methodist and St. Paul's Sunday Schools. Each procession was headed by a big Union Jack, while the children carried banners, with such significant legends as "We Cannot Go But You Can," "Remember St. Julien," etc. The different parades, with their waving flags, made a deep impression upon the spectators.

Music was supplied at the Park by all three brass bands, patriotic and sacred airs being played. The crowd reverently joined in the hymns, "O God Our Help in Ages Past," "Nearer My God to Thee," and "Onward Christian Soldiers," the whole effect being very impressive.

The chairman and speakers at the different meetings were as follows:

The addresses were brief, but forcible and in many cases, were not confined to the Battle of Langemarck but were direct recruiting appeals.

In the course of his address, Capt. Burnham made the following reference to the power of the press:

"In these days the great power in the world is the press. It makes war or peace. It makes and unmakes governments, parties, institutions, commercial enterprises and men. It stimulates and sways the passions and prejudices of the multitude. It far exceeds parliament, the pulpit, and all other forms of dealing in the business of the world, in effectiveness. Control of the press is the new method of controlling the world. As yet it is a great and noble institution, but, like all things human, it has a fair mark for the crafty and the wicked. The dependence of the public upon the press measures, and with it therefore the power of the press. When we realize these things one word more to a wise man is usually sufficient.

THE INVESTIGATION CONCERNING THE SCHOOL BOARD

Three Outstanding Points Are Answered in The Legal Column of The Mail and Empire—Questions Asked by "W. H. H." of Peterboro

THE SOLICITOR

The appended extract from the Legal column of the Mail and Empire refers to the investigation that was held in Peterborough some time ago, concerning the Board of Education and City Solicitor Gordon. The latter is also a member of the School Board. Mr. W. H. Hill also figured in the enquiry. The extract follows:

W. H. H., Peterborough.—(1) Is a city solicitor who is paid a salary by the corporation an officer of the corporation? (2) Is he ex-officio a member of the Board of Education? (3) If a member of a Board of Education places insurance with a company, is that member an agent of the insurance company or of the Board of Education?

Ans.—(1) A city solicitor is an officer of the corporation in so far as the Municipal Act and the by-laws of the corporation place him in that capacity. There are some sections of the Act applicable to solicitors. Section 245 says where the remuneration of any officer of a corporation is not fixed by law the Council shall fix it, and Sub-section 6 of the same section says, notwithstanding that a corporation employs a solicitor whose remuneration is wholly or partly paid by salary, the corporation shall have the right to recover and collect lawful costs in all actions and proceedings, etc. (2) There is nothing in the Municipal Act or in the Board of Education Act making the city solicitor a member of the board. The Board of Education Act requires that the members shall be elected. (R.S.O. Chap. 192, Section 245; R.S.O. Chap. 269, Section 5.) (3) A member of the Board of Education has no right to insure the property under the control of the board without the authorization or sanction of the board. If a member of the board insures the property of the board with the sanction or by the direction of the Board, he has no right to recive any personal remuneration, gratuity or gift from the company with whom he places the insurance. If for any just reason the Insurance Company thinks fit to make a reduction in its premiums, or to pay a percentage or commission that must not go to the funds of the board and not into the pocket of any member of the board. It has been said, "No man can serve two masters."

Little Lake Water In Park St. Sewer

Progress Held Up By The Unusual Spring Conditions.

While the Park St. sewer workmen are engaged in filling in the completed section south of Romaine Street, the trench of the incompleted section north of Romaine Street is full of water, which has practically seeped in from the Little Lake. The water in the trench is at the lake level, and the work cannot be resumed until it recedes to the normal. Nothing could be gained just now by pumping out this water, for the river has backed up in the sewer to the top of the big concrete pipes, and the entire operations will be held up until the water returns to its ordinary height.

THE PLAYGROUNDS APPEAL.

When spring comes and there is a "general jail delivery" from the winter prison round of cramped and heated homes, we all rejoice in our liberty of action and joy of life in the open air. Our streets, scantily filled with life in winter, overflow with children joyous as if let loose from school. The streets, even if sticky with mud, are converted into playgrounds; for play is as instinctive in the child as breathing. It is the voice of nature demanding physical motion and physical exercise, as the natural provision for physical development and healthy growth. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy; and too much of all work and no play will make Jack a dead boy; for play is necessary to health, and health is a condition of life.

It is evident that we cannot have healthy, well-developed men and women, unless we encourage the spirit, the instinct of play and provide ample facilities for the recreation, and re-creation—physical remaking—that comes from play. Such provision is especially necessary in cities, where children have no play grounds but the streets; where they are grudgingly tolerated nuisances, to their elders and a danger to themselves— their bodies and their morals. For without supervised play and the association it involves, there is apt to be corruption of morals; innocent children, especially little girls, in the enforced and inevitable associations of the streets, hear language that they should not hear, and cannot hear without contamination and the destruction of a girl's crowning charm innocence and modesty. Play in supervised play grounds is unattended with these dangers. Children have a right to be happy and shout and laugh—even if at nothing—to their heart's content. When left to their own resources and devices and full play of their passions, there is apt to be quarrelling and fighting, profanity, lewd language used and heard, and as in the adult world, injustice upon the part of the strong towards the weak.

In play, especially in cities, there must be organization—the element of success in everything as well as play. This organization is found in supervised play grounds, and the proposed establishment of play grounds at the King Edward school, through the efforts of a group of sound-hearted and level-headed ladies, is worthy of encouragement. They need funds to equip the grounds for the delight and benefit of hundreds of children. At this time when there are so many demands for money, they have taken an easy way, and a wise way—convert ing waste into wealth. They appeal to householders at this time of house cleaning and overhauling to save the rags, cast-off clothing, old papers rubbers, etc., to be collected and sold for much money. It is hoped that householders will not be deaf to such an appeal; all the trouble they are asked to take is not to destroy or burn or poke into the garbage tins rags and other things that can be converted into good money for a good cause. The ladies are performing a paradox; they are showing in a way not meant by the Prophet, that "their righteousness is as filthy rags."

SOCIAL WORKERS.

The experience of philanthropic and social reform agencies everywhere is that while no difficulty is found in collecting funds for the establishment and maintenance of charitable institutions, it is almost impossible to get money in this way for the salaries of social workers. The latter by dealing efficiently with the causes of dependency may obviate the necessity for an institution but appeals for the support fall on deaf ears, while a campaign to open or enlarge an Orphans' Home is promptly and generously responded to. For this reason it is plain that in most cases municipalities or wealthy men must be depended upon to finance the efficiency branch of social work.—J. J. Kelso.

A Well Planned Scheme For The Subjugation Of Sir Adam Beck

"Wing Clipping Legislation" at Recent Session—Sir Adam Will Eat Dirt But Will Not Resign

"The Attempted Subjugation of Beck" would be a fitting title to one illuminating chapter of a volume which might be written dealing with Government legislation introduced and adopted during the session of the Legislature just closed, as affecting the Hydro-Electric Power Commission.

The chapter, to be complete, would of necessity begin with the early days of Sir Adam's connection with the Hydro Commission, and traced through the years a series of incidents in which one or more influential members of his own party vied with him for political preference, and having gained the ascendancy apparently awaited the time and opportunity to attempt to strip him of powers and prestige as the directing head of a great public service body.

A Cause of Estrangement.

The estrangement between Sir Adam Beck and certain members of the Government is no longer a secret. It is well known far beyond political circles, Sir Adam maintains a discreet silence upon the subject, but his actions in failing to publicly endorse recent Government legislation speaks more eloquently than words. Members of the Government on the other hand, profess confidence in him and admiration of the work he has accomplished as head of the Hydro Commission, but at the same time jam through legislation which gives wider government control over the Commission, its operations, and expenditures, and proportionately diminishes freedom of action which the commission has heretofore enjoyed.

What is the cause of this strange situation? Briefly stated it is this: The Government, or at least the majority of the members of the Government, it is said, regard the chairman of the commission as autocratic, and would have his powers or rather the powers of the commission curtailed. Sir Adam Beck, on the other hand, feels that he has not the full confidence of the Government, that certain members of it have, for some time, been avowedly hostile to him, and to achieve the objects of the commission, he has been obliged to force the Government's hands, as was done in the matter of the radial railways in the face of an alleged concealed, yet existent, opposition of the Government to the whole radial proposition.

Never Had United Support.

Among those who have been in close touch with political affairs, it is stated that Sir Adam Beck has never had the united support of the Cabinet from the day when he became the selection as chairman of the Hydro Commission. So long as Sir James Whitney lived he backed him up, and no member of the Cabinet dared show hostility to him or the Hydro movement. When Sir James Whitney died, and the choice of a new party leader had to be made, Sir Adam's name was prominently mentioned for the Premiership with the names of two members of the Cabinet. Almost instantly the opposion to Sir Adam which had been kept covered while Sir James was Premier, burst forth. A three-cornered rivalry for the Premiership began, which for a time threatened to disrupt the party, until finally the rival factions compromised and selected Hon. Mr. Hearst as Prime Minister.

Opposition Grows.

Since that event one of the strongest rivals for the Premiership has, it is said, been more unfriendly to Sir Adam than before, and has succeeded in inducing two other members of the Government to join him in this opposition, forming an influential section of the Cabinet which is said to be opposing Sir Adam and showing their opposition in being sponsors to Government bills aimed to curtail freedom of action on the part of the Hydro Commission in the carrying out of projected schemes. In this it is claimed they have the support even of the Premier, and as a conseuence these men to-day dominate the Cabinet.

Wing Clipping Starts.

The session of the Legislature just closed was, so the friends of Sir Adam Beck state, chosen as a fitting time to "clip Sir Adam's wings." But before legislation putting the clipping process into operation was introduced, it was necessary to have some pretext for such action. This, it is claimed, was found in the report of Mr. James Clancy, Provincial Auditor, tabled in the Legislature on March 15th last. In this report the Provincial Auditor stated the form of accounting adopted by the Hydro Commission in respect to interest charges, is of a "unique character," and comment was made on "the absence of even the semblances of Legislative control over the expenditures of the "Hydro Commission," and "the seeming defiant disobedience of the Act creating the Commission with their powers and duties."

Sir Adam Beck, making reply to the Provincial Audigor's report, stated Mr. Clancy's protests against the expenditures of certain moneys had been voiced since 1909. He (Sir Adam) had, however, previously brought this to the attention of the Cabinet, and they had approved of the business methods of the commission.

Legislation Hunting Powers.

Then came the hammer blows in the form of several Government bills introduced in quick succession which give the Government wider powers over the Hydro Commission in matters over which the commission's authority had previously been undisputed. The first and most drastic of these bills introduced was the measure known as the McGarry bill, so called because Hon. T. W. McGarry, Provincial Treasurer, introduced it. It provided for the appointment of a comptroller to countersign all cheques issued by the Hydro Commission after having satisfied himself that its issue is authorized, this officer to decide system of accounting to be used and to present an annual report of the commission's work. The bill further provided for an annual audit of the commission's books by the Provincial Auditor or by an independent auditor.

Municipalities Protest.

This bill instantly drew forth a howl of protest from municipalities interested in the Hydro, which interpreted the measure to be an attempt to drive Sir Adam Beck from the chairmanship and turn the Hydro into a party machine. This opposition to the bill found expression when, after a conference held in the City Hall, Toronto, on April 18th, between the executives of the Ontario Municipal Electric Association and the Hydro-Electric Railway Association of Ontario, a deputation one hundred strong waited upon the Cabinet and demanded that the bill be either tabled for a year or so amended as to make the comptroller an appointee of the Hydro Commission. The deputation also asked that the municipalities purchasing power from the Hydro should have the appointment of one of the three members of the commission and that the Government authorize the commission to proceed at once with the final surveys and purchase of rights of way for the radial railways and authorized by the municipalities. Sir Adam Beck, who was present, pleaded for a square deal for the Hydro, adding, in conclusion, the significant words, "We must have the trust and confidence of yourself (the Premier) and your Cabinet." Despite the plea of the deputation, supported by Sir Adam, the Government's answer to all these requests was a negative one and with minor alterations the McGarry bill passed the House in the closing days of the session.

A Check on Radials.

The McGarry bill was quickly followed by four other Government bills affecting the Hydro Commission, introduced by Hon. Mr. Lucas, Attorney-General. Two of these bills are interpreted by Sir Adam's friends is "wing-clipping legislation." One is known as the Radial bill, and contains a clause which makes it compulsory for a municipality to first receive the sanction of the Government and then to publish for three months, notice of a radial by-law before it can be voted upon by the electors. This clause, is said by friends of the chairman of the Hydro Commission to be a clear rap at Sir Adam for having brought on a vote upon radial by-laws in so many municipalities at the last municipal elections. It is intended, they say, to prevent the recurrence of anything of this nature in the future unless the Government has first given full approval.

The other bill related to power development by the Government at Niagara Falls. By the bill the Government proposes to make this development on its own account, and not on account of the municipalities tributary to the Niagara system. During the debate upon this bill Hon. G. Howard Ferguson made the statement that this bill had been framed upon the signed recommendation of the chairman of the Hydro Commission. Sir Adam Beck was not in the Legislature at the time, but, interviewed later, he declined to confirm or deny the statement made by a member of the Government as to his concurrence with the bill, which is accepted in certain quarters as direct evidence that Sir Adam regards Hon. Mr. Ferguson's announcement as an attempt to place him in a false position before the municipalities and the public.

A third Government measure, which is looked upon as challenging the rights of the Hydro Commission, is the Seymour Power Bill introduced by Hon. G. Howard Ferguson which sanctions the acquisition of the Trent Valley power system at a cost of $8,350,000. The obnoxious feature of this bill is that it does not provide for the management of the system by the Hydro Commission, but by a nominee of the Government. This would appear to indicate a further "trimming of Sir Adam's wings." As this bill was the last piece of Government legislation put through in the session just closed it represents the final clipping of wings by legislation until the Legislature convenes again next year.

Beck Will Not Resign.

But a lot of things are liable to occur in the meantime. What they are no one with certainty is disposed to disclose. The question is asked: Will Sir Adam Beck resign as chairman of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission because of the hostility which has shown itself on the part of members of the Government? A close personal friend of Sir Adam made this answer to the question: "Sir Adam will not resign as chairman of the commission. Why should he? By doing so he would simply be doing what would best please his enemies in the Cabinet. They want him out because they fear the growing power and influence among the people of the Province because of the manner in which he has championed municipal rights and through the success which has come to his management of the Hydro problems. "Sir Adam has eaten dirt before and will continue to eat the dirt thrown at him in the latest legislation, if by doing so the Hydro cause, which he has most deeply at heart, will eventually be triumphant. I know Sir Adam cherishes the thought of being able to do something for his Province in the direction of public service by which he shall be remembered after his life's work is done. He has, to my knowledge, been invited to become leader of an independent political party, but his preference has been to continue to direct the affairs of the Hydro and make the Hydro a Province-wide undertaking from which every resident of the Province will derive benefit. This he regards as a big enough job for any man or group of men to be identified with and if it can be made the success expected from the scheme, he and others who have laboured with him will feel they have performed a public service of great value."—Toronto Star.

AN EASTER MEMORY.

This (Easter) is the twenty-fourth anniversary of Alexander Mackenzie, for five years Prime Minister of Canada; and for many years a Canadian patriot and statesman. In saying this we are speaking, not of the exact date, but of Easter Sunday, 1892 having just completed the threescore years and ten allotted to mankind by the Psalmist. He was a Scotchman by birth, a Canadian by achievement. For some years after his arrival in Canada he worked as a stonemason, and he was a good stonemason, a workman that needed not to be ashamed.

Throughout his whole political career he carried out the mason's ideals. He was a hard worker and an honest worker. He was a builder, not an incendiary. If he had any fault in politics, it was that he worked too hard. He thought of himself always as a workman, and he wore himself out by doing work that he could have made others do. If that was a fault, it was one that ought to make us all think more kindly of our stonemason Premier.

Soon after the funeral the late S. H. Blake delivered an oration in which he said: "Consequences had to go to pieces before such men as Alexander Mackenzie. God give us more such as he was, honest and true." And again: "Men may say what shadows we are and what shadows we pursue. But I like to say what a grand man he was, and what a noble man we may pursue."—Toronto Star.

Recruiting in Quebec.

Thirteen purely French-Canadian battalions, it is said, are now formed or forming. These, together with the men already in the ranks, will give a total of approximately 20,000 volunteers from the French population of Quebec. It serves to show that their hearts are in the right place, but a little difficult to move.—Winnipeg Tribune.

Ball Players in Clover Now White Sox Owner Reminicent

Times Have Changed Since Comiskey Was a Ball Tosser—Tells of Crude Training Season When He Was With St. Louis Browns.

CHICAGO, April 24.—"Times have changed since I was a ball player," said President Charles Comiskey of the White Sox. "I remember our spring training at St. Louis when I was with the old Browns. I often think of it, especially when I consider the de luxe way in which players of today are handled in the south. Our season opened about April 12, so we all reported at St. Louis March 20—all thirteen or fourteen of us. Rookies were not so numerous then. We were practically all veterans. Then we would get our oldest uniforms on and run around the park. This was pleasing work, especially when it was biting cold. If there happened to be a snow flurry and a heavy wind some of us would cut our old overcoats off just above the knee, and run around wearing them. I had a glove, being a first sacker; so did the catchers. But the rest of the players used their bare hands always, and the ball would sting, I can tell you, on those cold mornings.

NO SOUTHERN TRAINING.

"Go south for training? No, nothing like that. We did our work right in that ball yard. Once in a while we managed to have a game with a pick-up team—there wasn't enough of us to make two complete teams. But we never took any short trips for exhibition battles then. How well I remember the rst time the Browns played in the south for exhibition purposes. It was, I believe, the spring of 1887. Our Browns and Detroit of the other league were the big rivals then, and we staged a series of battles at New Orleans. Detroit had Thompson, Brouthers and players of that caliber. We had Robinson, Gleason, Lathem, Curt Welsh, Nat Hurlson,, Bushong, and Carruthers in addition to others. That was a wonderful event—going away to the south in the spring. To-day it is anything but unusual. It was asked once if we had any trainers and rubbers, when we worked at St Louis in the spring. My answer was no: it was too cold, anyway, to be rubbed down then.

Vonderhas a Card.

"One of the funniest things that happened at St. Louis in those early days was when the ball park was renovated every spring. A few gallons of paint were used to slick up the grandstand, and Chris von der Ahe's private box was also painted. That wound up the renovating. Von der Ahe, der little boss, was a great character. Many stories are told of his mannerisms and quaint sayings when he owned der Browns. Often after his team lost a game Chris would dash into the club's dressing room, single out a certain player and shout: 'Vy did you drop dat ball, eh?' He took every muff as a personal affront and seemed to think the poor players could explain in well chosen words why they happened to muff.

Little Tommy McCarthy.

"Von der Ahe took great pride in his Browns, and, because his men were big fellows, called his organization 'the biggest club.' Or, rather, all were big except Tommy McCarthy. McCarthy was a diminutive outfielder about the size of 'Rabbit' Maranville of the Braves or Dome Bush of the Tigers. He was fast and had a great whip. If the runner did not watch his step, Tommy was as liable as not to throw him out from right field on a short single. Chris didn't like McCarthy because he was small, and often asked me why I didn't fire him at once. 'Ach; Dat Tommy can't play big ball.' Von der Ahe would say in keen disgust.

Two St. Louis Clubs.

"When the Union Association came into being Von der Ahe put a second St. Louis team on the field, called the Maroons. These men played at his lot when the Brown were on the road, thus giving the city continuous ball. Old-timers still talk of the excitement there was at St. Louis when the amazing total of twenty-six or twenty-eight players reported for spring practice. Major league teams then carried only from thirteen to fifteen men, so when such a raft of stars invaded one city it was no wonder the inhabitants thought it great pumpkins. There was one drawback however—the park wasn't large enough to permit this many players to take spring practice. It was remedied by having the Browns take the field while the Maroons were running around just inside the fence. Then when the players got tired they would start batting and the Browns would take a course of distance sprinting. Yes, times have changed in base ball."

British Are Equipped With Steel Helmets

LONDON, April 24.—The steel helmet which is being manufactured for the British soldiers at the rate of 50,000 a month is believed by the British authorities to be the best designed and most serviceable headpiece that can be found. Advantage was taken by the designers of the experience gained from the use of the French helmet, or casque, and faults which had developed in the latter were remedied.

The British helmet is a round cap of the hardest steel with a narrow "lip" back and front and designed with a much lower pitch than the French type. It is moreover perfectly smooth, having no flutings or projections for bullets or fragments of shrapnel to strike against while its low pitch presents the smallest possible target for a direct hit from any direction. One of the drawbacks of the French helmet or casque, and faults dome, is that the collection of air in the top of the helmet produced an uncomfortable coolness, while at the same time the helmet was such a tight fit that the metal pressed unpleasantly on the head.

These drawbacks have been avoided in the scientifically-designed headpiece produced under the supervision of Mr. Lloyd George. Ingenious devices have been employed to secure both a good fit and a comfortable one and to avoid any distress to the wearer. Inside the dome of the helmet are fixed a number of rubber studs, so placed as to take up the shock of a blow struck from any direction. They come between the helmet and its double lining of felt and wadding. The wadding comes next to the head of the wearer and covers it closely, so that if a bullet should penetrate the steel cap and inflict a scalp wound the wadding would act as a dressing. The helmet is secured on the head by the means of a stout chin strap.

"NATURAL BREAD" IS MADE IN ITALY

ROME, April 23—A new method of making bread, recently adopted in Italy, has proved a great success. It is found that three hundred pounds of grain produces four hundred pounds of what is termed "natural bread."

In the process the grain is sifted and washed; it is then left for forty-eight to sixty hours in a warm bath, where it ferminates and begins to sprout. When the germinating process has gone far enough the grain is crushed in a machine and made into dough, which is passed into the oven.

The natural bread is grayish in colour, with an agreeable adour, and has much higher nutritive properties than white bread, according to the Corriere Della Sera. Its eating qualities are digestibility are shown by the preference given it by Italians who have tried it.

The most approved means of controlling insects consists in the use of poisonous mixtures in liquid or dry-powder form.

Don't forget the animals need succulent feeds in April. If roots and ensilage are not available molasses makes a good substitute.

ing of the arrival of the Apsley men the Lakefield News says:

The Apsley contingent of the 93rd Battalion arrived in the village on Friday at noon, looking none the worse for their long tramp. The men, to the number of forty, left Apsley on Thursday and marched as far as Burleigh Falls where they spent the night. Friday morning they marched from Burleigh to Lakefield. The men will drill here with the local squad for about two weeks when they will join the Battalion at Peterborough. Lieut. Hughes had charge of the Apsley platoon.

Corp. Tommy Weller, the former Peterborough policeman, and now a member of the 180th Toronto Sportsmen's Battalion, was here for Easter. By the way four former local policemen are doing their bit for the Empire. P. C. Downes is at the front with the Coldstream Guards, of which corp he was a member. Ex-Policeman Harry Gamble is in France with the Canadian Field Artillery, having left here with the 26th Battery, and P. C. Geo. Cookman is a member of the machine gun section of the 93rd Battalion.

Pte. Fred Seymour, who has enlisted with the Canadian Army Medical Corps at London, Ont., spent Easter at his home here.

Mr. Clark Thackeray, of the Quaker Oats office staff, left for Cobourg this morning, where he has joined the Cobourg heavy battery.

Lieut.-Col. Mills and his son, Lieut. A. B. Mills were in Ottawa on Saturday attending a dinner in honour of the 2nd Battalion, O.E.F. officers who have returned to Canada. About ten officers were in attendance at the banquet, which was held at the Chateau Laurier. General Sir Sam Hughes was in attendance.

By permission of Lt.-Col. Johnston and the officers, the band of the 93rd Battalion, under the direction of Bandmaster Hughes, will give a popular concert in Victoria Hall on the evening of Monday, May 2. A very interesting programme has been arranged. Among the features will be the playing by the band of the "Irresistible" March composed by Mr. Hilycke of Peterborough, and which has been dedicated to the 93rd Band. Mr. Huycke will sing a new patriotic song, "Sons of the Empire," the word and music of which were written by Bandmaster Hughes. The prices will be 10c and 15c and the programme will be as follows:

Overture, "William Tell" (Rossini) —93rd Band.

Grand selection, "Verdi" (Verdi)—93rd Band.

Duet, (concertina) selected—Loader Bros.

Descriptive, "Forest Scenes" (C. Orth)—93rd Band.

Selection, "Faust" (Gounod)— 93rd Band

March, "Stars and Stripes" (Sousa) —93rd Band.

Pte. Desautel, a Peterborough member of the 127th Battalion, York Rangers, was home for Easter.

SOME TRENCH PARODIES.

Sing Me to Sleep.

Sing me to sleep where bullets fall,
Let me forget the war and all,
Damp is my dugout, cold my feet.
Nothing but bully and biscuits to eat.

Sing me to sleep when camp fires glow,
Dreaming of home and nights in the west
Somebody's overseas boots on my chest.
Far far from 'Wpres" I long to be
Where German snipers can't pot at me,
Think of me crouching where the worms creep
Waiting for someone to sing me to sleep.

Sing me to sleep in the same old shed
Rats are running around my head,
Stretched out upon my waterproof
Dodging the raindrops through the roof.
Sing me to sleep when bombs explode
And shrapnel shells are a la mode,
Over the parapet helmets you'll find
Corpses in front and corpses behind,
Far, far from starlights I long to be,
Lights of old England I'd rather see.
Think of me crouching where the worms creep
Waiting for someone to sing me to sleep.

Keep you head down Alemande
Keep you head down Alemande
Last night, in the pale moonlight
I saw you, I saw you.
You were mending your barbed wire
When I opened fire.
If you want to go back to Germany
Keep your head down Alemande.

"Alemande" is French for "German."

New York Stock Market

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, April 24.—War stocks found the support which they lacked during Saturday's bear drive when the exchange opened to-day and recoveries of 1 to 3 points were general. Crucible sold up 3 points to 78. U. S. Steel gained 3-4 of a point at 81 1-4. Studebaker opened at 124 1-2, up 3 points, and Mexican Petroleum was up 1-2 a point at 91. Westinghouse lost 1-4 of a point at 54.

NEW YORK, April 24 — Profit taking buying during the opening hour was as heavy as sales during Saturday's bear raid. In the first half hour sales were 18,000 shares, in the first hour, 280,000 shares. The gains were well maintained through most of the hour. At 11 o'clock prices were fractionally under the best of the morning.

WAR POEMS.

By Herbert Asquith

(From the London Daily Mail.)

Lieut Herbert Asquith, second son of the prime minister of England, has published a volume of verse entitled "The Volunteer and other Poems." Herewith are presented verses from two of his best poems:

Here lies a clerk who half his life had spent
Toiling at ledgers in a city gray,
Thinking that so his days would drift away.
With no lance broken in life's tournament;
Yet ever 'twixt the books and his bright eyes
The gleaming eagles of the legions came,
And horsemen, charging under phantom skies,
Went thundering past beneath the oriflamme.

And now those waiting dreams are satisfied;
From twilight into spacious dawn he went;
His lance is broken; but he lies content
With that high hour in which he lived and died.
And, falling thus, he wants no recompense,
Who found his battle in the last resort;
Nor needs he any hearse to bear him hence
Who goes to join the men of Agincourt

Hail! O Baby of the May
In the bubbling river bed,
Playing where the cannon play,
With the shrapnel overhead!
Sparkling in and flashing out
Through the eddies and the shallows
With your feet among the trout,
With your head among the swallows;
While the wag-tails on the thisies,
lead you in the minuet,
Twinkling through the flow'ry mazes.
Baby, do you quite forget
That, with shrapnel overhead,
Other babes are put to bed?

21st Battalion Attacked Crater Held By Enemy Peterboro Men Commended

Private Bruce Blanchard, a Peterboro Boy, Although Wounded Through The Lung by a Rifle Bullet, Continued to Throw Bombs at the Enemy Until His Supply Was Exhausted —Three Ontario Battalions Participate in a Desperate Encounter.

POUNDED BY GERMAN GUNS

OTTAWA, April 24. — Desperate fighting on the St. Eloi salient, participated in by three Ontario battalions, the 21st (Eastern), 19th (Central), and 18th (Western) occurred during the week April 11-18. The Canadian General Representative at the front, in his weekly communique, tells of battles under unprecedentedly difficult circumstances, in which the Canadians held their ground, and in addition occupied a portion of an enemy trench. Many instances of individual heroism are recounted. The communique follows:

Canadian General Headquarters in France (via London), April 23.—The struggle for position in front of St. Eloi was again the dominant interest on the Canadian front. The still weather of the previous week gave way to high winds, brilliant sunshine to a sky overcast with clouds. Occasionally there were downpours of rain, which added to the burden of a water-logged soil.

Gas, Tear and Shrapnel Shells.

By day and night the German guns pounded the narrow confines of the St. Eloi salient, the volume of their fire swelling every now and again into bombardments of extraordinary violence. Great shells tore fresh holes in the already mutilated ground, obliterating the landmarks of previous explosions. Shrapnel shells splashed over the fields. Bursting gas shells poisoned the air and fumes of lachrymatory shells assailed the eyes.

At night innumerable German flares illumined the darkness, and continuous streams of bullets from rifles and machine guns crashed against our parapets or swept over them far into the country beyond.

In the face of such conditions our men waged the fight, repelled enemy attacks, dug trenches and maintained their positions.

Why Fighting So Prolonged.

Under normal circumstances of trench warfare the tussle for so narrow a strip as a few hundred yards would have been quickly over. Whether after loss or capture the trench lines would have been speedily readjusted and new defences built, observations and reconnaissance would soon have revealed the fresh dispositions of the enemy.

The extraordinary state of the terrain opposite St. Eloi has been chiefly responsible for the prolongation of the fighting. With the Germans overlooking the greater part of the area and with the ground sodden with water, the construction or even repair of trenches was difficult. Only by slow and laborious effort could the desired result be achieved. With the damp earth ploughed into a veritable porridge and dented with countless pits and holes, with steamy vapors veiling the landscape and blotting from view all familiar landmarks movement was infinitely hazardous and exhausting, accurate reconnaissance almost an impossibility.

Undaunted by Difficulties.

In places even the hardiest were baffled by the mud. At times even the most skilled mistook their bearings. Undaunted by the difficulties of their surroundings, our officers and men faced the situation with splendid courage and determination.

One night sections of the new German line were attacked and bombed by men of our 18th (Western Ontario), 19th (Central, Ontario) and 21st (Eastern Ontario) Battalions. On our left the bombing parties were under the command of Lieut. B. O. Hooper, of the 19th Battalion and Lieut. C. H. Kerr, of the 18th Battalion, and were accompanied by a working party under Lieut. Lawson, of the 18th Battalion. The night was misty and progress over the broken ground was very slow. Lieut. Kerr acted as guide, and eventually a position was reached close to the German lines. A slight lifting of the fog revealed a number of the enemy, who at once hurled a shower of bombs in the direction of our men. Most of the bombs fell into the crater, on the edge of which our party was lying. Our men retaliated vigorously. The mist soon thickened, and as there had been no opportunity for adequately reconnoitering the ground it was decided to abandon any further offensive action.

Secured Advanced Position.

Meanwhile Lieut. Lawson had found the remains of an old trench a short distance to the rear and commenced to rebuild it. Although our bombing parties were withdrawn at dawn, he remained in this advanced position with his party throughout the following day, having been well supplied with bombs carried out to him by Lieut. Hooper and Sergeant Jackson of the 19th Battalion.

During the fighting in the crater Lieut. Kerr was wounded in the face, but until he collapsed continued to assist Lieut. Hooper in controlling operations.

Bombers Attack Enemy Crater.

On our right bombers under Captain A. P. Miller and Lieut. W. Fisher Brownlee of the 21st Eastern Ontario Battalion attacked a crater held by the enemy, Lieut. G. I. Bowerbank following them in charge of a working party. Lieut. Brownlee and Scout Belyea went on ahead, and having located the enemy, led the bombing squad up to the position. Bombs were thrown at close range, but the Germans were found in considerable numbers, and the decision was taken to return for reinforcements.

Wounded Brought in Safely.

Captain Miller having been wounded, Lieut. Brownlee was placed in charge of the second party. Lieuts. Darcy and Davidson accompanied the force. The advance was delayed owing to the difficulty of movement over the rough ground. As the objective had not been reached by daybreak operations were discontinued, and our party retired to its trenches. During the advance Lieut. Darcy was wounded, but continued to urge on his men, and subsequently walked back unaided to the dressing station. After the return of our force Lieuts. Brownlee and Bowerbank searched for and brought in the wounded men under a violent artillery bombardment.

Reconnaissance and Attack.

On the following night a reconnaissance was undertaken and an attack delivered. The reconnaissance was conducted by Lieut. B. O. Hooper and Sergt. Jackson of the 19th Battalion, and Lieuts. W. J. Baxter and J. A. G. Clarke of the 18th Battalion supported by bombing parties of both units. Before the squads could be placed in position, shells from our guns landing in his trenches caused the enemy to take alarm. Large numbers of bombs were thrown by the Germans, while the hostile artillery quickly concentrated on this section an intense bombardment, which lasted out the night At the coming of the dawn our party retired, succeeding with great difficulty and under heavy fire in carrying back its wounded.

The attack was more successful. Parties of our 21st Battalion under Lieuts. Brownlee, Marks and Davidson bombed their way into a German trench, and although severely shelled by the enemy's guns and trench mortars blocked the trench at both ends and established bombing posts.

Bombers Fought Gallantly.

Sergt.-Major Edmunds, to whom leave had been granted to return to England in order to take up a commission, played a prominent part in the attack and was seriously wounded. Private Bruce Blanchard, although wounded through the lung by a rifle bullet, continued to throw bombs at the enemy until his supply was exhausted. Sniper Joseph Secharias, from an advanced position, used his rifle to advantage until it was blown to pieces in his hands by the explosion of a German bomb. Undismayed by this occurrence Cecharias, the sniper, borrowed bombs from his comrades and as Secharias the bomber, revenged himself on the enemy for the loss of his trusty rifle.

Attempts of Enemy Repelled.

Another night the enemy made two attempts to drive the men of our 21st Battalion from the ground captured by them on the previous night. Each time his approach was detected by our sentries and his parties were driven back by our bombers.

Farther to the left progress was made in the consolidation of our positions. Covering parties of our 18th and 20th Battalions engaged the attention of the enemy while digging was being carried on by other men of these battalions and detachments of our 2nd Pioneer Battalion under the direction of Lieut. Powell of the Canadian Engineers.

The following night bombing attacks were delivered by the Germans on these works, and a heavy artillery bombardment was also directed upon them. The enemy was everywhere repulsed, and in the intervals between shelling our working parties improved our trenches. Since that time the enemy has made several other determined attacks, but has met with no success.

Foe Artillery More Active.

Outside the area of St. Eloi salient the German artillery has displayed increased activity throughout the week of April 11-18. Whenever opportunity offered hostile aircraft have reconnoitered our lines, occasionally with unusual temerity, flying low over our positions. Often at night enemy machines have been heard and various coloured fires dropped from them.

Our Guns' Excellent Shooting.

On every portion of our front excellent shooting has marked the work of our artillery, whether in retaliation or in organized bombardments.

Our snipers have disputed the ascendancy of German snipers, and many hostile snipers have been accounted for or forced to abandon their favourite positions.

Bombers Repel Attacks.

On the front of one of our divisions an enemy bombing party approached one of our advanced posts. It was allowed to approach quite close, and was then driven back with a hail of bombs.

Opposite another division an attacking party of forty Germans was repulsed by bombs thrown at close range. On the following night a patrol of our 58th Battalion, under Lieut. Allan, encountered a party of Germans. Waiting until the enemy patrol came within twenty-five yards, our patrol then assailed it with bombs and the enemy party hurriedly withdrew, having suffered casualties.

Two days later another raid attempted by the enemy in this section was easily beaten off.

Military Medal For Sergt. Lawson.

Sergt. W. S. Lawson of the 11th Battery, C.F.A., has been awarded the Military Medal. On March 16, when the area of our 1st Infantry Brigade was being subjected to a severe bombardment, the telephone wires of our 11th Battery were frequently cut by bursting shells. Sergt. Lawson went out several times under heavy fire and restored the broken communications, thus enabling his battery to continue its controlled fire. In this dangerous work he was assisted by Gunner Hampson, who eventually was mortally wounded. Sergt. Lawson aided his comrade to reach the cover of a hedge, and at great personal risk stayed with him and dressed his wounds.

Non-Jury Sittings Open To-morrow

Four Criminal and One Civil Case Make Up The List.

The regular non-jury sittings of the Supreme Court will open here tomorrow at 1 o'clock before His Honour Sir Glenholme Falconbridge, Chief Justice of the King's Bench Division.

Four criminal cases are listed for hearing. One of the cases is a new trial granted in the case of Sandford Lindsay, who was found guilty of incest, while the other three concern Lindsay and his wife, arising out of the death of their daughter.

The Civil List.

The only civil list to be tried is that in which E. C. McLeod sues W. A. McIlmoyle for $4,655, due, it is alleged under an agreement dated at Peterborough September 16, 1912, whereby he promised to pay to the plaintiff $3,800 and interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent. Demand was made and payment refused. The plaintiff also claims interest from July 8th, 1915, till judgment.

The defendant claims that the agreement was entered into without consideration and was to repay the purchase price of certain lands in the city of Edmonton, Alberta, and expired at one year, and the defendant had offered to carry out the terms of the agreement if the lands in question were reconveyed to him. The defendant also claims the Statute of Frauds to the plaintiff's claim.

Grand Jury Report.

The grand jury will present their special report on the conditions found among the people in the back townships as requested by Chief Justice Mulock at the last jury sittings.

The petit jurors who served at the last sittings will also have to report for service in order that the criminal cases may be disposed of.

LOUIE KYLE'S BODY SWEPT OUT TO THE LAKE

ISLINGTON, April 24.—The finding of Louie Kyle's sweater coat at the mouth of Mimico Creek, or two miles from the scene of the double drowning here on April 15, has convinced the parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Kyle, that the body has been carried out into the lake and its recovery is not now very likely.

The remains of the sister, Matty, were laid to rest Saturday afternoon at Forest Lawn cemetery, after a public service in the Methodist Church here. Rev. C. S. Applegath, the pastor, said the double drowning would direct attention to the value of child life as no other thing could, and he closed with an earnest plea for supervised playgrounds.

Young People's Band Delighted Cobourg

The Young People's Band of the Salvation Army did not return on Saturday, as intended, but were pressed to stay for the week-end at Cobourg, and did so. The crowds were immense, and enjoyed the boys' playing very much indeed, and gave liberally in the offering.

The playing of the boys, according to many opinions expressed yesterday, compared very favourably with the military band connected with the battalion there.

The boys returned in fine fettle from their three days' trip, and are ready for another one.

Funeral of Late David Wallace

Took Place on Saturday Afternoon From The Family Residence to The Little Lake Cemetery

The funeral of the late David Wallace took place on Saturday afternoon from the family residence, 267 Reid street, to the Little Lake cemetery. The arrangements were in charge of the Independent Order of Foresters, the pall-bearers being Brothers A. Aldison, W. G. McKee, J. W. Buyers, W. Brown, F. Redpath, A. Gillespie. Brother Rev. Canon Davidson conducted a beautiful service at the house and also the burial service at the cemetery. The floral tributes were numerous and beautiful, testifying to the esteem in which the deceased was held by his friends and brethren.

The late Mr. Wallace was born in Millbrook on Oct. 11th, 1850, and came to Peterborough 25 years ago, where he had resided as a respected citizen even since, working at the carpenter trade.

He was a faithful member of St. John's Church, and Past Chief Ranger of Court Chemong 580 I.O.F., which bestowed many honours on him and appointed him on several occasions as delegate to the High Court of Eastern Ontario.

He was married nearly 30 years ago to Margaret Cunningham, who is left to mourn his loss. He also leaves to mourn his loss four daughters, Mrs. Geo. Hillier, St. Catharines, and Lulu, Muriel and Stella, at home; also two brothers, Richard, of Lakefield, and George, of Spanish Boon. His wife and family have the sincere sympathy of the community in their bereavement through the loss of husband and father.

New Faces in The 57th Band

Lieut. Gliddon Had About Thirty Men Out on Parade Yesterday

Bandmaster Gliddon wore a broad smile when about thirty players turned out yesterday afternoon for the celebration in Central Park. Who said the 57th Band was dead? Not a bit of it. "Keep the Home Fires Burning," Till the Boys Come Home, Mr. R. J. Dovey trudged along endeavouring to straighten out a massive G. E. flat alto, Mr. J. M. Greene grunted bravely through a big bass, ably flanked by Mr. Will Cunningham, and Mr. Asa Hurcke successfully navigated the dangerous street corners with his long trombone. Since the instruments came home the band has had two practices and is preparing to take up whatever playing is required when the call comes to the gallant boys of the 93rd under Bandmaster Hughes. The men played in mufti yesterday, but uniforms will soon be here. When Mr. Bob Beach, the player of drums, saw the line-up he nearly collapsed, after gasping out "Look who's here," but recovered sufficient breath to take part in the parade.

Presentation to Mr. Sam. Whitehouse

An interesting presentation was made to Mr. Sam Whitehouse on Saturday evening, April 22nd, at the family home, No. 135 Hunter street. Quite unexpectedly a number of the intimate friends of the popular young bugler of the Belmont 52nd Batt., learning of his presence in the city, made an informal call at his home and presented him with a valuable alluminum Wrist Watch and a very compact Soldiers' Companion, accompanied by the following address:

Mr. Sam Whitehouse:

Dear Sam,—We, the undersigned citizens and friends, take this opportunity of expressing our esteem and respect in which you are held by us, and ask as a small token of same, your acceptance of this Wrist Watch and Soldiers' Companion.

While we very much regret the loss of your presence in our midst, we congratulate you on your courage by taking the stand you have on hearing the call of your King and Empire in this its hour of need.

We are confident you will do your duty as a soldier and bring credit upon your family and to the city of which you belong.

Our fervent prayers are that you may be spared to return to us so that in years to come you may look back with pride upon the day you were ready to sacrifice your life in the cause of justice and right.

The surprised young bugler was very much elated at the thoughtfulness of his well-wishers, and said: "I feel that I am not deserving of all this kindness. However I can assure you I shall prize these gifts very much indeed, and every time I look at this watch, or use this soldiers' companion I shall think of the dear friends I have left behind in Peterbrough. I thank you for your confidence in me, and I will try to do my duty as a soldier."

Splendidly Sung Easter Music

The vesper music on Easter Sunday at the Church of the Sacred Heart was exceptionally well sung. The choral "Regina Ceolis" was a splendid number, and two of the solos were outstanding features. Miss Minnie Allen sang the "Magnificat" and Mr. Ed. Bartley "O Salutaris," soprano and baritone, respectively; were beautiful numbers. The Easter music this year was perhaps better than anything that has been previously done in the south end church, and is a matter of satisfaction to the organist and leader, Mr. John Armstrong.

Use of Tobacco Tends To Cause Hardening of Arteries, He Says

By SAMUEL G. DIXON, M.D. LL.D (Pennsylvania Commissioner of Health).

Despite the almost universal indulgence and the praises that have been sung of the soothing effect of tobacco, science condemns it and offers an imposing array of experiments to prove the ill effects which follow its use.

Tobacco is a drug which contains powerful poisons. Its charm lies in its drug effect. If it has any beneficial effect they are not discoverable to the scientific investigator.

On the other hand there are certain decided results tending to physical deterioration, which are readily recognisable. It is a heart depressant and experiments on animals have shown that it has a tendency to produce hardening of the arteries.

Some of the foremost authorities have made clinical observations which indicate that the use of tobacco has similar effects on man.

As is generally the case in the use of drugs there is a tendency to increasing indulgence.

Those who have had experience in athletics are familiar with the fact that the use of tobacco results in interference with the breathing by depressing the heart action.

There are other affections common to smokers.

To make a summary in brief the results of all scientific investigations seem to prove conclusively that the use of tobacco is distinctly harmful to the majority of men.

Red River Again Rises—District Also Inconvenienced.

WINNIPEG, April 24.— Winnipeg and surrounding district is again inconvenienced by flood conditions. The waters of the Red River have risen several inches in the last few hours. Portions of Norwood and St. Boniface proper are under water.

On several streets the houses on either side are partly submerged. Around St. Boniface Hospital conditions are bad, and boats are being used by some of the residents.

LIZARDS ON GIRLS' BACKS.

Stenciled Designs on Fair Skin is Newest Fad in New York.

Art, literature, the stage and Greenwich village were well represented at the fancy costume ball of the Society of American Fakers, but what attracted most attention was the stencilings on bare arms and shoulders of about 20 per cent. of the girls, says the New York World. Fully half of the 1,600 present were pretty girls, so a lot of the new fad art was on exhibition. There were little lizards, skull and crossbones, stars, flowers, birds and other designs. Some of the girls explained the figures were affixed to the flesh by a sort of sticking plaster process, which enables the wearer to stencil herself.

The English language has only eighty-two sounds, despite its millions of words.

Races Meet At Marseilles To Depend France

MARSEILLES, March 16.—Despite the brilliantly illuminated streets and gay, jostling, heterogeneous crowds that crowd them at all hours, one feels much closer to the fighting line here than in Paris.

A seemingly interminable stream of rumbling munition carts, with perspiring British Tommies swearing profusely at their tired mounts; squads of German prisoners under guard; two rollicking "Hieland" pipers playing a skirl on the bagpipes, accompanied by a squat Senegalese on a mournful lute, to an admiring audience of little brown Gurkhas.

Tall, stalwart, turbaned Indians, and slant eyed Tonkinese; a tired little mother clothed in rags and followed by a nondescript brood of young ones, each hungrily munching a crust of bread—Montenegrin refugees recently arrived; all the weird phantasmagoria of the war passes down the Cannebier, or main street.

PREJUDICES BROKEN DOWN

"For the east is east and the west is west, and never the twain shall meet," no longer holds true. A national calamity has broken down the century old barriers of distrust and misunderstanding.

The mother country knows and appreciates the loyalty and self-sacrifice of her distant possessions, while the colonies in their turn have come to realize the difficulties and racial prejudices suffered by those "at home." Parent and child drawn together by a mutual need have met on a common footing for the first time, and the meeting place has been Marseilles.

Familiar ocean liners, now transformed into grey transports, lie at anchor in the harbour, awaiting an opportunity to engulf the miniature skyscrapers of munitions standing on the wharves or to discharge their precious cargo of human freight.

APPARENT CHAOS ON DOCKS

Along the miles of docks, apparent chaos reigns. The casual spectator sees nothing beyond the huge travelling steel cranes, whining complainingly under a too heavy load, and the stevedores and longshoremen (their khaki or blue jumpers the only sign that they are soldiers.)

A diminutive little man, little more than a mere boy, as his embryo moustache testifies, sitting quietly on a bale of hay, is the master mind directing the whole operation. The bale of hay is his headquarters where he issues instructions not through a telephone, as on the Bring line, but through the medium of a tall, red-faced sergeant with a decided brogue. This was a quiet oasis in a roaring bedlam.

BECOMES A ROUTINE TASK.

"Oh, no, we are not very busy to-day," he replied in answer to my exclamation of wonder at the efficiency to be found on all sides. "You should have seen us when the boys were 'getting' off to Saloniki. Then we in the Army Service corps were a bit pushed.

"To-day and everyday for the past week we have only been loading detail shipments. After a while it gets to be pretty much of a routine job, and a thankless one at that, especially when the 'C.O's' (commanding officer's) luggage goes astray."

I asked if the recent activity of the enemy's submarines off Marseilles had hindered to any appreciable extent the transportation of troops and munitions.

"That is not in our line so I can't say," he replied. "As soon as a boat slips its moorings our responsibility ceases, and we leave the rest to those chaps over there. And a jolly fine lot they are, too," he said, pointing to a knot of French sailors awaiting a tender to take them aboard one of the gray,, snake-like torpedo destroyers lying in the outer harbor with steam up.

Here was a lieutenant, certainly not over 25, in command of from eight hundred to a thousand men, accepting his responsibility and doing his bit with a quiet efficiency which a man twice his age might have envied. He was just enough "find" of the war.

Marseilles might also be termed the city of mystery. One feels the tenseness of the battle fronts, which is accounted for by the three camps situated just outside the city.

Sometimes these camps are teeming with men, horses, munitions, and their campfires at night make a glow in the sky; then suddenly the order comes, and the camp so recently filled to capacity is empty of everything before dawn, the pacing sentries the only testimony of its recent tenancy.

All day and all night the trains rumble past, whistling shrilly as they leave on their journey toward the unknown destination. They are the land battleships travelling under sealed orders.

WOMAN WILL GO FREE.

If She Grows Hair on Judge's Bald Spot.

If Mme. Georgia George, manufacturer of a hair tonic, can produce signs of a new growth on the head of Police Judge Oppenheim of San Francisco, the charge against her of violating the food and drug act will be dismissed. Otherwise she may be severely dealt with, according to the court.

Mme. George was haled before the court to explain why she had mislabelled her product by announcing that it would grow hair on an absolutely bald head.

"That's not a mis-statement, your Honour," said the defendant. "That can be done."

"Show me," answered Judge Oppenheim.

"With pleasure," said the witness.

And from now on the judge's bald spot will be watched with considerable interest.

GOOD WORK

Proper Food Makes Marvellous Changes.

Providence is sometimes credited with directing the footsteps by so simple a way as the reading of a food advertisement.

A lady writes, "I was compelled to retire from my school teaching because I was broken down with nervous prostration.

"I suffered agony in my back and was in a dreadfully nervous condition, irritable, with a dull, heavy headache continually, had no appetite and could scarcely digest anything. I was unable to remember what I read and was, of course, unfit for my work.

"One day, as if by providence, I read the testimonial of a lady whose symptoms were much the same as mine, and she told of how Grape-Nuts food had helped her, so I concluded to try it.

"I began with Grape-Nuts, a little fruit, and a cup of Postum. I steadily improved in both body and mind. Grape-Nuts has done more for me than all the medicine I have ever taken. I am now well again and able to do anything necessary in my work.

"My mind is clearer and my body stronger than ever before. "There's a Reason." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

"Within 4 Inches of Being Killed"

ROCHESTER, April 24.—"I came within four inches of being killed," testified Giuseppi Benetti in his action for 500 damages against Irving E. Smith, before Judge Delbert C. Hebbard and a jury in Municipal court. Benetti meant had he been four inches behind the position he was in when Smith's automobile struck his wheel, he would not be in the courtroom to-day. As Benetti does not speak or understand English well, an interpreter was necessary.

Benetti said he was riding his bicycle in Lake avenue near White street on September 30, 1915, when Smith, driving his automobile, tried to turn into White street. The plaintiff passing at the same time got in the way of Smith's car and a collision resulted. The plaintiff was not struck by the car, but the rear wheel of his bicycle came in contact with the front of the automobile. The cycle was twisted around, throwing the rider to the pavement. Benetti says he was going slow and the defendant was going fast.

The bicyclist maintains he was severely bruised and suffers great pain. His wheel suffered more than that, for he says it was wrecked. He adds he could not work for some time and the wheel is a total loss. Five hundred dollars would cover the entire affair according to Benetti's viewpoint.

Capt. Burnham Gave Address

Anniversary of Langemarck Observed at George St. Methodist Church

The anniversary of Langemarck was observed in George street Methodist church last eveing by several unusual features, the pulpit being occupied by Capt. J. H. Burnham, M. P., paymaster of the 93rd Battalion, while the band of the 93rd, under the direction of Bandmaster Hughes, assisted in the music. There was a very large congregation present and many khaki clad officers and men were noticed throughout the church. Before the service opened the band gave a beautiful rendition of "In the Chapel." Sacred music was provided by the choir of the church, Mrs. J. H. Renwick contributing a solo, while a double quartette sang "Abide With Me" very sweetly.

Capt. Burnham made an earnest plea for recruits for the 93rd Battalion. He remarked that the situation was serious and stated that the reason that the Russians had to be brought to the western front was because there was not enough Canadians there.

The speaker referred to the outfits supplied to the Canadian soldiers. It was a shame, he said, that a soldier should have to pay for a pair of boots because they were of poor material and did not last so long as the government thought they should. Neither should he have to pay for his clothes of the same calibre. Yet in the 93rd 40 pairs of boots and nearly 100 uniforms had been condemned since Jan. 1st. He thought the government should pay for replacing these or else see that the men got proper equipment in the first place.

As a tribute to the memory of the Peterborough boys who died at Langemarck the congregation stood while the band of the 93rd played the Dead March in "Saul." The National Anthem was sung at the close of the service while the band played "O Canada" as a processional.

Arrest Man on Suspicion in Another Case, Prisoner Gives Fight

Overpowered When He Attempts to Reach Loaded Revolver.

BALTIMORE, April 24.—A man, giving his name as Edward J. Quigley, having in his possession all the securities stolen from a mail van on a ferry boat at New York on February 26, was arrested here. The arrest was a piece of good luck by the postal authorities. Edward J. Quigley was seized on suspicion of being Louis for raising money orders. Quigley was seized on suspicion of being wanted in St. Louis for raising money orders. Quigley fought against arrest, and tried to get a loaded pistol from his pocket, but was overpowered by the inspectors.

When told to open his grip, Quigley protested, and said he could not be made to give it up. It contained a large bundle with old newspapers for a wrapping. Inside were found certificates of stock of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, New York City stock, and other securities of aggregate face value of $400,000. A sight draft for $28,000, drawn on S. B Chapin & Co. of New York, by Smith Lockhart & Co. of Baltimore, was also found in the satchel attached to certificates for one hundred shares of Union Pacific and one hundred shares of Northern Pacific stock.

Quigley said that the satchel had been left on the train by a man and woman, who got off at Philadelphia, and that he took it. He said that he is 36 years old, and lives in New York.

An Appreciation of Rev. Dr. Marsh

The Examiner.

It is with much sorrow that I learn from the columns of the various papers of the death of the Hon. J. R. Stratton.

During my seven years in Springville I learned to know him very well. I went to him on several occasions for financial aid in behalf of people in difficulty. He always gave; and always gave more than I expected, and would say each time "If that is not enough come back again." He was a great help to our Peterborough Centre of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada; encouraging us; entertaining us on his private grounds; and when I was soliciting funds with which to purchase a telescope he generously gave it all. Thus Peterborough has to his memory the splendid instrument called by the Society on the night of presentation "The Stratton Telescope." For this generous gift the General Council of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada placed his name on "The Honour List" as a life member.

Mr. Stratton was much beloved by the Springville congregation. He was always ready with his speech to encourage and his purse was opened freely when an opportunity occurred. Mr. Stratton was a man of honour, integrity and noble of soul. In his demise a great and good man has fallen.

HOUND SHOOTS HUNTER.

Strikes Gun Trigger and Lead of Shot Pierces Smith's Breast.

Norman Smith, twenty-three, was taken to the Orange County Farms Hospital at Goshen, N.Y., as the result of an accident which occurred while he was hunting foxes. Smith stoped to rest, placing the stock of the gun on the ground and leaning on the barrel. One of his three hounds struck the trigger, causing the gun to discharge a load of shot, which entered Smith's left breast and came out above the shoulder blade.

He was able to walk to a farm house, where he fell from weakness caused by loss of blood.

Germany Must Seek Stupendous Loan When Peace Comes

British Statician Shows Foe Country to be in Desperate Financial [illegible] Straits.

LONDON, April 22.—Juggling stupendous figures to show that Germany is in desperate financial straits Edmond Crammond, well-known British statistician, declared here to-day that the Kaiser will seek a gigantic foreign loan at the conclusion of peace.

"This means, in effect," said Crammond, "that Germany will repudiate her internal war debt. Germany's expenditures to date amount to about $9,595,000,000, while her estimated national wealth in 1913 was about $75,000,000,000.

"Germany's investments abroad amount to $5,800,000,000, of which about $750,000,000 have been sold in the United States and the remainder are unrealizable. Germany's colonies are gone; her shipping industry is ruined.

"I do not believe Germany is living and fighting solely on what she is producing. She is living on the fat she has accumulated during the last forty years.

The decline in the exchange value of the mark and the failures which are taking place among the large banks, despite frantic efforts of the Government to keep the financial machine going point to the approach of the greatest finacial debacle the world has ever seen."

Turning to the British financial problem, Crammond asserted that a tariff for revenue purposes here is absolutely essential to the "preservation of the balance of our economic system."

He points to Britain's outlay, to date — $5,920,000,000 including the gross expenditure and the loans to Dominions, Allies and repayments to the Bank of England, declaring:

"We overcame the financial difficulties of the first eighteen months of war with astounding ease, but the outlook for the coming finacial year gives cause for anxiety.

Figuring in the newly established Excess Profits Tax which he estimates will bring in about $500,000,000, Crammond says that if the national income for the coming year should only reach a sum as estimated for the year ending March, 1916 the government's financial deficiency at the end of Marh, 1917, will be about $4,690,000,000, "which makes a tariff for revenue imperative."

If the war lasts until March 31st, 1917, the statistician estimates that the expenditures of the various allied powers approximately will be:

Belgium	$2,500,000,000
France	12,500,000,000
Great Britain	13,000,000,000
Italy	2,500,000,000
Russia	12,000,000,000
Servia and Montenegro	500,000,000
Total	$43,000,000,000

As a measure of exacting a penalty on Germany for these expenditures Crammond suggests that the Allies should pool their indemnities and present them in a lump to Germany, also, that each allied power should undertake to impose:

"A war debt export duty on all exports of raw materials to Germanic empires."

"In addition," says Crammond, "the maritime powers should impose supplementary war debt dues on all German and Austrian shipping entering their ports in all parts of the world.

MANY 12-INCH NAVAL GUNS FOUND USELESS

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The Navy Department has reached the conclusion, from experience with the guns on the Michigan at the recent battle target practise, that many 12-inch guns of the navy have outlived their usefulness.

It was announced to-day that nearly all the Michigan's guns will be replaced before the ship puts to sea again.

A Resolution Of Condolence

Liberal Association for West Peterboro Records Its Deep Sorrow At The Death of The Hon. J. R. Stratton

The following resolution was adopted at a meeting of the Executive of the Liberal Association for West Peterborough:

Moved by R. R. Hall seconded by G. A. Gillespie—

WHEREAS, this special meeting of the Executive of the Liberal Association for West Peterborough desires to record its deep sorrow and distinct loss owing to the sad and unexpected death of the late Honourable J. R. Stratton who for so many years was its successful leader and most distinguished member.

His genial manner, his public spirit, his profound respect for the rights of minorities and his sympathy and help for those in distress are well known to all who knew him, but it was owing to his ability, his foresight, his perseverance and his fortitude that he achieved such remarkable success in the industrial, financial and political activities of his native province.

At the early age of twenty-nine he was elected a member of the Local Legislature in 1886 and in the next succeeding five general elections he was elected each time with increasing majorities.

He filled with great executive ability the office of Provincial Secretary from 1900 to 1904, and his administration of his high office was so business like in its methods, and he was so prudent in the expenditure of the millions of public funds under his control that even his opponents never accepted his challenge to point to one single dollar that had been improperly expended by the Department over which he presided.

His career as a member of the Dominion Parliament from 1908 to 1911 was altogether too short, and his long subsequent illness was profoundly regretted by all.

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, that the executive of this Association record its deep sorrow and distinct loss owing to the death of the late Honourable J. R Stratton and extends to his sorrowing widow, his brother and his sisters their warmest sympathy in their sad bereavement, and in an especial degree to the mourning partner of his life, who was his devoted helpmate during his varied and eventful career.

IT IS FURTHER RESOLVED, that a copy of this resolution be engrossed and sent to Mrs. Stratton.

(Sgd.) J. J. HARTLEY,
President.
(Sgd.) G. N. GORDON,
Secretary.

There are 6,873 foreign residents in Yokohama, according to the figures recently compiled by the police authorities. Of these, 569 are citizens of the United States, 4,061 of China, 1,250 of Great Britain, 366 of Germany and 180 of France.

Hitherto the postage stamps of the Chinese Post Offices were ordered from foreign countries. In view of the war in Europe it has become difficult for the government to import new supplies. The Ministry of Finance has decided that postage stamps are to be manufactured and printed by the Government Engraving Bureau at Peking.

The value of farm implements and machinery in the United States is $1,396,224,000.

EASTER DAY AT ST. LUKE'S CHURCH

Large Congregations Present at All Services Yesterday—Special Music By the Choir

Easter Day at St. Luke's Church, Ashburnham, was marked by services of a specially bright and inspiring character. Large congregations were present throughout the day, the number of communicants being 260. The Rector preached both morning and evening, his discourse at evensong having a fitting and eloquent reference to the memorial of the day.

In the afternoon the usual Easter Day children's service was held in the church, where the members of the Sunday School were addressed by Rev. Mr. White and the offerings of their Lenten self-denial boxes was made. The children then marched to Central Park, where they took part in the united memorial service.

The Easter music at St. Luke's was splendidly rendered by the choir, under the capable direction of Mrs. W. A. Greenslade. At matins the anthem was "They have taken away my Lord," the solo parts being sung by Miss Phyllis Dawson and Messrs. Carter and W. A. Greenslade. At evensong, during the offertory, the choir sang "Ye Choirs of New Jerusalem," with a contralto solo by Mrs. A. A. Perrin.

Easter flowers in the chancel yesterday were sent by relatives, in memory of two former prominent members of the church, the late G. F. Warde and Pte. Merton Adams, who passed away during the year.

Egyptian Village is Evacuated By British

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, April 24.—An attack by 3,000 hostile troops forced the British to evacuate the village of Qustia, in Egypt, yesterday, the War Office admitted this afternoon. A simultaneous attack against the village of Dueidar was beaten off.

3,000 TRIBESMEN AGAINST BRITISH.

The fact that three thousand hostile troops were engaged against the British in an attempt against a single village, leads to the belief that a large force of tribesmen have resumed the campaign against the British.

German Air Raider Was Driven Off

Newton Was Prepared To Kill Mr. Morgan

Man Said to be Munition Worker in St. Catharines Will Appear To-morrow.

NEW YORK, April 24.—Harry L. Newton, said to be a former munitions worker in St. Catharines, Ont., who was arrested here Thursday, after entering into an alleged agreement to blow up a munitions plant, was prepared to kill J. P. Morgan, according to an affidavit submitted yesterday in the Tombs Police Court. On the strength of this document Newton was held for examination on Tuesday.

In the affidavit made by Lieut. Detective Barnitz and corroborated by Felix W. Galley, a Fifth avenue contractor, it is sworn that Newton promised to kill Mr. Morgan, if well paid for it, by running an automobile at full speed into the banker's car. If this scheme failed Newton promised, according to the affidavit, to carry a time bomb into Mr. Morgan's offices and leave it there. Newton declaring, Barnitz swore, that he could accomplish this by displaying a button inscribed "In His Majesty's Service," which he used while working in the Canadian munitions factory.

Newton was held in the court yesterday on a charge of violating a section of the penal code dealing with "an attempt to commit a crime." Bail was fixed at $5,000.

The police talked with the manager of a St. Catharines, Ont., firm over the long-distance telephone yesterday, and learned that Newton had been employed as a foreman at forty-five cents an hour until April 7, when he was discharged because work in all departments was slack.

WEDDING BELLS

MARKS—NICHOLLS

On Saturday, April 22nd, a quiet wedding took place at the Baptist parsonage, 255 Ried Street, when Archibald T. O. Marks, Lieutenant of the 91st Battalion, which is now stationed at St. Thomas, was united in marriage to Miss Helen H., eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Nicholls, 571 Bethune Street, Peterborough.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dougald Brown. They were unattended. Mr. Marks, previous to his enlistment, spent three years at Woodstock College, Woodstock, preparing himself for the Gospel ministry. Having heard the call of King and Country he enlisted at London. The young couple will be greatly missed in Park Street Church, of which they are both members. Miss Nicholls is a teacher in the Sunday School and was also a member of the choir of which her father is the leader and organist.

The happy couple will reside in London after the end of May.

WHITE—BLACK.

A pretty military wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Black, Byersville, Thursday, April 20th at eight o'clock, when their youngest daughter became the charming bride of Private Percy White of the 93rd Battalion. The bride entered the sitting room on the arm of her father to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by Mrs. Thomas Poole. She wore a dress of a beautiful coral silk with pearl trimming and carried a bouquet of pink and white carnations, her bridesmaid who also looked charming, was Miss Agnes Jarvie, and the best man was Private Stuart of the 93rd.

After the ceremony, which took place under the Union Jack, they all sat down to a dainty wedding supper the table being prettily decorated with Easter lillies. They received many beautiful and useful wedding presents, including a beautiful piece of silver from the bridegroom's platoon.

The bride belongs to a very patriotic family. Her three brothers are soldiers, Private A. Black in France with the 8th Mounted Rifles and Private Archie Black also in France with the 8th Mounted Rifles, and Private James Black of the 93rd, and her three sisters' husbands also are fighting, one being Private Arnold Woods, 8th Mounted Rifles.

The wedding was solemnized by the Rev. Mackenzie, Knox church. After a jolly evening of music and games in which the boys in khaki played a prominent part, and after wishing all good luck to Private Percy and Mrs White, all joined in Auld Lang Syne and God Save the King.

OBITUARY

MRS. G. ARMSTRONG.

The death occurred yesterday at her late residence, 193 Westcott Street, of Mrs. Lottie Armstrong, wife of Mr. George Armstrong, at the age of fifty-three years. The deceased was well known and highly respected and her death will be deeply regretted by all who knew her.

Her husband, three sons and one daughter are left to mourn her loss. The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon at 4.15 to the Little Lake Cemetery.

MRS. JOHN EDMISON.

The death occurred in Toronto on Saturday of Charlotte Elizabeth Sherwood, wife of the late John Edmison, of Peterborough. Deceased, who was in her 69th year, resided with her son, Rev. J. H. Edmison, 78 Hogarth avenue, Toronto.

The funeral will take place in Peterborough to-morrow.

MRS. JAMES TULLY.

The death occurred in Selwyn yesterday of Lottie Bell, daughter of Mr. Matthew Bell, postmaster at Selwyn, and wife of Mr. James Tully. Deceased, who was twenty-nine years of age, had been ill but a short time.

The deceased is survived by her father and husband, also seven children, namely, William, Maxwell, Irwin, Roy, Jennie, Cora and the baby. The funeral will take place on Tuesday from the family residence, Selwyn, at two o'clock. The cortege will leave the house at two-thirty o'clock.

Friends will accept this notice as an invitation to attend.

A new vegetable, known as the dasheen, is said to be a very nutritious and agreeable food.

WIFE GUARDS NIJINSKI

Chaperoned by his wife, who declared New York positively unsafe for any man, Wainslaw Nijinski, the Russian dancer, said to be the most graceful man on earth, arrived in New York with Kyra, their year-old daughter, on the French liner Espagne.

Right at his side, clinging to his arm, was Mme. Nijinski. This is her first visit to New York, but she shows all about the perils of the town and the slim chance for a young man.

"New York is absolutely unsafe for men," declared madame, as she clung to hubby's arm. "I am going to be at my husband's side all during our stay here. I will be with him on the sidewalks of the boulevards, streets and avenues. Petrograd and Paris are all right, but New York is not safe."

Nijinski is fresh from a war prisoner's camp in Austria. At the outbreak of the war he was interned. His daughter, Kyra, was born in Budapest while he was a captive. Madame said the Austrians refused to furnish any milk for the baby, so Kyra was raised on chocolate and sugar.

"It's Our Business We Know How"

Russia With 1,500,000 Newly Trained Men, Becomes a Real Factor in Three War Theatres

While Tsar's Commanders in Europe Will Devote Their Energies This Summer to Wearing Down Austro-Germans, Grand Duke Nicholas Will Seek Decision in Asiatic Turkey---Importance of Trebizond as a Base---Next Big Struggle For Town Baibart.

THREE REASONS SUGGESTED

LONDON, April 25.— What tremendous possibilities lie behind the impenetrable veil that is hiding the real Russia?

What wonders have been worked from Moscow to Vladivostock since the stand on the Dvina last September?

Aided by England's millions and military commissions from France and Britain, what has been done to whip into form, arm and equip the limitless man power of the Muscovite empire?

As men see it who follow the ghastly game of war, on the answers to these three questions largely depends the course of events in the field in the next six months.

No person outside the allied council can say with authority that this thing or that has been done. Some facts, however, stand out to guide to an estimate of the force Russia will exert in the approaching campaign.

By the ukase of the Tsar, issued soon after he assumed chief command of his armies last autumn, 1,500,000 men were called to the colours for winter training. These conscripts were in their training camps by November 1. In the ordinary course of training they would be ready for incorporation in the old cadres or be organized into new units by May 1. The only circumstances that would prevent would be the continued dearth of officers, both commissioned and non-commissioned, which has been one of the most severe handicaps of the army organization. There is reason to believe, however, that in a large measure this handicap has been overcome by a system of intensive schooling, at which British and French officers have assisted.

But these men are useless as fighting factors unless they are provided with rifles and ammunition and unless they have artillery to back them up. The lack of these two items was the primary reason for the Russian disasters last summer. Has this lack been supplied?

Reserves of Munitions.

Evidence accumulates that it has. The arsenals at Cronstadt, Moscow and Odessa have been greatly enlarged and have been turning out war supplies at a speed equal to those in Western Europe. Virtually every machine shop and foundry in every city in the country has been equipped in the last year with facilities for contributing to the general war needs. The transport system over the Trans-Siberian Railway has been improved and three to eight trains a day have moved westward from the Pacific coast carrying the product of Japanese and American arsenals. The winter, too, has seen the port of Archangel clean of its vast accumulation of freight and more than one hundred vessels now are awaiting an ice clear harbour to discharge their cargoes of munitions of every character.

The general quickening of industry at home and the large imports are believed here to have put Russia in excellent condition for fighting. There is no inclination to say that she is ready for a general and sustained offensive, for that is hardly probable. The combined reserve resources of Britain and France last September permitted an offensive in full strength for no more than three days on a three hundred mile front. It is too much to expect then, that Russia; just beginning to feel her power, would be ready so soon for a serious drive along the eight hundred miles on which she is standing.

What the observers do expect for the next few months is a strategy that calls for an offensive defence. In other words, Germany and Austria-Hungary are expected to undertake active offensive operations as soon as the terrain is in condition for army manoeuvres. Russia, in that event, will hold to her positions, using all the resources necessary to the purpose, and in her turn undertake counter offensives when conditions are favourable at any point of the front. Unless there are unanticipated signs of Austro-German collapse it is almost certain Russia will not develop her offensive plans in her main theatre to the point of seeking a decisive action this summer.

Logical Russian Strategy.

Far more than for France and Britain in the west, General Joffre's "nibbling" policy is regarded as the logical Russian strategy this summer. She will have all the men and all the ammunition she needs for an active defence, but it is to be doubted if she will have the reserves to prosecute such schemes as in the end would be a bid for a definite decision.

These views hold good for the European theatre. In Asia Minor, on the contrary, Grand Duke Nicholas is certain to prosecute his campaign relentlessly. In the capture of Trebizond on Monday he achieved the most important victory since he occupied Erzerum. For centuries the port on the Black Sea has been the gateway to the caravan routes to Armenia and Persia. Russian armies for two centuries have fought to control it. It is the water terminal of two projected railways to the interior, one to Erzerum and one to Pingan, the latter, also, projected to the Gulf of Alexandretta.

Trebizond is the base needed for a sharp and forceful offensive against the Osmanli. With the Black Sea controlled now by the Russian fleet, its indifferent harbour will serve as a way station for a stream of men and supplies from Odessa and Sebastopol, eliminating the long, tedious and expensive route through Tiflis to Batum or Kars and across the Caucasus.

Fully recognizing the importance of their port, the Turks made extraordinary efforts to defend it. Under the most adverse conditions they brought up three divisions from Constantinople and Aleppo to garrison the hastily improvised fortified works. Their first stand was made in the vicinity of Risch, about thirty miles from Trebizond. Defeated here, they fell back gradually until they reached the Kara Dere, fourteen miles away, where they made their most stubborn defence. Russian attacks here were repulsed for more than a week, but a week ago yesterday the Russians succeeded in crossing the stream and reaching the main highway to the port. After that the Turks interposed only strong rear guards to delay the advance until the town could be cleared of its military stores and the safety of the main army was assured.

Struggle About Baibart.

The movement of the Turkish columns after the evacuation of Trebizond is somewhat in doubt, but it seems they divided, a part falling back to the west and south-west of the port, while the remainder, by forced marches, crossed the coast range of mountains by the Baibart road and joined the force that is defending the latter town from the Russian column that crossed the frontier from Batum just before Erzerum was occupied. This Russian force has been held outside Baibart since that time, having been unable to carry the extremely strong natural positions in which the Turks are intrenched. Baibart, on a plateau six thousand feet above sea level and surrounded on all sides by rugged mountains, just now commands the whole situation, for it is the wedge on which the entire Russian wing splits.

The Russians operating in the coastal district, as distinguished from the Lake Van district, comprise, in reality, three armies and four distinct columns. The first army captured Trebizond. It was landed from transports at Witsch. The second, the force now in front of Baibourt, followed the Chorok valley from Batum. The third is the right wing of the main Caucasus army which passed through Erzerum. West of the fortress it divided, one column moving down the Tcharuk valley and the other down the Kara Sy, to reunite at Erzingan. Baibourt is midway between Trebizond and Erzingan, and until it is carried a serious advance on either side, unless in greater force than at present seems available, would lay the Russians open to disastrous flank attacks.

Severe fighting has been in progress east of Erzingan, where the Turks are offering a stubborn opposition to an advance. It seemed for a time they really had the upper hand, but in a six day battle the Grand Duke overcame the resistance sufficient to permit a slow resumption of the advance. The obvious purpose of the Russians now is to swing southwest, once they pass Erzingan, reach the desert country and strike across toward Alexandretta, cutting the routes to Mesopotamia, and at the same time obtaining the warm water port for which they have been struggling since the seventh century.

Operations in Tigris Valley.

The week's news from the British forces in the Tigris Valley has been less encouraging than it promised to be. An engagement of some consequence was fought on Tuesday and Wednesday on the south bank of the river seventeen miles east of Kut, which apparently resulted in a draw. Both the British and Turkish reports of the affair declared the adversary was the aggressor and that all attacks were repulsed with heavy losses. The Tigris itself is the greatest enemy to the armies. It is far out of its banks, is constantly rising, and many well prepared and well defended positions on both sides have been evacuated before the flood.

The most important event of the week on the western front, and in some respects one of the most significant developments of the war, was the appearance at Marseilles on Thursday of a flotilla of transports from which landed a contingent of the men or the nature of the units. From the circumstances of the disembarkation, however, it is assumed here that the force numbers between 8,000 and 10,000; certainly it does not exceed the latter figure.

The fact that the Russians were bound for France was kept a profound secret by the war council, but it is generally understood the men went on board the transports at Vladivostock.

At this time it cannot be said the presence of the Tsar's soldiers in France is a factor in the military situation, although future developments may cause this view to be changed. Only the presence of twenty or twenty-five times as many could have more

Soldiers Suffer Most Just Before Battle

The following interesting article giving the psychological study of a battle, was written by a German school teacher, who since has been killed on the Western front. The article, which appears in the German papers, has caused considerable comment:

"To describe the sensations, the emotions and the innermost feelings of the soul of a soldier in battle is an unusually interesting but difficult task. While the battle is raging a soldier is beset and agitated by thousands of thoughts that flash like lightning through his brain, but it is only during the remarkable calm that comes after a battle that he is enabled to analyze them. As I have participated in thirty-six engagements and battles, both on the Eastern and Western fronts, I have been in a position to make many observations and have made a study of the soul of the soldier. It is a great subject for the psychologist and one that opens a mine of valuable information.

"Is This Real?"

"The troops receive orders at night to prepare for a charge the next morning. The first thought is, is this real? Somehow, it seems like a dream. It is the same thought that stirs the soul in any great event in life, be it one of joy or one of sorrow. It does not seem real.

"However, when the soldier does realize that it is no nightmare, he begins to think of the likelihood of death claiming him in that battle. A strange, indescribable fear begins to agitate the soul. The awful thought pesters him that he will go to his death and leave home and loved ones and everything that is dear in a moment of time. He ponders over the subject of immortality and wonders if death comes whether it will mean eternal darkness and annihilation.

"To one who is in the prime of life, who has everything to live for, hell itself cannot offer torture to equal the terrorizing doubts that assail the soul in those dreadful moments before a battle.

"Then, too, the thoughts come that we have not made the most of life; that there is so much which we would still like to do; that if only gives the opportunity how different we would shape our life in the future.

"All night long the troops move to the front, and all night long we think of God and the uncertainty that lies directly before us.

Long Route Fear.

"Morning comes. It is a most beautiful morning; the sun shining warm and bright. The notes of a German song are wafted on the still air. It is a song of the Fatherland and all join in the chorus. It is then that we forget all our doubts and fears. A new life seems to be born within us. All fear has vanished and we are ready to go down to the gates of death unafraid.

"And then the battle. The bullets began to whistle. In those first moments every soldier naturally looks for some sheltered place for protection. Nevertheless, the soul is remarkably calm. Though comrades are falling on all sides we never for a moment think of being hit by a bullet ourselves. We keep on, running, running toward the enemy. All feeling, all thought, all emotion, all sensation is obliterated. In all the crash and thunder of artillery we go on, fearing nothing. Occasionally we hear a voice uttering a curse or a threat, due to the hate against the enemy, born anew in the thick of battle. That feeling of hate becomes uppermost. We are seized with a frenzy of rage, and our one thought is to meet the enemy face to face and annihilate him. As this hate is mingled with a certain feeling of patriotism and love for the Fatherland, the lust of battle is developed in such a manner as to quiet our nerves and forget all about danger and death.

"The battle has been fought and won. The soul experiences an indescribable peace, but when we begin to see our broken ranks and make count of our fallen comrades, painful sensations follow. Then only do we realize what danger we so callously faced, and a wave of thoughtfulness warms our blood and body.

"The feelings and sensations on emerging from a battle are like those of convalescence from a serious illness. The tired soul longs for peace and rest, and the soldier falls into a deep, sound, dreamless sleep, in which all the fear and stress and storm of the time are forgotten."

LOOK AT A CHILD'S TONGUE WHEN CROSS, FEVERISH AND SICK

Take No Chance! Move Poisons From Liver and Bowels at Once

Mothers can rest easily after giving "California Syrup of Figs," because in a few hours all the clogged-up waste, sour bile and fermenting food gently moves out of the bowels, and you can have a well, playful child again. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, and they become tightly packed, liver gets sluggish and stomach disordered.

When cross, feverish, restless, see if tongue is coated, then give this delicious "fruit laxative." Children love it, and it can not cause injury. No difference what ails your little one—if full of cold, or a sore throat, diarrhoea, stomach-ache, bad breath, remember, a gentle "inside cleansing" should always be the first treatment given. Full directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups are printed on each bottle.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," then look carefully and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." We make no smaller size. Hand back with contempt any other fig syrup.

GERMANY DECIDES TO RESTRICT SALE OF SOAP

BERLIN, April 25.—The Federal Council has authorized the Imperial Chancellor to make regulations for the sale of cards of soap, soap powder and other saponaceous compounds.

The Tageblatt says it is the intention to limit the supply of soap to 100 grams per capita monthly and of other substances of this class to 500 grams monthly.

The Federal Council also has authorized the Chancellor to take measures to assure a supply of print paper and to regulate its consumption.

FOE WASTING TROOPS FOR DEAD MAN HILL

At Least 4,000 Lost in Fierce but Vain Attacks Last Week—Silesians Suffer Heavily

(By C. F. Bertelli.)

PARIS, April 24.—Nothing in this war so far is comparable to the stupendous fury of the Mort Homme (Dead Man Hill) battle, which has be enraging fiercely for the past thirty hours.

The German Crown Prince is piling up regiment after regiment on the blood-drenched slopes of that sinister hill, which is likely to prove the graveyard of the German hopes of capturing Verdun.

To-day a clear account of the course of the battle during the past week reached me. At the beginning of the week the French held the crest of Dead Man, but the Crown Prince's batteries swept it with such a devastating fire that General Petain withdrew his front line to the southwest, south and southeast slopes.

The Germans at this time held the north and northwest slopes, and a position similar to that at Hartmann's Weilerkopf was established, with both sides unable to occupy the summit.

On Thursday, however, Gen. Petain sprang a surprise attack on the northern slopes which gave him the German trenches, his troops holding them against several sharp counter-attacks.

The Crown Prince refused to accept the result of Thursday's battle as final, and on Friday night he delivered a series of staccato blows which lasted until dawn. During this fighting some of the Saxons gained possession of Gen. Petain's most advanced trench, on the northern slopes, but a speedy counter-attack threw them out.

After this repulse to his infantry the Crown Prince ordered his guns into action. All of Saturday morning a furious fire covered every inch of the terrain between Le Mort Homme and the Bethincourt Brook.

At 2 p.m. the shelling ceased and a brigade of hardy Silesians were ordered to regain the northern slopes of Le Mort Homme.

One regiment leaped from their trenches and dashed across the interval between the trenches, but so completely did the French cannon and machine guns cover the ground that the attack was doomed to instant failure.

A second regiment of Silesians was then ordered to advance. It got farther than the first, only to suffer heavier losses. The Silesians fell thick and fast until the survivors dropped to their stomach and crawled back to their own trenches.

This brigade's losses are estimated at forty per cent., or 4,000 men. And General Petain still holds Le Mort Homme in a firm grip.

The lesson of all the fighting in the latter part of the week is that the Germans are now powerless to quell the French gunfire, and probably it is not an exaggeration to say that General Petain now has a decisive superiority in this vital respect. In other words the Easter battle has shown once and for all that the Crown Prince cannot take Verdun.

Stop German Attack.

A sanguinary episode before Fort Vaux on the eve of Good Friday demonstrated as clearly as the Mort Homme battle the deadly work of the French batteries.

The Prussian General commanding there packed his trenches with 10,000 men in readiness for a great attack, but a few minutes before it was planned to open word reached the French commander of the impending danger.

A swift telephone message to the rear unleashed every French gun, and within 60 seconds their fire was concentrated to a nicety on the compact mass of Germans huddled in their trenches in momentary expectation of an order to attack.

Every shell took a terrible toll in this work of slaughter, and the whole brigade, instead of trying to storm Fort Vaux, had to set to the rear to reform.

Dark Cereals Most Healthful.

Dr. Harvey Wiley, the famous pure food authority, has repeatedly emphasized the fact that if people would eat more of the coarse, dark cereals their health would be benefited. Certainly, those who have become regular users of Dr. Jackson's Roman Meal, the coarsest and darkest cereal food known, have had their health materially benefited. Roman Meal is more nutritious than meat, and does not turn acid like oats. It prevents indigestion, and positively relieves constipation or money refunded. Try as porridge or in the ready cooked form known as Roman Meal Nuggets. These are delicious if served with hot milk and cream.

CHILD'S HAIR BURNED OFF BY LIGHTNING

Merriton, Apr. 24.—A very strange freak of lightning was performed here a chimney on the house of Pte. H. J. Christie, 176th Overseas Battalion, being struck. The fluid entered an upstairs bedroom where two children of the soldier lay sleeping, and burned the hair off one little girl's head, but caused the child no other harm. A stovepipe was knocked down and the lightning descended to the room below, striking Pte. Christie, burning his hip, though not seriously.

Cunning and Strategy of Slav Feared

TEUTONS OFTEN OUTWITTED

Precautionary Device Employed by Kaiser's Troops to Warn Off Approach of Enemy Utilized by Slavic Foe to Obtain Password.

Though the average German soldier has the highest respect for the fighting qualities of his English and French opponents, it is the Russian, according to officers stationed in the East, who employs strategy and cunning to an unexampled degree. There are almost as many stories of Russian cleverness going the rounds as there are officers who have met with it.

In the great German drive eastward, according to Lieutenant von D——, the Germans and Russians finally took up their positions respectively on the west and east banks of a river. The Russians were not taking their defeats with equanimity, and on every possible occasion were disposed to develop counter offensive movements.

Through underground channels the Germans learned that the Russians intended, at night, to recross the bridge which, undestroyed, spanned the river, and attempted to surprise their rivals. The Germans in consequence very carefully and quietly destroyed one small section of the bridge nearest them, leaving a slight gap, and lay in wait for the Russians.

The night was fairly dark, but not so dark but that the Germans could see as the Russians suddenly turned a big, unharnessed horse loose at their end of the bridge, and with a few whip lashes started him at a gentle canter toward the German lines. Puzzled German riflemen, dying in hiding, withheld their fire as the animal advanced steadily toward them.

In a moment or two the horse reached the gap in the bridge and, with the instinct and keener sight at night possessed by animals, stopped and peered at the dark water flowing past. He paused only a moment, then turned about and trotted back to the Russian lines. The Russians made no attack that night.

At a number of points the Germans have adopted what is a very old precaution for giving warning of the approach of the enemy—the stringing of empty bottles on a wire around their positions which clink and jangle when anyone approaches and stumbles onto the wire. Unfortunately the bottles know neither friend nor foe, and clink when German sentries scouting at night strike the wire.

Formerly it was the custom of such German sentries to shout out instantly the password or parole of the day so that other centries behind the battle-strong line should know that friends were approaching and should not shoot their own men down. But Russian cunning again intervened to make even this hazardous.

The Russians, it was found, sent out little squads numbering at least one man with a knowledge of German. These squads would then conceal themselves in the marsh grass, allow German sentries to pass unmolested, and then listen carefully for the password when it was shouted out by those stumbling into the wire.

Possessed of the password, the Russian squads then would approach the German lines boldly, disarm suspicion by giving the parole correctly, and inflict at least slight damage before vanishing in the dark.

NEWMARKET MAN EXPIRES AFTER A FISHING TRIP

Mr. W. R. Bassett was Formerly a Prominent Farmer of Whitchurch Township.

NEWMARKET, April 24.—Mr. W. R. Bassett, seventy years old, formerly a prominent farmer of Whitchurch dropped dead at his home, Goreham Street, here, just after he had returned from a fishing trip to Bradford. Heart failure is belived to have been the cause of death. Mr. Bassett was a member of the A.O.U.W., the Christian Church here, and in politics a Liberal. A wife, three daughters and one son, the latter a Whitchurch farmer, survive.

CAN'T FIND DANDRUFF

Every bit of dandruff disappears after one or two applications of Danderine rubbed well into the scalp with the finger tips. Get a 25-cent bottle of Danderine at any drug store and save your hair. After a few applications you can't find a particle of dandruff or any falling hair, and the scalp will never itch.

BAVARIA FEEDING GERMANY

Has Done More Than Other German States in Supplying Cattle.

Though her imports of cattle have dwindled away to almost nothing Bavaria more than any other German state has done her share of helping to feed the rest of Germany by increasing steadily her exports.

Figures just compiled show that during the month prior to the war, with an average monthly import of 4,000 head of cattle, Bavaria exported but 13,500; increased this to 20,000 head in December, 1915; and to 40,000 head in January, 1916.

Before the war Bavaria imported on an average a million hogs a year, and now imports none. Yet during all the months of the conflict she has steadily supplied her neighbouring and allied states with the ever rarer swine. In addition she has turned over to the army on an average 24,000 head of cattle monthly.

Countless oxen have been sent from Bavaria to other parts of Germany, notably East Prussia, where they are urgently needed in place of horses. Bavaria, too, has reduced her annual use of butter to three kilograms per person, and thus is able to supply part of the 1 kilogram per person used anually in North Germany.

"You must take more recreation," said the doctor. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy, you know." "But, doctor," objected the patient, "I am in a theatre orchestra, and if I don't work I can't play, while if I don't play I can't work."

MEETING A GHOST

Old Tom Came Face to Face With It Between Decks.

SCARED THE SAILOR STIFF.

Then When He Got Wind Enough to Yell There Was a Lively Time Aboard the Old Sailing Vessel Till a Mate Ended the Mystery.

Of course there is no reason why ghosts should not be found on shipboard as often as elsewhere. As a matter of fact, Jack, who is always superstitious, sees his full share of apparitions. This amusing story, told by the ghost himself, is found in Captain John D. Whidden's "Ocean Life in the Old Sailing Days:"

Whidden, a boy of thirteen, was making his first voyage. The ship was hardly clear of land when a heavy storm set in. Whidden was feeling wretched and in carrying breakfast to the forecastle upset a pan of hot scouse on the head of "old Tom" at the foot of the companionway stairs. The cuffing he had for this did not make him feel any better. An hour or two later, when the men were sent aloft, the boy slipped down the booby hatch and was soon fast asleep among some rope, canvas and oakum that were piled against the forward bulkhead next the forecastle.

When he awoke it was dark, but light streaming through some auger holes in the bulkhead and the sound of voices brought him to his senses. He was surprised to hear the crew talking about him, as if he were dead, and discussing the manner in which he had been swept overboard. He heard old Tom say, "Well, I'm sorry I hit him, but the cub scalt every spear of hair out of my head."

He had another long sleep. When he awoke he heard the crew washing down decks and realized that he was perfectly well and very hungry. He found a barrel of apples in the lower hold, filled his pocket and shirt bosom, climbed back into his nest, ate apples and went to sleep again.

The next day old Tom was sent below to cut a piece of rope from the coils among which Whidden was hiding. While he was sawing at the rope, the boy, disturbed by the noise, peeped out of the coil of hawser in which he lay and met Tom's glance.

"With whitened face and bulging eyes," says Mr. Whidden, "he gazed at me a moment, then dropping rope and knife and emitting a series of blood-curdling yells he dashed for the booby hatch and disappeared on deck. Every one was aroused. I heard the second mate ask, 'What's broke loose with you?' and all old Tom could ejaculate was, 'I've seen him! I've seen him!'

"'Seen who?' yelled Mr. Fabens.

"'Oh, the boy's ghost! the boy's ghost!' Old Tom was nearly frightened out of his wits.

"'Mr. Fabens,' said the captain, 'get a lantern, take that fellow below and see what scared him.'

"So Mr. Fabens descended the ladder with half the crew at his back, and old Tom bringing up the rear. As they came forward the mate called out, 'Where's your ghost? I don't see any ghost.'

"Until now I had lain quiet, but feeling that I was discovered I rose up to step out of the coil. Tom gave another yell and broke for the hatch ladder, followed by half the men.

"Mr. Fabens came up, reached over, lifted me out by the collar and marched me on deck, where I was at once surrounded by officers and crew.

"Captain King stepped forward and said, 'Well, boy, where have you been for the last forty-eight hours?'

"'Between decks, sir,' I sheepishly answered.

"'What have you been doing between decks?'

"'Sleeping, sir.'

"'What, sleeping two days and nights?'

"'Not all the time, sir,' I replied.

"'Had anything to eat?'

"'Apples,' I ventured.

"'Where did you get the apples?'

"'Oh, you did! Do you know you've been broaching cargo?' and then, thinking the farce had gone far enough, for all hands were on the broad grin, he said, sternly:

"'Now go forward, boy, and if you cut any more capers like that, you'll get a rope's ending you'll remember all your life.' Then, to Mr. Fabens, he added, 'Keep him up in his day watch below for a week and give him plenty of work.'

"That ended his lecture, and I was glad it was over and that I had escaped so easily. Going forward with the men, I was pleased to see they bore me no ill feeling, not even Tom, although he might have been excused if he had done so."

Unpromising.

He was walking once past the Crimean monument in London with one of his sons, then a lad. Every one knows that the word "Crimea" is engraved on the monument. The boy pointed to the monument and to the word upon it and asked:

"Father, what is that?"

"That," said John Bright, pointing also to the word, "is a crime."

LEGENDS OR LIES?

Wars are fruitful breedings of legends, and always have been. Nor is the present war any exception to the rule.

Everybody, to cite but two instances, will be able to recall the story of the Mons angels, and that other one about the Russian soldiers who came through England from Archangel.

Possibly these yarns, and other similar ones, will be incorporated in the history-books of the future. It is a fact that stories equally without foundation are taught in our schools to-day.

Take, for example, the one about the Black Hole of Calcutta. Every schoolboy and nearly every grown-up person is familiar with the details of that ghastly story. It relates how the Nabob Suraja Dowlah shut up 146 Britons, captured by him in Calcutta Fort, in a small, unventilated dungeon, and how, after a night of agony from heat, thirst, and lack of air, only twenty-three were found alive next morning.

For more than one hundred and fifty years the story has been implicitly believed. Yet now along comes Mr. Little, and proves, in his "Bengal, Past and Present," not only that it is not true, but that it could not possibly be true.

Nine persons only were, it appears from contemporary records, confined in the "black hole," which was really the common prison, and none of these suffered any very great inconvenience. The remainder of the garrison, numbering some 120, were either killed or wounded in the fighting, and the latter were treated by their conquerors with every consideration.

Similarly, Wellington never said, "Up, Guards, and at 'em!" at Waterloo; nor did Blucher exclaim, on first seeing London, "What a place to sack!" while the phrase, "Providence favors the big battalions," which is usually attributed to Napoleon, is found in the writings of Cicero.

There never was a person named William Tell, and consequently he never shot an apple from his son's head at the bidding of the Austrian tyrant, Gessler.

The story of Queen Eleanor sucking the poison from her husband's wound during one of the Crusades is another war myth. She did not accompany her husband on the expedition in question; and, besides, the Saracens did not use poisoned arrows.

At Waterloo the commander of Napoleon's Old Guard is said to have replied to the challenge of surrender pompously: "The Old Guard dies, but it does not surrender!" In the French army, however, it is a tradition that his answer consisted of but one word, not at all fitted for ears polite.

Similarly, the Girondins had no last supper together. Columbus could not have foretold an eclipse of the moon in order to frighten the natives of Jamaica into submission, as has been asserted, for the simple reason that the moon was not in eclipse during the time the famous explorer was on that island.

Alfred the Great never went into hiding in a goat-herd's cottage while the Danes were ravaging his kingdom; on the contrary, he "got on with the war."

Last Zulu Elephant Dies.

There is not a single elephant left in Zululand, once a paradise of these great animals. The last survivor was found dead the other day on a farm on the banks of the Umfolosi River, where he had lived since the early part of the reign of the great chief, Cetewayo.

An immense herd once roamed the Dugumgu forest and along the Umfolosi, but it was diminished by incessant hunting, until Cetewayo one day finally drove it away forever. The Chief used to make medicine of certain portions of their bodies. On the occasion referred to he organized a mighty drive, in which two elephants were killed and many wounded. One of the later turned and trampled one of his pursuers to pulp. It was this animal which was captured, and whose death is now reported. The remainder of the herd broke away, and thereafter none was seen in Zululand.

WOMEN MAKING MUNITIONS.

Few Men Employed in a Great English Ammunition Factory.

One thing struck me very forcibly — the quality of men employed at the works. I did not see a single man doing work that could have been done by a woman. I believe the Labor Exchange Bureaux have supplied them with many of their women workers, and though, of course, very many of them are quite inexperienced and new to their work, they seemed to be managed pretty well.

There are men to attend to the furnaces, men to carry the heavy loads, men to start and to attend the machines, but everything else seemed to be done by women.

Sorting, testing, using the machines, cleaning, packing, and kindred things are all women's jobs. Rows and rows of women I saw sitting at machines and benches, filling the great wooden cases with the finished bullets; women in rows everywhere, but men only in ones and twos here and there. It was somewhat of an object-lesson in that way; it was new and pleasing to find women able to do so many things and do completely. Simply, when our wonderful coalition Government provides the workers to supply the materials, and these and kindred factories need more hands to cope with the increased work, there must be many women of all classes who could volunteer to take on this work of making munitions, and thus release each a man for service and help on the output of munitions.

It must be remembered, too, that the women's work is comparatively easy—that is to say, one does not instinctively feel how tired they must get, they are laboring under almost perfect conditions, and making very good wages. It is not hard labor that is required of them, but a mechanical and automatic efficiency. Physical strength is not an essential for most of the women's work, but 'intelligence' deftness, rapidity, and care only.

With the few men employed, of course, it is different; but, as I said before, they are only employed for the really physically hard work, and are paid accordingly. Most of them are making twice their peace-time earnings, and serving their country, too, though I fear few of them realize and appreciate that.

It is a great work and necessary one, that of supplying the munitions of war, and every man and woman employed at it ought to feel proud and thankful to be allowed to do it.

Between seventy and eighty women conductors have appeared on the buses run by the London General Omnibus Company. This number will be gradually increased as the needs of the situation demand.

The women will be paid at exactly the same rates, on a mileage basis, as the male conductors, and will have the same duties and hours. Their employment is confined to the period of the war, or to such time as the male conductors shall return.

Women dockers have been introduced on the Mersey. Recently the male laborers, under the advice of their union, refused to work with them, and the services of the women were dispensed with.

There are 150 women conductors on the metropolitan electric trams and 150 on the London United lines.

"Sammy's" Lucky Stick.

By the recent death of Sir Samuel Way, Chief Justice of South Australia since 1876, the Commonwealth has lost one of its most interesting and picturesque personalities. "Sammy," as he was known in Adelaide, was born at Portsmouth nearly eighty years ago, his father being one of the leaders of the English Bible Christians, and pioneer minister of the sect in Australia.

One of "Sammy's" most cherished possessions was a lucky stick, originally owned by Mr. W. B. Dalley, first Australian Privy Councillor, who gave it to Sir Alfred Stephen. Sir Alfred, the second Australian Privy Councillor, bequeathed it to Chief Justice Way, and not long afterwards he was raised to the same dignity. "Sammy" carried the stick with him when he went to Windsor to be sworn in, and also when he took his seat in the Privy Council.

Sir Samuel was the hero of a love story which Australians liked to tell. It began when he was a poor young man at the Bar, but as the years ran on the girl married another.

Many years later he found her a widow, and his early love became Mrs. Way—for the Chief Justice had refused knighthood again and again because he had no one to share the honor with him. When a baronetcy was offered him he accepted it. Lady Way died in 1914.

Soldiers' Etiquette.

Our civilian soldiers have picked up military etiquette in a surprisingly short time, and it is not often that they are puzzled in regard to saluting. In case there are any who fear to make a mistake, here are a few hints on when not to salute.

There are a good many regulations about whom a soldier must salute, but he is left comparatively free concerning those he may not salute. This is because he may not raise his hat, and a salute is the only way he has of recognizing the greeting of a lady, or a civilian friend, or superior.

A soldier must never raise his hand to his forehead in salute when he has his head uncovered. If he is cooling his heated brow and an officer approaches, he must put on his hat before saluting. Even when indoors the hat must be kept on when addressing or saluting a superior officer.

The only other occasion when a soldier must not salute is when on outpost duty. He must pay no compliment to anybody then, not even the King.

"Nanna" Typewriter.

A typewriter is being introduced into India which will write the 360 characters and signs of the Bengali alphabet.

Lodger—"I can't stay here any longer, Mrs. Binks." Landlady—"why not, sir? What is the complaint?" Lodger—"Lung complaint, your baby howls too much."

HEALTH EXPERT BRANDS TYPHOID AS A DISGRACE

TOPEKA, Kan., April 22.—"Typhoid fever is more than a disease; it is a disgrace."

Ten thousand yellow circulars, with the foregoing in large type, are being printed for Dr. S. J. Crumbine, secretary of the State Board of Health. Crumbine has opened up his Spring campaign against typhoid. The poster will vie with political announcements in Central and Eastern Kansas, where typhoid has been most prevalent in Kansas the last few years. Crumbine points out that lack of sanitation causes typhoid epidemics.

LOST EYE, AWARDED $1,378.

Chauffeur Receives Damages for Poor Marksmanship.

Duck shooting may not commonly be considered as a duty of a chauffeur, but the industrial accident commission of San Francisco, Cal., so found in the case of Harold L. Stein, a Los Angeles driver, who was awarded $1,378.26 for the loss of an eye.

Mr Stein was employed as the chauffeur of a wealthy merchant and received his injury in scaring up ducks at a fashionable country club in the south, while his master and a party of friends stood by as the marksmen. The aim of at least one of the sportsmen proved poor, with the result that the chauffeur lost an eye.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Daisy's Hero

He Proved, Too, He Was a Real One

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Mrs. Howard glanced apprehensively toward the row of steamer chairs where her pretty daughter, Daisy, was engaged in animated conversation with a good looking, athletic young man.

"Daisy is so imprudent," murmured Daisy's mother as she neared the chairs. "There is poor Hal eating his heart out, and that naughty girl is devoting herself to young Pearson!"

She smiled coldly at Ben Pearson as he arose promptly at her approach and arranged her chair. When she was seated and the rug tucked about her feet Mrs. Howard glanced significantly at Daisy.—

"My dear, did you know that Hal was waiting for you? You promised to play accompaniments for him."

"Oh, mother, I forgot all about it!" cried Daisy as she arose and settled the blue cloth cap on her bright hair. "Mr. Pearson was describing the great Yale-Harvard game—you know he was halfback on the football team!" Daisy cast an admiring glance at Pearson's broad shoulders.

Mrs. Howard smiled perfunctorily, and she was inclined to observe that Ben Pearson accompanied Daisy in her search for Hal Denison. Just as she was congratulating herself that this Mediterranean tour, with all its pleasant intimacy of ship life, must bring about an engagement between Daisy and Hal Denison, the son of her old friend, why, who should appear but this football hero, Ben Pearson, and promptly put poor Hal out of the running.

Why they called Hal Denison Poor Hal one could not tell, for, although he was not big and brawny like Ben Pearson, he was not frail looking unless one especially noted the intellectual face which had a certain delicacy of feature and expression. Otherwise, although Hal Denison was small in stature, he was wiry and strong. He had never gone in for athletics. He was a musician, and even now there came the dreamy strains of "La Serenade" as he played on his violin to Daisy's sympathetic accompaniment.

Later the music ceased for awhile, and then Pearson's deep bass voice was heard booming forth popular songs.

Dusk was settling down over the sea when Daisy came along the deck quite alone and slipped into her chair with unusual quietness.

"Hal played beautifully, my dear," murmured Mrs. Howard sleepily.

"I suppose so, mother," returned Daisy; then, hesitatingly, she added, "You don't like Mr. Pearson, do you?"

"I don't admire him, my dear, but I cannot say that I dislike him," returned Mrs. Howard.

"I like him very much," said Daisy simply.

Daisy hesitated, and that instant's hesitation told Mrs. Howard that the girl's love was wavering between the two men. Which would she choose? There was little doubt, for Daisy was a hero worshiper, and she plainly admired the burly football player.

"Oh, mother," she cried impulsively, "you know I'm fond of Hal, but he's—more like a girl, don't you know—quiet and dreamy and fond of simple things. One could not imagine Hal doing anything heroic, now, could one?"

"Some people rather thought it was heroic for Hal to give his cousin Ned three-quarters of their uncle's estate, when the uncle had purposely cut Ned off in a moment of anger; that's an example of moral courage. It was courageous of Hal to submit to a transfusion of blood in an effort to save his brother's life three years ago. In my opinion, Hal Denison is a hero."

"But, mother, dear, that is all very well, but that isn't the sort of courage I mean. There is a certain charm in physical courage, don't you know. Jeopardizing one's life to save that of another. I couldn't imagine Hal doing that."

"How about giving his blood for his brother? He has never been as well since then."

"I know, but the kind of heroism that I mean is born of an impulse, the sort that leaps to stop a runaway horse, that plunges overboard to save a drowning person. Oh, you know!"

Mrs. Howard smiled.

"A spectacular heroism," she said dryly.

"I can't imagine Hal doing anything of that sort," went on Daisy. "He is so deliberate in all his actions. He would want to stop and think the matter over—whether there might not be a safe and sane way of accomplishing the end. Do you know, mother, that Mr. Pearson has saved eight people from drowning in the past ten years?"

"I didn't know it, Daisy, but I am sure it is a very creditable record. Did he tell you of his acts of heroism?"

"Now, Mother Howard!" Daisy laughed rather shamefacedly. "He did tell me, but only because I urged him to do so. I love heroism."

Mrs. Howard arose and prepared to go below.

"Come, dear; we must dress for dinner. Remember, Daisy, that there are more unrecorded heroes in the world's history than otherwise."

And Daisy, still doubting her mother's judgment, went down to dinner quite unconvinced that there could be any lurking heroism in the quiet personality of Hal Denison.

For several days after that there was bad weather, and many of the passengers were compelled to remain in their staterooms. Among these latter were Mrs. Howard and Hal Denison, who declared himself a fair weather sailor.

But Daisy Howard and Ben Pearson braved the inclemency of the weather and the rain swept decks, and each day found them pacing to and fro, discussing a thousand and one topics, but usually swinging back to that most interesting one, absorbing alike to the young man and the girl, the heroic adventures of Mr. Benjamin Pearson.

There came a day when the party landed at the island of Capri to visit the famous grottoes. Somehow Ben Pearson had attached himself to Mrs. Howard's party, and it had become customary now for Ben to escort Daisy Howard on these excursions, while Mrs. Howard and Hal Denison followed in the rear.

Pearson had visited the island the previous year, and he had much to relate of an adventure that befell the party of which he was a member. He told the story modestly enough, but it had the invariable ending. A child had fallen from one of the rocks into a deep, silent pool. He, Pearson, had plunged into the icy depths and restored the child to its mother's arms.

"This is the very spot," said Pearson, pointing before him.

Daisy looked. She glimpsed the dark blue water, still and icy. A glance over her shoulder showed that the other members of the party had gone on to another grotto. Only her mother and Hal Denison were near. Daisy turned her head toward Pearson, and her lips parted in a dazzling smile.

At that moment her foot slipped, and with a little cry of terror she caught herself, stumbled and then plunged down into the icy pool.

As she disappeared Ben Pearson rushed frantically up and down the brink of the pool and roared for help.

Mrs. Howard swooned away, and Hal Denison, tossing aside hat and coat, poised on the edge of the pool and dived down. When he came up he brought the girl with him, dripping wet and shivering with cold, but quite conscious.

Hal's face was white and stern as he disdained Pearson's hastily offered assistance, and somehow he scrambled upon the rocks and bore Daisy to safety.

His shouts brought the guide and other members of the party, and, having administered restoratives, and borrowed a steamer rug from a rheumatic old gentleman, he wrapped Daisy in it and, lifting her easily in his arms, bore her to a fisherman's hut on the shore.

Mrs. Howard, having been restored to consciousness, followed on the arm of one of the men, and soon she was assisting her daughter to dry her garments before a roaring fire in the fisherman's cottage.

Daisy was very pale and silent, and Hal Denison was equally reticent. Mrs. Howard, noticing that Hal was dripping wet and shivering with cold, insisted that they return to the tourist steamer at once, so that the young man might be put under the care of the ship's doctor. As for Daisy, she appeared in her normal health when she was arrayed in the picturesque gala attire of the fisherman's daughter. As for Marta, the slim, dark eyed girl, she wept with delight over the gold pieces which Mrs. Howard had given her in exchange for the garments and declared that they would buy her wedding clothes.

Once on board the Celeste, Mrs. Howard placed Hal in the care of the doctor and was relieved that he would suffer no more than a severe cold as a consequence of his heroic deed.

As for Mr. Ben Pearson, he had quite disappeared from the view of the Howard party, and it was several days afterward that Mrs. Howard espied him gloomily patrolling the deck alone.

"I beg your pardon, Mrs. Howard," he said quite humbly, "but I would like to make an explanation."

"Yes?" asked Mrs. Howard coolly.

"About the other day at the grotto."

"Indeed?"

"I suppose you were quite surprised that I did not jump in and rescue Miss Howard at once. You may have observed that I'm hard hit with Miss Daisy. I think there's no one like her, and I'd like to believe that she owed her life to me. But"— He reddened uncomfortably and looked over the side at the swiftly rushing water.

"But?" prompted Mrs. Howard kindly.

"But, you see, I can't swim a stroke!" he confessed.

"Oh-h-h!" It was Daisy's voice in horrified wonder. She had come up just in time to hear his confession.

"It is true," he said doggedly.

"Then the eight lives you saved that summer—and"—

"All bunkoism!" he interrupted, turning on his heel and walking away.

Daisy's eyes filled with tears. "Mother," she said humbly, "he's not only a coward, but he is a liar as well! I tumbled into the pool to prove to you and Ha that my hero was a hero indeed. But what a poor hero! When I opened my eyes and saw poor Hal's face and felt his arms bearing me out of that icy water I realized that here was my hero, modest and unassuming, but ready when the supreme moment came."

"Where is your hero now, dear?" asked Mrs. Howard quietly.

"Down in the library, mother, waiting. I have promised to be his wife, and he is waiting for your blessing!"

BRONCHITIS
NEGLECTED COLD.

Bronchitis starts with a short, painful, dry cough, accompanied with rapid wheezing, and a feeling of oppression or tightness through the chest. At first the expectoration is a light color but as the trouble progresses the phlegm arising from the bronchial tubes becomes of a yellowish or greenish color, and is very often of a stringy nature.

Bronchitis is usually at its worst in the morning on account of the phlegm becoming lodged in the bronchial tubes during the night, and it very often takes some time coughing and hawking before you can get the throat clear of the phlegm.

When this happens you may be sure that if the bronchitis is not attended to immediately it will sooner or later develop into pneumonia, or some other more serious lung trouble.

The best remedy for to cure the cold is DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP.

Mrs. Roy Conner, Greenwood, Ont., writes: "I must tell you what Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup did for me. Whenever I got a cold I would be troubled with bronchitis, and sometimes I would almost choke to death. After taking two bottles of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup I was cured."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is 25c and 50c. per bottle. See that you get the genuine.

Hanging Them Up?

London children certainly get some quaint views of life. An instance of this recently occurred in an East-end Sunday school, where the teacher was talking to her class about Solomon and his wisdom.

"When the Queen of Sheba came and laid jewels and fine raiment before Solomon, what did he say?" she asked, presently.

One small girl, who had evidently had experience in such matters, promptly replied:

"'ow much d'yer want for the lot?"

TO TRIFLE WITH CATARRH IS TO RISK CONSUMPTION

Usually it comes with a cold. Being slight it is neglected—but the seed is sown for a dangerous harvest, perhaps consumption. To cure at once, inhale Catarrhozone. It destroys the germs of catarrh, clears away mucous, cleanses the passage of the nose and throat. The hacking cough and sneezing cold soon disappear, and health is yours again. Nothing known for colds, catarrh and throat trouble, that is so curative as Catarrhozone. It cures by a new method that never yet failed. The one dollar outfit includes the inhaler and is guaranteed to cure. Smaller sizes 25c and 50c, sold everywhere.

Some Task.

The office manager turned to the new boy.

"Here, George," he said, "go into the next room and look up 'collaborate.' I am not quite sure about the spelling."

The boy disappeared and didn't return. The manager put the letter aside and took up some other duties. Presently he remembered the boy and went out to look for him. He found the lad studying the big dictionary with great intentness.

"What are you doing, George?" he asked.

The boy looked around.

"I forgot the word you told me, sir," he replied, "an' I'm lookin' through the book to find it."

The manager gasped.

"How far have you got?"

"I'm just finishing the second page, sir."

"That'll do, George." — Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Fixing the Lesson.

Parson Saunders was a little perturbed one Sunday morning over some worldly matter and made a mistake in the reading of the Scriptural lessons. He read the second lesson where he should have read the first. As he neared the end of his reading the parson saw that he was in error. He saw that his congregation knew he was in error. How, then, to conclude? To conclude in the orthodox way—"Here endeth the second lesson"—would hardly do, as it was not the second lesson, but the first. Nor, could it, on the other hand, be called the first lesson since properly it was the second? Parson Saunders, after a moment's thought, wisely and frankly concluded:

The Tides.

The tides are nothing but very long waves, and the manner in which they run around the earth without the water being obliged to move very far may be illustrated by laying a piece of rope on the floor and making waves run along it from end to end. The waves go all the way, but the rope lies in the same place all the time.

Careful With Their Lemons.

"In English inns," said a man who had just returned from a long coaching trip in England, "they do not use lemons in our haphazard fashion. They make the use of one more or less of a solemn rite. I remember asking for a 'horse's neck' in a little inn in the north country. The landlord had never heard of the drink, and I explained to him that it was ginger ale with a lemon peel in it. He went back to the bar and returned presently with an empty tray. 'I'm very sorry, sir,' he said, 'but we haven't got a lemon open just now.'"—New York Tribune.

SIR EDWARD GREY SURVIVES HIS RIVALS

The British Minister an Outstanding Figure in Many Ways in European Politics

It is over ten years since Sir Edward Grey became the British Foreign Secretary. During the whole of that period he has been always a prominent and sometimes the outstanding figure of European diplomacy. One may begin to realize something of what that means by attempting to recall the names of the men who a decade ago were his more or less friendly rivals. Goluchowski, the first European statesman to prophesy that the Old World could never meet the industrial and agricultural competition of the United States unless it abolished all separate tariffs and faced the danger from the West as a single economic unit, was then at the head of the Austro-Hungarian Ministry of Foreign Affairs. In France the speechless Delcassé still presided over the Quai d'Orsay, but with shaken power. Billow, the suave and skilful, had not yet found the caprices and meddlings of his imperial master too irksome to be borne. Tittoni, as the Italian Foreign Minister, was still receiving the credit for policies initiated by Emmanuel III.; and in America John Hay was completing his checkered but none the less memorable career as Secretary of State. Count Lamsdorf held the corresponding post in Russia and Baron Komura in Japan.

Grey Remains

Where are they all to-day? Dead, dismissed, retired, or hovering merely on the outer edge of power. But Grey remains. He has outlasted all his competitors. Every Government he has had to deal with has changed its Foreign Secretary once, twice, thrice, and even four times in the last decade.

We use up our public men pretty quickly these days. The chances of politics, the whims of a sovereign, the increasing and almost intolerable burden of high office, and the peculiar anxieties that are the portion of the man responsible for directing the external affairs of his country—all these factors make it rare for any Minister, and rarest of all for the Foreign Minister, to hold the job for more than three or four years. But Sir Edward has held it for a decade and will continue to hold it for just so long as he feels strong enough and competent enough to discharge its duties. His uninterrupted tenure has been a very great asset in his favor. It has been impressive. One man after another came up in America, on the Continent of Europe, in the Far East, and each like his predecessor found himself face to face with Great Britain's silent and somewhat inscrutable sentinel.

Absolutely Secure

The advantages of the position were all on Sir Edward's side. His opponents were newer to the game and had nothing like his knowledge or experience; and there was every probability that he would still be playing it long after they had given it up. They were novices with no assurance of remaining long enough to master more than the elements of their new office; he was a veteran and absolutely secure in the backing of his party, his King, and his country. No Continental Chancellor or Sovereign, I should say, ever imagined for a moment that Sir Edward Grey could be squeezed out of his office by a political intrigue or that his hold on it was dependant upon the shifting opinions of a King or that the British people were in the least likely to desert him.

He was irritatingly invulnerable. They could not get at him. He seemed a permanent feature of the British and European landscape, while they were no more than transient and awkward visitors. The prestige of continuity—that precisely was what they lacked and he possessed. He held his office on something approaching a freehold tenure; they held theirs under the thread and shadow of a writ of ejectment.

Sowing Seeds Under Glass

The two most general causes for getting behind with the garden are lack of working ahead and attempting too much. Only great caution and some experience can obviate the latter. The former can be overcome with accurate information—and some gumption. The benefits of getting the first spring stuff along early are too patent to need emphasis. Do you want to begin collecting profits from the investment of time and money put into your garden some weeks sooner than you did last year? Do you want to have fresh beets and early cabbage and sumptuous cauliflowers days ahead of your routine working neighbour? Start things early!

Not will extra early crops be your only reward. In many cases it will be possible for you to get a second crop, where under the old system you got only one. Your transplanted beets, for instance, will be out of the way in time for celery, and your cabbage and cauliflower, for later sowings of beets and carrots for a winter's supply. Not only this, but the long season crops, such as potatoes, corn and pole beans, will do very much better if started early, especially in dry seasons.

For an Early Start.

The number of vegetables which can be hustled along several weeks ahead of the time one ordinarily sees them ready is much greater than generally supposed. Plant growers produce thousands of vegetable plants to sell every spring, and outside of cabbage, lettuce, tomatoes and celery, there is practically no demand, in spite of the fact that just as great advantages are to be gained from forcing beets, cauliflower, corn, cucumbers, melons, onions, squash and several others, including the humble potato.

To get plants as large and nearly matured as is practical before setting them out in the garden it is, of course, necessary to start them several weeks before the frost has left the ground. For this purpose the market gardener makes use of his forcing house, but a suitable substitute for the home gardener is to be found in the use of the hot-bed and cold frame.

There is a great deal of misconception of the amount of knowledge and care required to operate a hot-bed, and the cost of getting one. It is no more difficult than a score of other things that one has to do in connection with gardening—except, perhaps, that it must be done more regularly, as far as the item of giving air to the plant is concerned.

Start the Seeds in Flats.

The seeds are sown either in flats or directly in the soil of the hot-bed or cold frame—which is, of course, made as fine as possible. The former method, however, offers distinct advantages, and is to be recommended. In the first place, it is possible to get all the conditions of soil, drainage, depth and thickness of planting, etc., much more accurately with flats than by sowing directly in the soil. The flats are easier to transplant from. And more important still, the plants can be moved about, rearranged and moved to cold frames, or outside to be hardened off, according to their development, and some will come along much faster than others. With plants sown directly in the soil, one must give them all pretty much the same treatment.

There is sometimes danger, with the beginner, that after he has brought his plants to the transplanted stage, he may assume that they are practically done with and become careless in his attention to their wants, the most important of which is ventilation. To let up in your vigilance at this time may result in the loss of all the work you've done.

Temperature.

In the matter of ventilation, for instance, air should be given always on bright days. It might easily happen that a cold, cloudy morning would clear off bright by 11 o'clock, and two or three hours of direct bright sunshine on your tightly closed frames would be very bad, if not a fatal, thing for your plants, as it would run the temperature so far above a hundred that the plants would suffer considerably. On very cold days the frames should be tilted up a little at one end (preferably the back) and on warm days opened up more accordingly. Try to keep the temperature inside not over 70 or 80 degrees during the daytime. For cabbage, lettuce, cauliflower, beets and such "cold-blooded" plants, the sash should be stripped off altogether whenever the outside temperature allows anything over 40 degrees.

Watering.

The matter of watering, especially in the early spring, is likely to be overdone. Plants at this season of the year, particularly very small plants, do not need much water. When watering is done it should be done thoroughly — never a little sprinkle—and then withheld entirely until a dry condition of soil is indicated by the surface, which becomes lighter in colour and powder.

As the plants fill the flats and crowd each other, and time for setting them in the garden approaches, they should be hardened off. This is done by leaving them without any protection, at first during the day and then both night and day. If your frames are needed for other plants (say tomatoes, peppers, egg-plants, etc., coming along), set the early plants outside in a sheltered spot where they can be covered with old bags, curtains, carpets, or anything similar, in case a very cold night comes along.

If a sudden frosty night does catch your plants, and you find them all stiff and white in the morning, don't throw them away. Water them — drench them, with ice-cold water. Then cover them up, or put them in a shady corner where the sunshine cannot strike them. They will probably come out of it all right.

How to Handle the Seeding.

Cabbage, cauliflower, Brussels sprouts, lettuce and beets are all handled in the same way, as described above. Tomato, okra, egg-plant, pepper, in much the same way, except that they need more heat all the way through, and for best results should be put farther apart than the others, or, if possible, in pots, being transplanted in either case, a second time.

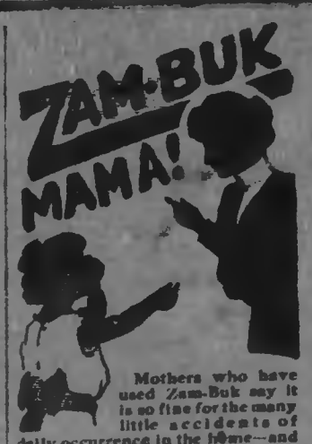
Celery seed is very fine, and very slow to start. Soak in tepid water for 24 hours before sowing, and do not sow too thickly. Transplant 50 to 100 to a 13 by 19-inch flat, and grow cool all the way. If the tops are cut back at transplanting about one-third it will improve the plants.

Corn has to be handled somewhat differently. As it is not started until the frost is out of the ground, you can procure sod, which should be cut into four or six-inch squares, several inches thick. These are packed together, inverted, and the seed sown and covered with an inch or so of fine soil. When the weather is settled, these "hills" are set off, the surface of the sod being put two or three inches below the level of the ground.

Squashes, melons and cucumbers may be started in the same way. But four-inch pots, packed in leaf mold or moss in deep flats make a more convenient method. The soil should be half very old rotted manure, and the pots at first only half filled and then filled in more as growth proceeds. Several seeds are sown in each pot, and the plants thinned to one or two.

Potatoes are cut to one eye, half buried in a flat of sand, and given full light. Plant in furrows four inches deep.

An early start makes more difference in the development of onions than of any other vegetables. They are not transplanted before being set out—you simply have to start them. Put a little manure in the bottom of a deep flat (3-inch), cover to within an inch or less of the top with rich soil, and then cover with half an inch of clean sand, in which plant the seed thinly in rows about three inches apart.



Mothers who have used Zam-Buk say it is so fine for the many little accidents of daily occurrence in the home—and especially where there are children — that they would not be without it. Not only so, but children who have had Zam-Buk applied to an injury or sore, when again injured, cry for Zam-Buk to be applied. They know that Zam-Buk stops pain. Nothing ends the pain of a cut, bruise, burn, or skin disease like Zam-Buk, and nothing soothes, draws out the soreness and heals so quickly.

Mrs. I. Wilson of Sarnia, Ont., says: "I could not do without Zam-Buk for my children. It is the best ointment we have ever used for burns, sores and cuts."

Mr. L. B. Andresen of 1407 E. 22nd St., Minneapolis, Minn., writes: "When any of the children, my wife or self meet with an accident, we immediately apply Zam-Buk. It has saved us many a doctor's bill."

Mrs. C. B. Ritcey of Riverport, N.S., writes: "My baby had sores on her face, caused by teething. Zam-Buk completely healed them."

Zam-Buk is equally good for eczema, ring worm, running sores, blood-poison, ulcers, abscesses, piles, boils and pimples. All druggists, 50c. box, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto. Send 1c. stamp for free trial.

$3,500,000 WILL BE SPENT BY C.P.R. ON FARMS FOR SOLDIERS

J. S. Dennis Amplifies Announcement Made by Lord Shaughnessy and Upholds Latter's Views on Enlistment, Transportation and Shortage of Labor in the West

The providing of employment for returned soldiers is a question that is demanding nation-wide attention, and it is with great satisfaction that Canadians learn that the Canadian Pacific Railway is to take action in this regard.

Mr. J. S. Dennis, assistant to the president of the C.P.R., has just returned to Calgary, and was asked details of the scheme planned by Lord Shaughnessy. Mr. Dennis replied:—

LORD SHAUGHNESSY'S DECISION

"The decision of Lord Shaughnessy to provide through the Department of Natural Resources of the Canadian Pacific Railway farm homes for our returned soldiers is a further proof, if any were needed, of his willingness at all times to devote his great energy and ability, and the resources of the company, to the solution of the problems facing Canada as part of the empire.

The extent and magnitude of the work of preparing 1,000 farms will be realized when it is noted that it involves: Building 1,000 houses; building 1,000 barns; constructing 1,200 miles of fence; digging 1,000 wells; breaking and cultivating 50,000 acres; the buildings will require about 20,000,000 feet of lumber to erect. The preparation of these farms will entail an expenditure of about $3,500,000.

ENLISTMENT QUESTION

"One thousand farms will, of course, provide for an extremely small proportion of returned soldiers who will want to obtain farm homes, and the Dominion Government must adopt some general policy of providing these homes. However, the Canadian Pacific Railway has led the way in trying to solve the pressing and troublesome question and no doubt before long the Dominion Government will announce its general scheme.

AN IMMENSE PROJECT

"The enlistment of the 250,000 additional men called for by the Government, will, of course, double the number to be taken care of after the war is over, and also causes a serious present problem. The western provinces have responded nobly to the call of the empire in enlisting men to fight our battles, and already there is a serious shortage of labor of all kinds, due to this enlistment. In the effort to meet this shortage, the Dominion government is now advertising in some 4,000 papers in the United States for 50,000 laborers to come west and help put in the crop this spring. They find that there is no chance of getting this number of men, and have announced that from 3,000 to 5,000 is the greatest number that can be obtained.

SHORTAGE OF LABOR

"The recognition of this shortage of labor by the Department of the Interior, and the efforts they are making to meet the situation by bringing men from the United States is a contradiction of the statement made at a meeting in Montreal a short time ago by Gen. Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, that the enlistment of men in the west was not causing any shortage of labor, and is a proof, if any were needed, of the soundness of the policy of recruiting advocated by Lord Shaughnessy at the same meeting. Every true Canadian realizes that Canada must ultimately send her last man and spend her last dollar to enable the empire and her allies to bring the war to victorious termination, but why enlist men before they can be used.

TRANSPORTING TROOPS

"It is now recognized that under the most favorable circumstances it will be the end of the year before all the men now enlisted can be transported across the Atlantic, and after that date, at most, 10,000 men a month can be sent forward. Many of the battalions now authorized are very much below their full strength, and it will be many months before they will have succeeded in enlisting their full quota of men. Why then go on authorizing additional battalions and removing men from the useful employment of helping feed the empire or supply it with munitions until they can be utilized in the firing line?

WESTERN CANADA'S LOYALTY

"Of the men already enlisted, western Canada has provided much more than its share on the basis of population. As western Canadians we are proud of that fact, but why drive a willing horse off its feet, particularly when its energies can be utilized in the meantime to such great advantage in other ways, and it can be kept in good condition for the time when its full strength can be properly applied in the supreme crisis?"

than a sentimental effect on the western theatre. Three reasons for their transfer may be cited, however, two of them political and the third military.

The Russian government may have taken this method of showing to the world Russia's hearty co-operation with her allies, the extent of the cohesion in the Entente ranks, and it may be her answer to the recurrent rumours from Germanic sources that Petrograd would be willing to consider a separate peace.

Decision on Western Front.

Again Russia may be convinced that the war will be decided on the western front, and with that contingency in view she desires to have active military representation in the decisive events, thus in some measure strengthening her hands when the time for a post war settlement comes.

The above two theories are purely political. On the other hand, from a military standpoint, Russia has more potential man power, as distinguished from her forces now with the colours, than she can hope to arm and equip with her facilities for production and import. With the assistance of Japan and her western allies she would be able to transport to France half a million men by nexth autumn. These men could be equipped with far more rapidity through the Atlantic ports than they could at home, and, in such numbers, might wield the balance of power and turn the present stalemate into a German rout.

The arrival of the Russians at Marseilles has revived again the rumours that General Caderna's trip to Paris and London will result in an Italian force appearing in France. Reports that such a move is in contemplation have been frequent in the last three or four weeks and they have been bolstered up by half-veiled hints from official quarters in Rome. A Serb detachment already is in France and if Italy sends a representation across the frontier the Germans will be facing Belgians, British, French, Russians, Serbs and Italians on the front from Nieuport to Switzerland, truly an allied army.

The German activity around Verdun declined somewhat in force in the last week. The artillery maintained its incessant roar, but the infantry attacks were few and were carried out on both sides with small effectiveness. The front from the Meuse to Vaux absorbed most of the attacks, which were about evenly divided between the opposing armies. The French in the exchanges held the upper hand, for they recovered all told several hundred yards of trenches around Vaux Lake and southwest of Douaumont.

The British were heavily engaged on Tuesday and on Friday both north and south of Ypres. They lost six hundred yards of trenches early in the week, but later recovered a third of them.

What to Do to Get Fat and Increase Weight

The Real Cause of Thinness

Most people eat from four to six pounds of good solid fat-making food every day, and still do not increase in weight one ounce, while on the other hand many of the plump, chunky folks eat very lightly, and keep gaining all the time. It's all bosh to say that this is the nature of the individual. It isn't Nature's way at all.

Most thin people stay thin because their powers of assimilation are defective. They absorb just enough of the food they eat to maintain life and a semblance of health and strength. Stuffing won't help them. A dozen meals a day won't make them gain a single "stay-there" pound. All the fat-producing elements of their food just stay there in the intestines until they pass from the body as waste. What such people need is something that will prepare these fatty food elements so that their blood can absorb them and deposit them all about the body—something, too, that will multiply their red blood corpuscles and increase their blood's carrying power.

For such a condition it is well to recommend eating a Sargol tablet with every meal. Sargol is not, as some believe, a patented drug, but is simply a careful combination of six of the most effective and powerful assimilative and flesh-building elements known to chemistry. It is absolutely harmless, yet has been wonderfully effective, and a single tablet eaten with each meal often, according to reports of users, has the effect of increasing the weight of a thin man or woman from three to five pounds a week. Sargol is sold by all good druggists everywhere on a positive guarantee of weight increase or money back.

If you find a druggist who is unable to supply you send $1.00 money order or registered letter to the National Laboratories, 74 St. Antoine St., Montreal and a complete ten days' treatment will be sent you postpaid in plain wrapper.

You can't graft a pear or an apple on a cherry or plum tree, or vice versa. The stone fruits and the pomaceous fruits are separate families and refuse to intermingle.

RETURNED TO PRISON

Stern Necessity Drove Two Russians Back to Austria

The Landsturm troops guarding a prison camp in Bohemia had a surprise when three Russian soldiers who escaped a month previously returned voluntarily. After their escape the fugitives wandered through Bohemia into Galicia. Keeping away from the public highways they avoided the numerous German and Austrian patrols and reached the neighborhood of Jaroslaw. There they got tired and learned that the Russian armies have been driven back to Volhynia and Bessarabia. They had neither money nor provisions and were compelled to spend the bitter cold nights in the open air. They reached the camp from which they had escaped in a half starved condition after a weary tramp through the snow-covered forests and were glad to have a shelter again.

who held up the British freighter Matoppo, and was held in New York on the charge of attempting to blow up the Cunarder Pannonia. He was also charged with piracy.

"Yesterday," said Jabson, "I refused a poor woman a request for a small sum of money, and in consequence of my act I passed a sleepless night. The tones of her voice were ringing in my ears the whole time." "Your softness of heart does you credit," said Mabson. "Who was the woman?" "My wife."

HAD WEAK HEART HAD TO STAY IN BED

Many women are kept in a state of fear of death, become weak, worn and miserable, and are unable to attend to their household, social or business duties, on account of the unnatural action of the heart.

To all such sufferers Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will give prompt and permanent relief. They do this by their calming, strengthening and invigorating action on the heart causing it to beat regularly and naturally, and in addition to this they tone up the whole nerve system.

Mrs. J. Day, 234 John St. South, Hamilton, Ont., writes: "I was so run down with a weak heart that I could not even sweep the floor, nor could I sleep at night. I was so awfully sick sometimes I had to stay in bed all day as I was so weak. I used three and a half boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and I am a cured woman to-day, and as strong as anyone could be, and am doing my own housework, even my own washing.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25. They can be had at all druggists or dealers, or will be mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Nerves Were So Upset. Could Not Endure Noise

Neuralgic Headaches and Extreme Nervousness Caused Keenest Suffering—Lasting Cure by Use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Once the nervous system gets run down everything seems to tend to make it worse. You worry over your condition, are unable to get the required rest and sleep, noises excite and irritate you and the future is most discouraging.

The nervous system does not get the proper nourishment from the food you eat, so you must have something also to lift you out of the run-down condition. You may find that your experience coincides with the writer of this letter and be encouraged to put Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to the test.

You will make no mistake in employing this food cure, for, acting as it does hand in hand with Nature, it is bound to do you good.

Mrs. Jas. Jensen, Gwynne, Alta., writes: "About ten years ago I was troubled with severe attacks of neuralgia and nervousness, and was for several months so bad that I could not get a night's rest. I used several medicines recommended by the druggist. My doctor also prescribed but nothing he gave me brought any relief. Instead I got worse and worse until I could scarcely do anything or hear the least bit of noise. My nerves were all upset.

"My husband read about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and got me some. Although I had no faith in it, I began its use, and after a few doses began to sleep well and the neuralgia left me entirely. I used six more boxes and have never had any trouble from neuralgia or the nerves since.

"This is to certify that I know Mrs. Jensen and believe this statement to be true and correct. Fred Freeman, J.P."

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S THREE-GORED SKIRT.

By Anabel Worthington.

There are times when we want to make a glowing impression in our clothes, so we choose a stylish waist that is becoming and, invested with all the fashionable features, then we try the different skirts we may have to see which will best "go with" that waist. Perhaps the one we like lacks the fulness of the up to the minute style of today; may be it has no chief attraction at all. The best thing to do then is to make a skirt showing the test of the taste. By so doing you will add to the charm of the waist and the whole effect will gratify you.

No. 7,661.—A very smart model built upon a very slightly raised waist line. For years of line the panel is of due importance; the inserted side sections provide fulness and give style tone, and at either side, diagonally, a pocket is seen with a buttoned lap; this giving novelty, adding quite a bit as one of the details that weave themselves into a masterpiece. An outside belt is arranged about the waist, buttoning at side fronts for security and clearly defining the panel.

The pattern is cut in sizes 24 to 32 inch waist measure. To make it size 24 will require 3¾ yards of 36 inch material.

By sending 10 cents to the office of this publication you may obtain this pattern.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Address—The Examiner Pattern Service, The Examiner, Peterborough.

Gin Pills FOR THE KIDNEYS

How They Help

ST. RAPHAEL, ONT.

Four years ago I had such pains in my back that I could not work. The pains extended to my arms, sides and shoulders. I used many kinds of medicine for over a year, none of which did me very much good. I read about Gin Pills and sent for a sample and used them, and found the pains were leaving me and that I was feeling better. So I bought one box and before I used them all, the pains were almost gone and I could keep at work. After I had taken six other boxes of Gin Pills, I felt as well and strong as I did at the age of 25. I am a farmer, now 51 years old." 25

Asking Leave.

Nobody is allowed to leave a warship without permission, even for an hour. Senior officers, "heads of departments," must obtain leave from the captain in person before going ashore, though usually a general dispensation from this obligation is given at the beginning of a commission. Young officers of branches other than the executive must first ascertain from their own immediate superiors whether they can be spared, so the process of obtaining leave sometimes becomes quite elaborate. The most junior engineer-officer, for example, may be observed to enter the wardroom, cap in hand. First he approaches the senior, and recites the appointed interrogation.

"Please" is returned in a quiet voice. But this is not enough. The youngster steps across to where the engineer-commander is sitting, and again asks, "May I go ashore, sir, please?" once more getting "Please" to encourage him. Yet once again he stands a supplicant, before the commander now, till a final "Please" sends him away rejoicing to "shift into plain clothes."

THREE VIOLENT GERMAN ATTACKS STOPPED BY THE FRENCH GUNS

Although the Enemy Employed Liquid Fire They Could Make No Progress And Were Driven Back to Their Lines Suffering Heavy Losses---Second Convoy of Russians Arrives at Marseilles----Sir Robert Casement Captured.

ANOTHER ZEPPELIN RAID ON ENGLAND

PARIS (French Official), April 25.—Using liquid fire the Germans made three most violent attacks against the newly gained French positions on Dead Man's Hill last night. The War Office announced that all three attacks were stopped by a curtain of fire from the French infantry.

The Germans were driven back to their old lines suffering very heavy losses. An intense artillery bombardment occurred during the night in the region of Avocourt, northwest of Verdun. On the east bank of the Meuse the bombardment was rather violent. Grenade fighting occurred last night in the Apremont woods southeast of Verdun.

THE EARTH GIVES BACK RELICS OF WAR OF 1776

NEW YORK, April 25.—Forty-five huts erected and tenanted in 1776 by the American army under General William Heath and by the British and Hessian troops who drove the Americans from Manhattan island in the battle of Washington Heights, have been unearthed at Broadway and 208rd street, near the old Dyckman mansion. The site is soon to be turned over to the city as an historical park.

The huts occupied first by Americans and then by the British and Hessian troops were composed in part of bricks, stood in three rows and contained many relics, including English and Hessian coins, a set of dice fashioned from bullets, quarts arrow heads and broken china.

Buttons and belt buckles of the seventeenth Leicestershire foot, fourteenth Buckinghamshire, Coldstream Guards, twenty-third Welsh Fusiliers, two Black Watch regiments and an Inniskilling regiment were found.

Some of the huts will be reconstructed in the park.

CONSCRIPTION IS DISCUSSED IN SECRET SESSION

British Parliament Meets Behind Closed Doors and Most Stringent Precautions Have Been Taken To Ensure The Strictest Privacy

NEWSPAPERS WARNED

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 10.— Following a brief open session, Parliament met behind closed doors this afternoon to learn the decision of the cabinet on the issue of general conscription. The government was expected to bare the military reasons behind its action. It was the most secret session since the day of Guy Fawkes. Before the doors were closed the cellars and ventilators were searched and the press and public were excluded from the lobbies and corridors. A force of guards insured the strictest secrecy. The press was warned that any newspaper publishing the slightest reference to the proceedings, or indulging in any speculation beyond the official statement, would be confiscated.

PTE. FERGUSON OF THE MOUNTED RIFLES ON CASUALTY LIST

Official word was received in a wire from the Adjutant-General's Department, Ottawa, to-day, that Pte. Harry Ferguson, a Peterborough member of the Canadian Mounted Rifles, had been seriously wounded. Pte. Ferguson, who is a son of Mr. Wellington Ferguson, was born in East City and lived practically all his life in Peterborough. He enlisted here with B Squadron, 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles, early last year, and left with that unit on March 6th, 1915. His friends will be sorry to learn that he has been wounded.

Pte. E. Maudsley of the 39th Battalion, who has been invalided home from England, arrived yesterday morning. Pte Maudsley, who enlisted with the 39th, here, over a year ago, was stricken with rheumatism in England and was unable to go to the front. Pte. Maudsley, whose home is on Smith Street, has a son in the 93rd Battalion.

Sergt. Victor Home.

Sergt. Peter Victor, of the 2nd Battalion, C.E.F., the first Peterborough member of the 1st Canadian Division to be wounded in the present war, arived home last evening on the 5:30 C.T.R. train, still lame as the result of the German missile that struck him down, but smiling and obviously glad to be home. Sergt. Victor was met at the train by his mother, Mayor Duffus and the members of the Reception Committee of the City Council, Major Davidson, Lieut. A. P. Stock and a contingent of non-coms and men of the 93rd Battalion, and a big quota of the Soldiers Wives' and Mothers' Club. Although no music was available owing to the fact that the Band of the 93rd had been dismissed before news of Sergt. Victor's arrival was received, yet the welcome was a hearty one. As Sergt. Victor stepped unto the platform the men in khaki greeted him with rousing cheers, and when he reached the corner of the station the Soldiers' Wives' and Mothers' Club had a hunting-lined passage-way for him to walk through while the ladies showed they could cheer for the returned soldiers as well as they can work for those who are at the front. A motor car was in waiting for Sergt. Victor, and with his mother he was driven to his home at 207 Stewart street accompanied by Mayor Duffus and Alderman Dobbin. Mrs. Victor and her hero son waving their arms in response to the final cheers from the crowd.

Sergt. Victor, who was employed by the Singer Sewing Machine Company before the war, and was a member of the 57th Regiment, was wounded early in March, soon after the Canadian Contingent reached France. He had been transferred from A Company, 2nd Battalion to which the Peterborough boys belonged, to C Company of the same battalion, and while he was engaged in repairing a wire entanglement in front of the Canadian trenches the Germans turned a machine gun on him and Sergt. Victor was shot through the legs. He has been in hospital practically ever since.

The meeting between Sergt. Victor and his mother was an affecting one. It was had to say which was the happier of the two, but the radiance of the smiles on the faces of both brought a glow into the hearts of the onlookers.

Mr. J. D. Walmsley, of 575 Aylmer street, has joined the Mechanical Transport section of the Army Service Corps in Toronto. He enlisted on the tenth of April.

Mrs. McKinlay, of the Soldiers Wives' and Mothers' Club, received the following letters of thanks from Peterborough boys in the Mounted Rifles:

France, March 31st.

Dear Mrs. McKinlay,—I wish to thank you for your kindness in sending me the socks which Bill brought over to me. All of us appreciate the work and aims of the women in Canada who have supplied to us from time to time comforts which we would have had to forego, and wish you success in your labours. Bill will have told you all the news so far as it can be told, so there is little for me to write. The weather is fine here just now. The roads are drying up, which makes the marching much easier. I am glad to say that all of us are in good health and spirits. You must excuse the brevity of this letter as I cannot scrape up any more material. Trusting you are all well, I remain,

Yours sincerely,
Arthur Theobald.

France, March 31st.

Dear Mrs. McKinlay,—Many thanks for the socks I received safely yesterday. Please give my thanks to the members of the Wives' and Mothers' Club. The socks are just what I needed. The weather is getting much better, but we still have enough rain to make our feet wet. It is very good and helpful to know that the people at home still think of us and are doing all they can to help us, and all of us over here appreciate it. I hope it will be soon over so that we can have the chance to thank you personally.

Yours truly,
W. H. Rew.

Bishop O'Brien Points Out Path of Duty

His Lordship's Eloquent Remarks at Langemarck Service Last Night—Pictures of Peterboro's War Heroes Were Shown.

A BIG CROWD PRESENT

The observation of the first anniversary of the battle of Langemarck was concluded in Peterborough in the Armouries which was very largely attended.

His Lordship Bishop O'Brien who gave a short but very eloquent and impressive address struck the key-note of the occasion when he remarked that the best oratory and eloquence that could be used in connection with the great battle was the oratory and eloquence of action. His Lordship pointed out how the fact that our own citizens, many of whom were known and admired and many of us could had given up their lives in that battle brought the situation clearly before us all. Bishop O'Brien emphatically declared that it was the duty of every man who was able to go to enlist and although it might have been considered an unusual message for Easter Sunday he had pointed out to his people in no uncertain terms their duty in that respect. The pages of history recorded no war, in which Great Britain had entered for a more noble cause than the present struggle. In this war she was fighting for liberty and humanity. To those who could His Lordship said, "Go, in God's name and may God's blessing rest upon you."

War pictures of general interest and a large number of pictures of the Peterborough men who have been killed, wounded and missing or prisoners were thrown on the screen while Adjutant McElheney made the necessary explanations. The pictures brought the losses that Peterborough has already sustained in the great war sharply before the audience and there were many wet eyes as people recognized many old friends that they would see no more. There were some excellent snapshots of Peterborough boys at the front one of Major George Bennett taken in the trenches shortly before his death being particularly interesting.

The band of the 93rd battalion rendered some enjoyable music. In addition to patriotic, they played the overture "Raymond" and the gavotte, "Les Cloches de St. Malo" very effectively.

Capt. Rollins of the 93rd battalion was chairman and during the evening called the attention of the crowd to the fact that the 93rd which would be leaving Peterborough shortly, still required some 200 men to complete the establishment.

At the conclusion of the programme Adjutant McElhiney conducted a recruiting session in his own inimitable style and three recruits came forward.

It was found impossible to operate the stereopticon lantern with power from the wires in the Armouries, but Mr. Jas. Stubbs very kindly came to the rescue with his stereopticon plant and enabled the pictures to be shown. The committee in charge are very grateful to Mr. Stubbs for his assistance.

FOE'S SHIPS IN ACTION

Squadron of German Battle Cruisers Appeared off Lowestoft At 4 o'Clock To-day Admiralty Announces

WERE DRIVEN OFF

LONDON, April 25. — A German squadron of battle cruisers appeared off Lowestoft at four a.m. to-day, but was driven off, the Admiralty announced this afternoon.

Two men, one woman and one child were killed, and several injured when a shell from the German warships dropped in Lowestoft this morning. Material damage was slight, the Admiralty said. The Germans were courageously attacked by small British torpedo boats and light cruisers in the vicinity at the time, and after twenty minutes' of spirited fighting turned about and departed swiftly in an easterly direction. Several British ships were hit by German shells, but the damage was light.

PRECEDED BY ZEPPELINS.

The German sea raid followed by about five hours the appearance of Zeppelins off the County of Norfolk, a few miles north of Lowestoft, and is presumed to have been part of an attempt to terrorize the East Coast by simultaneous attacks. Incendiary bombs were dropped.

FIRST NAVAL RAID SINCE DECEMBER, 1914.

This is the first time a German squadron has appeared off the English East Coast since the bombardment of Scarborough and other English East Coast towns December 16, 1914. Lowestoft lies about 100 miles northeast of London in the County of Suffolk. It is a city of about 35,000, and is noted chiefly as a fashionable bathing resort, and as a fishing town. The older part of the town lies on a cliff overlooking the sea. There is a lighthouse on the cliff, and at its base is another lighthouse which occupies a plot of ground at the eastermost coast of England. Lowestoft has shipbuilding facilities and its fishing smacks operate throughout the North Sea.

NON POLITICAL FEATURE OF THE RECENT SESSION

Mr. G. A. Gillespie Refers to Character of The Term Just Closed

Commenting upon the session of the Legislature that has just closed, Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., stated today that one of its most prominent features was the non-political character of some of the most important questions discussed. The new temperance legislation was settled without a vote and in the committee of the whole house. There was friction over Hydro-Electric legislation, which seems far reaching in the curtailing of Sir Adam Beck's power and which will likely have a stronger reaction against the government than it realizes. Mr. Gillespie stated that Sir Adam Beck's position in the confidence of the province is beyond question. Eastern Ontario, and also the western counties, have implicit confidence in him and his mission for the advancement of the interests of the people. The trouble between the government's audit department and Sir Adam would be satisfactorily cleaned up. Mr. Gillespie said, and to this settlement the Hydro chairman would cheerfully assent. Continuing the local member said: "As far as the Hydro-Electric is concerned there is only one Sir Adam Beck. He is the only outstanding man in the House who has the Hydro-Electric system with its possibilities at his finger ends. He places the interests of the people first. They have had a vision of a widely extended Hydro-Electric system and Hydro radials, and are convinced that their faith in Sir Adam Beck is well placed. Hence there will be no toleration of legislation that unnecessarily confines and restricts his aims and efforts in the matter."

A USEFUL OPPOSITION.

As numbers go, the Liberal Opposition in the Ontario Legislature is a small thing—outnumbered two to one—in a House of 111 members; there are 25 Liberals, 84 Conservatives and one Independent—the solitary Mr. Studholme. One would think that the overwhelming preponderance of Government followers, ready, as they have shewn themselves, to support the Government through thick and thin, would permit the Government to do great things; to be, in the words of modern slang, "up-to-date" with progressive legislation; to lead, and not be driven. But the reverse is the case to a very large extent. In a precis of the useful legislation enacted at the last session would be found, perhaps, more really beneficial legislation; due to Liberal initiative and urging, than of legislation spontaneously introduced and procured by the Government itself; and to such a precis could be added an appendix showing an equal amount of potential legislation, represented by a practicable and practical programme of social reform. Among the reforms accomplished the past session by virtue of the achievements of suggestion, advocacy and stimulus of the Liberal Opposition, may be pointed out some of prime importance, whose genesis and adoption are morally, if not, technically, due to Liberals:

1. Prohibition.
2. Establishment of a Trades and Labour Branch.
3. War Resources Committee.
4. Northern Ontario development.
5. Hydro power for Eastern Ontario, as well as for the West.
6. Equal treatment for Ontario citizens in the armies of the Allies.
7. Submission to the House of T.N.O. and Hydro accounts.

In the other category will be found an equal number of first-rate reforms proposed and advocated by the Liberal minority this session, and rejected by the majority at the instance of the Government:

1. Radical programme of social reform in aid of the workingmen and the working women.
2. A thorough-going advance in agriculture.
3. Votes for women.
4. Destruction of the patronage system.
5. Government control of nickel.
6. Heavier taxation of private nickel companies.
7. Tax reform and to exclude the drainage in taxation of farm property.

It is thus seen that the most is not done by those who have the power to do most; and that very important measures can owe their effectuation to those who, theoretically, have no constitutional power of initiative or accomplishment, but are full of the spirit of progress and higher development and application of democratic principles in the interests of the people.

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF.

History repeats itself. A year ago Canadian soldiers on the battle fields of Flanders, wrote their names and the name of Canada large upon the pages of history. To-day they are adding another page as glorious as the first. They are showing the courage, resource and fine fighting qualities we now expect from Canadian soldiers. We are proud of them, and while we hang out the flag in their honour for the splendid work of a year ago, they are to-day justifying our pride and meeting our expectations. The deeds of Canadians, the way they are meeting the call of duty both on the battle lines and at home should make recruited soldiers, now at home, eager to get into the fray; and it should make those who have not yet taken the King's shilling, eager to win for themselves a name like that won by these who have fought in Flanders. One cannot see how any young man who is physically fit, can restrain himself from enrolling in the ranks of Canadian soldiers who are fighting in the cause of country and empire and King, and winning, not only undying glory for the Canadian soldier and Canada, but helping in the great fight that will end fighting in the world for centuries, and make mankind secure in the enjoyment of the blessings of liberty that will be brought by such gallant deeds and such noble sacrifices and devotion to duty. There's a place in the 93rd battalion, there's a place in the fighting line, there's a blank space in the roll of honour for the name of the young man who will seize the chance presented of sharing the glory they win for us, and creating the pride we take in the gallant Canadian soldiers who are brilliantly repeating the brilliant history, made by Canadians in this war.

OVERMANNED.

The Canadian Pay and Records Office in London appears to be a well-manned institution, and withal an expensive one. According to a return brought down in the House of Commons, there are three full Lieutenant-Colonels, eight Majors, twenty-two Captains, and twenty-one Lieutenants employed there, as a monthly total salary of $10,589. And this does not include the clerks, who no doubt do most of the work. But the clerks get only $50 per month, while the Lieutenant-Colonels are drawing from $225 to $300 per month each; the Majors from $205 to $270; the Captains from $187 to $225; and the Lieutenants $158. In addition, it is probable that separation allowances are also granted.

The majority of these men are supernumeraries. The work of the office is mostly clerical, and it would seem that it could very well be handled without recourse to the appointment of fifty-four officers drawing active service pay and full field allowance.—Halifax Chronicle.

MR. ROWELL'S POSITION.

Mr. Rowell in the Ontario Legislature has set an example to politicians elsewhere, both provincial and federal. Since the commencement of the war he has refrained from purely partizan strife in the Legislature. In this, and in his long struggle for temperance reform, he has shown the utmost sincerity. This has been particularly emphasized during the last few weeks. There are a number of points in the temperance legislation introduced by the government and just put through the Provincial House which were open to serious question. There was opportunity in plenty for criticism by the Liberal leader. At the very least such criticism would have had the effect of lessening the credit that will go to the Conservative government for the enactment of temperance. But Mr. Rowell has not sought political aggrandizement. His air has been to secure the abolition of the liquor evil, and he has given his sincere support to the government that has moved in that direction, even though the legislation of the government is not all it might have been. Mr. Rowell has played the part of a statesman rather than that of a politician.—Ottawa Free Press.

WHERE ARE OUR MILLIONS GOING?

Sir Thomas White's hint that before the summer he will have recourse to another domestic loan has aroused a good deal of curiosity as to where all the money is going. Here is a compilation of the Finance Minister's borrowings since the war broke out:

Treasury bills	$15,000,000
Bank	5,000,000
Dominion notes	45,000,000
London loan	25,000,000
First New York loan	45,000,000
Domestic loan	100,000,000
Second New York loan	75,000,000
British Treasury advances to February 16, 1916	135,000,000
Total	$445,000,000

As 20 millions have been used to pay the bank and redeem Treasury Bills, and 25 millions are to be used to take up part of the first New York loan maturing in August, the net ascertained increase of the public debt is 400 millions. What has been done with all this money? The war has not swallowed it all, for Sir Thomas White, in his last budget speech, stated that the whole war expenditure from August, 1914, to the end of January, 1916, had been 158 millions, and he has since said that, apart from the unadjusted European accounts, the war expenditure is eleven to twelve millions a month. Therefore, the total war expenditure, to the end of March, as it appears in the books of the Department of Finance, will be about 170 millions.

We agree with the Toronto Sun that "if we were only going into debt for the war, or, in other words, if we were paying our way, apart from the war, Mr. White ought to have on hand the respectable sum of 230 millions. He ought to have 275 millions because he boasts that from the public revenues he had, during the past year, a surplus of 45 millions to apply to the war."—Montreal Herald.

THE SNAPDRAGON.

We are threatened this year with a wave of enthusiasm for the old-fashioned garden flower, which most of us call snapdragon, as an antidote perhaps, to the passion for the sweet pea which has prevailed for some time. There has been as yet no indication of this promised trend of fashion at the Horticultural Society's shows, but the growers are perhaps keeping it as a surprise. The snapdragon, even in its simplest form, is an interesting flower, and some of the double varieties are most decorative. If colour it may be as varied as any blossom, which, in these days of culture is saving a good deal while the mottled and striped flowers are sometimes of great beauty.—London Chronicle.

What Part Will The United States Play In Case of War With Huns?

Some people are asking: "What can the United States do if it goes to war with Germany? It has no army," they say, "and not enough navy to affect the situation." Granted that the United States would require from six months to a year to get into a state of preparedness for war with a country like Germany unsupported. But as matters stand today, what is there it cannot do? It can add the last straw that will break the camel's back. Even what the Kaiser would call "Wilson's contemptible little army" is not to be despised. It is the nucleus of a great force, and, as His Imperial Majesty is now aware, these "contemptible little armies" have a habit of luxuriant growth in free nations.

The presence of one regiment of American soldiers in Europe would be of incalculable advantage to the cause of liberty. It would round off and complete the entente cordiale between all the nations of the earth which are fighting for eternal peace. For American soldiers, few or many, to stand shoulder to shoulder with the troops of Britain, France, Russia, Italy, and Serbia would consolidate for all time the nations that do not delight in war. The American navy is by no means to be despised. It is of superb quality, and can give a good account of itself wherever it may go. It would be a delight to see the Stars and Stripes floating alongside the Union Jack in the North Sea and the British Channel.

Then the entrance of the United States into the war would mean the release of scores of German ships now interned in American ports which are badly needed by the Allies to-day. Last, but not least, it would mean millions of dollars available for use against the common foe. The man who assumes that without striking a blow Uncle Sam is lying at the proud foot of the Teuton conqueror does not know what he is talking about. Berlin knows better than this, or it would not take the trouble to prevaricate and procrastinate. Count Bernstorff would not talk peace and love with war and bitter hatred in his heart.

Happily there is no ambiguity about the American position to-day. President Wilson, in his last and decisive note to Germany, says:

"Unless the Imperial Government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight-carrying vessels the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire altogether."

The note is courteously worded, but in plain English it means, get down on your royal marrow-bones and crawl. If he prefers to stand and fight, all very well; in either case, the dignity and self-respect of the American nation will be conserved. The Kaiser will not risk a breach of diplomatic relations with the United States unless he is prepared to take the risk of war also; because the only object to be gained would be the continuance of the submarine murders, which would unquestionably involve war. President Wilson has taken a position from which there is no possibility of receding. The Huns will have to do the receding or take an even more unmerciful licking than he has yet enjoyed.—Montreal Herald.

Says She Doesn't Know Why She Married Him

CHICAGO, April 25.—James R. Allison's only regret over his marriage is that he told his wife he loved her, when he never did, according to a letter introduced by Mrs. Maude A. Allison, who was granted a divorce by Judge Sullivan. Allison an engineer in the United States army, now stationed at Corregidor, in the Philippines, deserted his bride almost at the altar, she told the court.

"We were married April 19, 1908," testified Mrs. Allison, who lives at 5945 South Elisabeth street, "and immediately after we left the minister my husband took the train for Philadelphia, saying he would send for me. He did not do so."

Five months later, Mrs. Allison said she received the following letter from her husband.

"Your letter came, and I am forced to tell you that I have been false to you. I have only one thing to regret, and that is that I've told you I loved you when I never did.

"Why did you marry him?" asked Judge Sullivan.

"I'm sure I don't know," was Mrs. Allison's reply.

LOCKED IN STORE HE LIVES HIGH

Shut in When at Druggist's Telephone, Mr. Cummings Spends Four Merry Hours

NEW YORK, April 25.—Duncan Cummings of No. 565 West 139th street, stepped into a drug store at Broadway and 139th Street at eleven o'clock Thursday night to send a telephone message. While he was in the dark telephone booths the lights in the store were extinguished, the store closed and locked and the clerks went away.

When Mr. Cummings stepped from the booth he found himself alone in a darkened store and the doors locked. He was afraid to knock on the doors lest policemen mistake him for a burglar and shoot before asking questions. He had just two nickels remaining, and these he used in the telephone slot. First he called Police Headquarters and related his predicament. He was told the police could do nothing, as he was not a burglar. He was advised to call up the druggist, who lives away up in the Bronx. He spent his last nickel in doing that, and the druggist told him he did not have the key to his own store, but would try to find the clerk by telephone and for him to make himself at home until relief arrived.

Mr. Cummings found himself completely surrounded by packages of candy, bottles of perfume, boxes of cigars, quantities of drugs and a soda fountain. Light from the street enabled him to see sufficiently to operate the soda fountain, and he did not let it get rusty by way of making himself perfectly at home. He could not find the spiritus frumenti bottle, but the cigars were good and so were the chocolates.

Police Headquarters suggested to the West 125th street station that a policeman might be sent around just to keep Mr. Cummings company. This was done, the policeman standing outside and looking in. He could not have any of the drug store delicacies which Mr. Cummings was enjoying. The captive did manage to slip a few cough drops out through the transom and blew Havana cigar smoke through the keyhole to let the policeman know how good it was.

It was three o'clock yesterday morning before the clerk with a key arrived and released Mr. Cummings and by that time he said he was an expert 'soda jerker.' He asked that the bill for his refreshments be sent to him.

WILL OF RICHARD HARDING DAVIS

DIED WORTH $250,000, LEFT TO WIFE AND DAUGHTER

White Plains, N.Y., April 25.—The will of Richard Harding Davis, the novelist and war correspondent, who died at his country place, Cross Road Farm, at Mount Kisco, has been filed. The main portion of his estate, estimated to be worth about $250,000, is placed in the hands of a trustee for the benefit of his widow, Elizabeth Genevieve McAvoy Davis, and his daughter, Hope.

The will which was signed on March 17, 1915, in its opening paragraph directs the testator's cremation, and then orders that his personal property such as jewelry, furniture, etc., be divided among his widow, his sister, Nora Davis Farrar, of Turgoose, B. C., and his brother, Charles Belmont Davis, of New York. The executor, however, shall respect the first choice of Mrs. Davis as to her share of the personal property.

The remainder of the estate is turned over to the trustee who is to hold it in trust and pay the income to the widow until her daughter is 21 years old, and then one-half of the income goes to the daughter and the balance to Mrs. Davis "as long as she remains my widow," the testator says.

Easter Vestry Meetings At Anglican Churches

At the vestry meeting at St. John's Church, last night, there was a large number of the congregation present. Rev. Canon Davidson presided. Rev. Canon Cornish was also present. Col. A. Stevenson and J. J. Howden, Wardens, presented the financial statement, showing the receipts to be $5,210.28 and the expenditures $5,180.10. The report was adopted.

The Rector appointed Mr. W. F. Johnston his Warden, and Mr. W. R. Morris was elected People's Warden. Reports were read from the Sunday School, the Choir, the Chancel Guild, the Girls' Auxiliary and the Woman's Auxiliary.

Votes of thanks were passed to the retiring wardens, the choir and the Sunday School.

Mr. Robert Fair was re-elected to the Nicholls Hospital Board and Mr. H. Rush to the Protestant Home Board.

Messrs. H. Rush, G. A. Smith and J. A. Aylmer were appointed lay delegates to the Synod.

ALL SAINTS' CHURCH

The annual Easter vestry meeting of All Saints' was held in the Parish Hall last evening, with the Rector, Rev. R. B. Grobb, M.A., in the chair and was largely attended.

The financial statement was read by Mr. E. L. Davis, and the missionary report by Mr. A. E. Smeaton, the rector's warden. The report of the Sunday school was read by the superintendent, Mr. C. E. Sisson, and showed the Sunday school to be in a very flourishing condition, with a total enrolment of 363, the high water mark in the history of the school. The Rector presented his own report and that of the Poor Fund.

Encouraging reports were read by representatives of the various church auxiliaries:

The Women's Auxiliary—Mrs. T. H. Hooper.

The Women's Guild—Mrs. Smeaton.

The Junior Auxiliary—Mrs. Blois.

Chancel Guild and Font Roll—Miss Cairns.

The Choir—Mr. Geo. Chandler.

Talent System—Miss Rush.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Rector's Warden—Mr. A. E. Smeaton.

People's Warden—Mr. E. L. Davis.

Vestry Clerk—Mr. Roberts.

Chairman of Sidesmen—Mr. Thos. Dawson.

Audiors—Mr. F. H. Dawson and Mr Jas. Edgar.

Rep. on Hospital Board—Mr. John Green.

Rep. on Charity Board—Mr. Wm. Buller.

After much interesting discussion on matters pertaining to the church's welfare, the meeting adjourned at a late hour to meet again in two weeks.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH.

The annual Easter Vestry meeting of St. Luke's Church, Ashburnham, was held last evening, when a good representation of the male members of the congregation was present. The Rector, Rev. W. H. White, was in the chair. The People's Warden for the past year, Mr. Wm. Manioce, presented the financial statement, showing the finances of the Church, as a result of the special Easter offering, to be in a healthy condition. Mr. J. J. Turner, Jr., who had charge of the special Easter offering stated that $450 had been the amount asked for, in order to wipe out the deficit for the past year. Up to Easter Day $400 had been received, and with amounts outstanding, that have already been subscribed, the total would be brought up to $500. Considering the large number of young men who have enlisted from this congregation, this is indeed a creditable showing.

Election of Officers.

The election of Church officers for the year was then proceeded with, and resulted as follows:

Church Wardens — Messrs. Wm. Manioce; Rector's Warden, J. J. Turner, Jr., People's Warden.

Assistant Wardens — Messrs. A. Moffatt and H. Wickenden.

Vestry Clerk—Mr. W. B. Rogers.

Delegates to Synod—Messrs. E. A. Peck, J. J. Turner, Jr., and R. H. Parsons.

Advisory Board—The Rector, Wardens, Assistant Wardens, E. A. Peck, R. H. Parsons, A. Fitzgerald, Jas. Ball, G. Carpenter, F. Adams, R. H. Turner, R. B. Rogers, A. F. Calder, Geo. Curtis, R. Northcotte, H. Carter, Capt. Copperthwaite, H. Fitch, W. H. Carter, G. O. Cameron, J. Michaels, A. Curtis, R. McKee and P. A. Crane.

Representative on Charity Board—Mr. A. Fitzgerald.

Protestant Home Board—Rev. W. H. White.

Nicholls Hospital Board—Mr. E. A. Peck.

Messrs. R. H. Parsons, E. A. Peck and J. J. Turner reported on the proposed scheme to enlarge the Sunday School. While it was felt it wouldn't be advisable to proceed with the work at the present time, it was decided to leave the matter in the hands of the Church Wardens to secure plans and specifications for the same and estimates as to the cost.

The meeting then adjourned until two weeks from last night, when the reports of the various societies will be presented.

YOUR HEART FLUTTERS SERIOUS IF NEGLECTED

The heart is an unfailing index of strength. Bodily vigor and a strong heart go hand in hand.

A slight fluttering and shortness of breath is a sign of failing strength, arising from weakened digestive power, or from weakness of the nervous system.

The organic and dangerous affections of the heart seldom manifest themselves until climax is reached.

Even a small variation in strength renders the heart susceptible on the emotional side, and a little fright, anxiety or haste will set it going at a frightful rate.

You ought to know that when your heart flutters easily, when you breath comes in gasps, when you tire quickly upon exertion, and rest does not recuperate, you have allowed yourself to run down.

Under these conditions Ferrosone acts like magic in its strength-giving power. Thousands of Canadians can testify to the marvelous curative power of Ferrosone.

When it's remembered that Ferrosone has the power of making rich, red blood, of giving tone to the system, of vitolising all the functional powers of the body, it will be seen in cases such as yours, in which these fluttering sensations are present, Ferrosone will speedily restore you to health.

Ferrosone makes you strong because it enables you to digest your food, because it makes rich, red blood—because it tones, strengthens, reinforces the whole system.

"I was so overcome with heart fluttering and acute indigestion I could scarcely walk upstairs without panting and catching for my breath," writes E. K. Young, a well known merchant in Augusta. "After using one box of Ferrosone I improved, and after two months I was cured and am sound and healthy as ever to-day."

The best proof of Ferrosone's merit is the enormous good it will do you in your own case; try it. 50c per box or six boxes for $2.50, at all dealers.

RIVER PILOT, LONG MISSING, IS FOUND

Insurance Company Desiring to Pay Policy, Starts Search that Proves Successful.

ST PAUL, Minn., April 24.—A world-wide search by James J. Hill, John R. Mitchell, Colonel J. H. Davidson, George H. Hazzard and other St. Paul pioneers for Aaron R. Russell, an old steamboat captain, terminated when Captain Russell was found in a home for the aged in Los Angeles, Cal.

In 1864 Captain Russell took out a life insurance policy. He made the last payment on the policy in 1868, and about that time borrowed $13 on it. Captain Russell disappeared after that and nothing more was heard of him. It was learned later that Captain Russell was married.

The insurance policy was of a non-forfeitable character and several months ago the insuring company asked the Territorial Pioneer Association of Minnesota for information concerning Captain Russell, as it desired to pay the policy. The search for the old pilot began.

All the towns along the Red River were corresponded with, but without success. Mr Hill said he remembered Captain Russell very well and thought he had gone to Europe some years ago with Lord Wolseley. Every clew was followed but to no avail. An advertising campaign in the news papers was started and Captain Russell read one of the advertisements and wrote to Mr. Hazzard.

It was found Captain Russell and his wife had a fruit farm ranch near Angeles some years ago, but became too old to work it and with the last of their savings bought life memberships in a home for the aged in Los Angeles. Today the insurance company sent Captain Russell a check for $300. In his early days Captain Russell was a pilot on the Minnesota and Mississippi rivers.

ABDICATION OF CZAR FERDINAND SUGGESTED

LONDON, April 24.—The correspondent of the London Daily News at Rome sends the following dispatch:

"The unpopularity of the King of Bulgaria, who is accused of selling the country to the Austro-Germans is increasing, and his abdication is openly suggested as the only remedy to emancipate Bulgaria from Austro-German domination.

"The King's power, meanwhile, is weakening. He did not dare to oppose the release of M Ghenadieff who was arrested and accused of high treason at King Ferdinand's orders."

Lone Detective in Ambush Captures Escaped Convict

BUFFALO, April 25.—No detectives have yet arrived from New York to take charge of the artillery ammunition, detonators, percussion caps and fuses found here Thursday night in the trunks of Harry L. Newton, under arrest in New York city on a charge of conspiring to dynamite public buildings. In fact the local police have come to the belief that the New York authorities are finding it difficult to place a charge against Newton that will stand in court, and are now relying more on the reported confession of the young man rather than the supposed bomb materials found in his baggage in this city.

Newton, the police declare would have no trouble in accounting for the presence of the fuses and projectiles in the trunk, inasmuch as he had been employed for more than a year in munitions plants both in Canada and the United States. He might claim that he was carrying them with him as souvenirs of the shops he had worked in and the detectives would find difficulty in upsetting the statement.

A careful examination last evening of the projectile found in the trunk, showed it contained no explosive. It contained several hundred shrapnel bullets, but there was no charge by which it might have been exploded. The shell case, also found in the trunk was free of all explosive.

The only really dangerous articles in the trunks were the percussion caps. They were loaded and ready to be fired.

To-day, unless instructions are received from New York city directing some other disposition of the Newton property the projectile and shell case and fuses and percussion caps, together with Newton's letters and clothing, will be turned over to District Attorney Guy B. Moore.

Shears in the kitchen may be great savers of time. Use them to trim lettuce, cut raisins and figs, dress chickens, prepare grapefruit and for many other uses that may be discovered daily by the thinking housewife.

French Soldier in German Prison Gives Harrowing Details of Life

Harrowing details of life in a German prison hospital are given by Chas. Heanebois, in a volume titled "In the Hands of Germany; the Diary of a Wounded Prisoner." A few extracts culled from it show what the majority of wounded Frenchmen have to endure when they fall into the hands of their opponents, who seem to have no conception of the rights of a prisoner nor commiseration for the wounded. The happenings of two days tell the whole tale. It is as follows:

"November 21.—New restrictions on our right to write; we can now only write one letter at a time. The food was bad, but a healthy man could digest it. Now it is cut down suddenly. The bread is worm eaten. We are no longer allowed to purchase in the town. Surveillance severe, gloomy, suspicious. Searches in our possessions every day. We are forbidden to receive packages from France. We try to let our friends know but our letters are forwarded so tardily that many are still on the way. Will we get the packages now bound to us? We are soon put to rest on the matter. Those for whom parcels arrive are handed the wrappers and have to pay a tax of 80 pfennings a kilogramme for preserves and chocolate. And then the contents are seized.

"Everything goes into strange hands—'It is a strange gift that the French wounded make to the German friends,' the Boche chaplain tells us.

"Now the Gazette de Lorraine, a special edition, printed in horrible French, is interdicted to us. It is not much of a loss. What villainies that sheet contained-! What insults to a good Frenchman!! An insert in a great German daily it was the receptacle for all the absurd rumors that German minds could think of.

"But this interdiction carries with it a grave deprivation. No more French books, fiction or otherwise; no more German dictionaries, nor even the old illustrated papers that the prisoners had thumbed over. We are prisoners and prison means silence, solitude. To read would be to think. To read of France—even evil—would be to exalt in us a latent tenderness, to blow to life the embers of blackened enthusiasm. The shadow of Germany has come between us and our beloved authors. I had the Demon de Midi, of Bourget, so interesting. It was seized at once. And I had had to conceal my notes in my bed.

"White paper in a drawer attracted attention. The Prussian soldier who found it was exasperated.

"'What's this paper for? Where did it come from?'

"'To study German.' My response was very calm. He showed his hatred.

"'You will have time to do that when it is spoken in your pib of a country!'

—"'Never,' I exclaim. He raises his fist over my bed; then he laughs brutally, insultingly. He left me but I was crying with rage, white as a sheet in my weakened condition.

"Oh, how horrible to be only an invalid, in this bed of pain, on stained sheets, unable to smash that barbarian in the eye :to throw his insults down his throat!

"November 24.—After the interdiction, confiscation. By order this morning, the searching has begun again. We had postal cards for which we paid dearly when we bought them. They were seized from our hands. The brutal order came suddenly, without warning. And with them went our tobacco supply.

"Adieu, the cigarettes. No more pipes!"

ROUMANIA AWAITS OUTCOME OF THE BIG VERDUN BATTLE

BUDAPEST, via London, April 24.—A member of the Roumania Parliament who came here in connection with the grain deal arranged between Roumania and the Central Powers, according to which the remaining wheat and other cereals are being bought by the governments of Austria and Germany, with the Berlin Zentral Einhaufs Gesellschaft as intermediary, declared that the dissolution of the Roumania Chamber will follow the return of Mr. Filipescu from Russia and that the government is asking advice on the subject from prominent Roumanian jurists.

He stated that the Roumanian government contemplates dissolving Parliament without new elections taking place within the time appointed by the constitution and wants to satisfy itself regarding the legality of the act. The jurists who were asked to give opinions on the subject all declared that it is perfectly in accordance with the spirit of the constitution to dissolve the house and govern without it under the abnormal conditions existing; for the Parliament being a hotbed of dissension owing to the extreme efforts of Austro-German agents, would only serve to impede the action of the government. All the professors of Bucharest University who are regarded as authorities on the question of law and constitutional rights advised Mr. Bratiano to take this course.

The dissolution of the Roumanian Parliament is expected to occur, according to my informant, within a month. When asked about the actual meaning of the step he declared that, "although there are many responsible politicians in Roumania who are sorry to see the government taking this course, all agree that under the present conditions it would be unwise on the part of Mr. Bratiano not to adopt it if he intends to take action on the side of either of the belligerent groups."

This much he could say with certainty, that the government has decided to take action and that in Roumanian political circles it is believed the government waits only for the announced spring offensive of the Allies in order to declare itself on the side of the Entente. He added that the Verdun offensive was and is being followed with the utmost interest in Roumania and that its outcome will no doubt have a great effect on the future attitude of that country.

This Roumanian gentleman, who professed to be "first of all Roumanian" and not in sympathy with any of the belligerents, and who believed that Roumanian ought not to enter the war at all, nevertheless was of opinion that it would be impossible for Roumania to play the same game as was played in Bulgaria by the King.

Mending Disfigured Faces Work of a Great Sculpture

At the beginning of the war Col. Bruce Porter of the R.A.M.C., made a speech to the Chelsea Arts Club. He said it was a finer thing to mend the bodies of broken soldiers than to paint pretty faces on canvas. He asked his hearers to make a sacrifice of their art and, if they were too old to fight, to accept the lowliest service in the ranks of the R.A.M.C. Among his hearers was the sculptor Mr. Derwent Wood. A few months after the making of this speech I paid a visit to the Third London Military Hospital, on Wandsworth Common. As I walked across the grounds with Colonel Bruce Porter we came across a party of orderlies rolling a newly laid asphalt path. The colonel stopped and introduced me to these orderlies. One of them was Mr. Derwent Wood.

Now, see how things fall out. Derwent Wood was soon drafted into the wards. He took plaster casts of damaged limbs. He became a master of splints. In the course of this work he saw some of the saddest sights of war; he saw the human face so awfully disfigured that a man must shudder to behold such havoc. This sight moved the sculptor's compassion. He went to his colonel and said to him: "Let me see what I can do to those poor smashed faces; let me see if I can build them up again." Gladly did the Colonel consent. But who was to pay for such work? The colonel has a benevolent fund at his wonderful hospital, and out of these gifts of money from wealthy friends and grateful patients he does many a kind and beautiful action which could hardly pass the official auditor. He said, "The benevolent fund shall pay."

There was a fine trooper in the hospital, a married man, whose face had been broken by an explosive bullet. I must not attempt to describe the ruin of that face. Enough for you to know that this noseless man himself said it was impossible to live in that condition. And of a truth it was a thousand times better for him to be dead. Well, I have just been talking to this man. Across the room it is impossible to detect anything unusual in his face. At the distance of a few paces you see only a mark like a scar on one of his cheeks. And he laughs when he talks to you; and he tells you that he is going to drive a taxicab and he says that he can now paint his nose whatever colour he chooses—green if he likes. Ah, but he speaks in a quite different voice, and he does not jest at all when he tells you, or tries to tell you, what his feelings are toward Derwent Wood. This man has a wife who adores him, and his home is his heaven.

To find that you can give a man back his face, to find that you can fill up horror with a semblance of human beauty, to discover that a boy who has fought for you and who has become so tragically blasted that it were better for him to die, can be patched and repaired in such a manner that no one can detect his ruin—I doubt if life can give many greater moments than these. The first rapture, of course, will go. The work will become hard, fatiguing, monotonous. Instead of the discoverer's thrill, the artist's craving for creative work will come and will stay. The highest qualities of the human mind—patience, a sense of duty and endurance—will have to be summoned, and summoned often. And in those days Derwent Wood will have to go back, I think, many, many times to this shabby and cold scullery for strength and for inspiration.

DEVICE DETECTS TORPEDOES AT 6 MILES' DISTANCE

BRITISH NAVY HAS BEEN USING IT FOR SOME MONTHS, SAYS DESPATCH.

New York, April 24.—A Paris cable to the Sun says:

"M. Canton, an inventor who says he has made an electric device which will detect the presence of torpedoes at a distance of six miles, first established himself as an inventor by making an electric lamp giving a light three times as strong as any yet known."

A London syndicate paid him 100,000 francs ($20,000) for the lamp invention. Later M. Canton met two Belgian engineers, M. Van Der Hagen and M. Van Wynberger, in London. He told them that he had invented an electric means of signalling the approach of a torpedo.

The British navy, he said, had been using the device for some months with the result that no British warship had been torpedoed wherever the apparatus was established. The engineers agreed to furnish the capital to back the device.

A contract was made with a view of selling the rights to France. Experiments were begun in Toulon in the presence of an officer appointed by M. Painleve, Minister of Inventions. The engineers returned to London.

M. Canton left London and quietly went to Holland where the Belgian engineers say, he tried to sell the patent. A member of the London syndicate went to Holland and brought the inventor back.

The engineers returned to Paris, where M. Canton had a good time at the expense of the London syndicate. His departure for Spain for the purpose of getting some electrical equipment followed.

BAD COLD IN THE CHEST.

"I am happy to tell you that I used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and was promptly cured of a very bad cold in the chest," writes Mrs. Josephine Gauthier, Dover South, Ont. You can depend on Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine to relieve and cure all inflammations and irritations of the throat and bronchial tubes.

MAY DIE FROM RIFLE SHOT

Thomas Conroy Is Probably Fatally Wounded While With Lad Playing With Gun.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y., April 25.—Thomas Conroy, seventeen years old, is in the White Plains Hospital with a wound in his left lung from a bullet fired from a rifle. According to a statement to the police the boy, with his brother Francis, fourteen, and two cousins, who are sons of Chief of Police Harmon, was on his way to a fishing place when they met Davin Lucatorta and Dominick Papa who had a rifle. The Lucatorta boy shot at a tree to show the other boys how his rifle worked.

When the boys parted another shot was fired at the tree and, the police said, Thomas Conroy fell with a bullet wound in his back and lung. He is not expected to live. The police said that the shooting was accidental.

Order Germans From Portugal

All Teutons, Except Men of Military Age and Fitness, Are Notied to Leave.

PARIS, April 24.—As a result of the entrance of Portugal into the war Germans in that country have been notified to leave within five days, a Lisbon despatch to the Temps says.

This order applies to all Germans except men of military age and fitness, who are to be interned on Terceira Island, one of the Azores where a state of siege has been declared.

All commercial transactions with Germans, the Temps says, are declared void and treaties are abrogated. The property of German subjects is being sequestered, and all further recognition of German ownership in industries is suspended.

The Gladiolus

The gladiolus is to the summer garden what the geranium is to the window garden in winter—a flower that can always be depended on to give satisfaction—a flower that is always sure of admiration—and a flower that any one can grow successfully with little trouble.

It should be given a rich soil, and this soil should be worked over and over until it is as light and mellow as possible. A sandy loam seems to suit it best, though it will do well in any soil that contains a liberal amount of plant food. A soil that will grow corn well can be depended on to grow this plant to perfection.

It should not be planted until the soil has become warm. If put into the ground too early in the season, while the moisture in the soil is excessive, and the weather is unsettled, it frequently decays. Therefore do not be in too great a hurry to get it under way. You gain nothing by it, and you may lose everything.

Planting in Clumps.

Plant from six to a dozen corms in a clump. If this is done you get a much stronger show of colour when the plants come into bloom. If planted singly you will only have two or three flower stalks, and the effect will not be what it ought to be in order to get the greatest amount of pleasure from this plant.

When set in groups, as suggested the effect will be remarkably fine. This is the way to plant it when it is used in the border among perennials and shrubs.

Complaint is often made that the tall flower stalks are broken down by strong winds, and, once broken down they seldom regain their upright position. Some have staked their plants tying each stalk to a support, but this has spoiled the effect because of the formality of the method. Try this plan:

Take a piece of woven wire netting a little larger than the space in which the corms are planted—just enough larger to allow the flower stalk on the outside of the group to spread out gracefully—and fasten this to stakes about eighteen inches high. There should be four of them—one at each corner. When the flower stalks are up they should be trained through the meshes of the netting.

In this way they will get all the support they need, and the effect will be pleasing because they are not fastened rigidly, therefore they can arrange themselves in a natural manner, which they cannot do when tied to stakes. The netting will not be noticeable at a little distance, while stakes will always be unpleasantly in evidence.

We have no other garden flower that has as wide a range of colour as the gladiolus. There are two or three good whites, but the chief colour is red, in shades ranging from rose to darkest scarlet and crimson, with purples, yellows, mauves, and lilacs, and combinations of all these colours in such endless variety that it is impossible to give a person an adequate idea of it in words.

When to Cut.

Planted about the middle of May the gladiolus ought to come into bloom about the middle of August, and for a month or six weeks they will make a magnificent show. As a cut flower we have nothing better. Cut a stalk when the first flower on it expands, and change the water in which it is placed daily, and every bud on it will develop. For church use we have no better plant.

In October life the roots and spread them out in the sunshine for several days in succession to ripen. Then cut off the stalk close to the corm, and store these in paper bags, hanging them in a place where they will keep dry and cool, but be sure that no frost gets to them. Some persons bury the corms in boxes of sand that has had all moisture taken out of it. Dampness must be guarded against.

AMERICAN AVIATORS AID.

Squadrilla of 30 for Special Service on French Front.

Paris, April 24.—The first separate American volunteer squadrilla of the French flying corps has been constituted, and is stationed at a point on the front assigned it, where it is fighting as a separate unit, under a French officer. All the aviators are equipped with the fastest type of machines. The squadrilla numbers more than 30 pilots, all of whom have proved their skill and daring. Several have been cited in orders already published for bringing down foe aviators. Other American fliers previously assigned to service at the front have been cooperating with French airmen in the defence of Paris.

OLD ARMY HUTS REVEALED.

Occupied by Continental and British Troops in New York in 1776.

New York, April 24. — Forty-five huts erected and tenanted in 1776 by the American army under General Heath and by the British and Hessian troops, who drove the Americans from Manhattan Island in the battle of Washington Heights, have been unearthed at Broadway and 218rd street. The site is soon to be turned over to the city as an historical Park. The huts were composed in part of bricks, stood in three rows and contained many relics, including English and Hessian coins, a set of dice fashioned from musket bullets, quarts arrow-heads and broken china.

Buttons and belt buckles of the 17th Leicestershire Foot, 14th Buckinghamshires, Coldstream Guards, 23rd Welsh Fusiliers, two Black Watch regiments and an Inniskilling regiment were found. Some of the huts will be reconstructed in the park.

Doctor Says Take Iron
For Your Blood, Phosphorous
For Your Nerves

People have been suffering untold agony for years doctoring for their nerves when there real trouble was, want of phosphorus in their system.

Doctors are surprised after many years of experience to find that they were unable to find that the real cause of nervous weak run down people was due directly to lack of phosphorus for the nervous system and iron for the blood circulation. The moment that phosphorus is given you can notice the nerves beginning to tighten and you begin to get control of your nerves once again. Without phosphorus the system becomes weaken, your stomach is unable to digest the little food that you eat, your liver becomes torpid, the kidneys start to pain you, the blood becomes clogged with impurities, the color of your face is muddy, then your hands, head and legs begin to shake through lost of control of your nerves. One is taking medicine for kidney trouble another is taking laxative every night, others taking poultices, spring tonics, some can't sleep for touching nerves, and some give up all hopes thinking they are too old and there is no hope for them. You have almost ruined your system and vitality by taking all these medicines for something that never ailed you and you have no person to blame now but yourself if you do not start at once by going to your druggist and get a few cents worth of Bonized Phosphorus with iron and take one or two tablets after each good meal. Give yourself a good ice cold bath every morning, rubbing yourself well; eat plenty of good wholesome vegetables, fruit and drink plenty of water every time you think of it. Here is good advice which millionaires are paying specialists thousands of dollars for to look well, eat well, sleep well, work well digest well look well. As we are here only for a short stay do why not be healthy, strong, vigor and enjoy our short, sweet life. People can talk as they like about all the wonders, life and death, stories about medicines that have cured them, but when you come right down to scientific proofs, hard facts, there has been nothing in medical science to compare with just ordinary Bronzed Phosphorus with iron to restore wrecked systems, put vigorous life in old people, color in your cheeks, clear thinking, strong nerves and strength like a giant.

Bronzed Phosphorus with iron does not contain an atom of arsenic strychnine or any poison which has been found so harmful in almost every tonic. It is easy to take, does not upset the stomach and is quickly up by the system immediately making you feel better at once. It is guaranteed by this city at either of F. C. Webber's stores at 50c a box.

MILITARY NEWS

The total of recruits from Military District No. 3 up to April 15th was 31,325. This means that as soon as 9,005 more men come forward and don the khaki this military district will have supplied its quota of the 500,000 asked for by Premier Borden on New Year's Day.

Canada's male population based on the last census shows a total of 3,821,067. The Premier virtually asked for 13 per cent. when he said 500,000. The male population of Military District No. 3 on the same basis is 310,235 and 13 per cent of this number is 40,330.

When half a million men were called from Canada of that number 40,330 were asked for from this military district. Of that number 31,325 have already responded. This is a splendid record.

There were 1,390 recruits secured in Military District No. 13 in the two weeks up to April 15th. This number divides up according to the official figures as follows:

Canadians	906
English	414
Scotch	88
Irish	19
Others	63

Corp. Fred Leal of the 130th battalion, Smith's Falls was in the city over the Easter ho. day visiting his parents Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Leal. He is a brother of Pte. Douglas Leal killed at Langemarck and has two other brothers in the 21st battalion.

Recruiting for the 99rd Battalion showed a big improvement yesterday and to-day. Ten recruits were secured yesterday, and a number of others were examined this morning. Among the new recruits is Pte. Fred Hatcher, brother of Pte. Walter and Pte. Harold Hatcher, of the 99rd.

An effort is being made to give every member in the 99rd Battalion a pair of socks at the sock shower on May 10th. Are you knitting a pair for some boy in the Battalion?

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Federal Triumvirate Boosts Way Into Hearts of Giant Followers

KAUFF, RARIDEN AND ROUSH ALREADY ACCLAIMED AS STARS BY ENTHUSED FANS.

With so manp new stars glittering in the baseball sky "fans" are daily getting their fill at the games. Among the most noted of to-day's heroes are the offsprings of the Federal League, who were taken back into organized baseball after peace was declared last December. Almost everyone of the National League clubs and several of the American have been strengthened by players from the defunct organization.

The Giants seem to have fared better than any club in the game through the death of the Federals, "Benny" Kauff, "Eddie" Roush and "Bill" Rariden having been added to the local squad and started right in the midst of the struggle as regulars in good standing. And seemingly as if trying to prove that the Federal League was an organization of playing strength while in the field, Kauff, Roush and Rariden are doing the best playing of any of the Giant regulars.

Peculiarly enough in the opening games to date the Giants' attack has been carried to the fore by the above named triumvirate. Kauff, of course, has attracted the most attention, as "Benny" likes to tell of his ability and does not select his listeners. A great soap box orator was lost when "Benny decided to improve baseball by flinging in his lot with the national game. Had "Benny" been running for office and his election depended upon what he said for himself, he would have gone straight to the president's chair without a strikeout against him.

KAUFF ALREADY A HERO.

—However, Kauff is a baseball player of the first water. He has said so, and to date he has proved everything he has said by exhibiting his ability under fire. Not once has he wavered and not once has he missed an opportunity to make good. That he is bound to become a great New York hero is probably as great as any who ever won popularity through baseball is the statement of John McGraw.

Hitting as the cleanup batter of the team and already selected by the opposing pitchers as the man to be prepared against, Kauff is meeting the ball for an average of .350. In twenty times at bat he has faced the ball into safe territory seven times, and has scored three runs. His base running which causes lots of trouble for opposing catchers in the Federal circuit, has shown itself, he having purloined three sacks for a grand average of .500, which would indicate, that if he continues at that pace he will have carried away more than 75 stolen bases before the season closes.

Not alone has his hitting been everything asked but his fielding has been sensational. In his first game he exhibited his throwing arm by a heave from deep centre which cut down Nieboff at the plate and saved a ticklish situation. He covers a lot of territory and handles fly balls considerably like "Tris" Speaker. That he will be an immense help to the Giants nobody who has seen him in action will deny.

RARIDEN MOST VALUABLE.

Almost as useful and valuable to the Giants as Kauff stands modest, quiet "Bill" Rariden, the hard working catcher who McGraw now uses as his regular receiver. Speedy, capable, mechanically almost perfect in his backstopping, Rariden has gained thousands of friends already. A finished workman, who takes as of the labor from the pitcher as is possible and who is not satisfied unless he is in in every game, Rariden is more than earning his salary. John McGraw counts Rariden his most valuable man and Rariden is daily showing why.

When "Pat" Powers was auctioneering off his talent and was trying to interest McGraw in Rariden, he told the Giant manager that besides being the best catcher in captivity, Rariden was a timely hitter. "Why, if he only hits .200 he will drive in as many runs as many man on your club," optimistically and enthusiastically declared Powers. "I hope so," doubted McGraw as he advised Harry N. Hempstead to purchase the player.

Powers may have been trying to sell his property for big sums but to date it does not seem he overestimated the worth or hitting ability of Rariden. Right now he is hammering the ball for an even average of .300 and has sent three runs clattering over the plate in his last two games. Thursday Rariden singled to centre with a runner on third and one on second, and on Friday he connected savagely with a teammate waiting on second. If that is not hitting timely "Pat" Powers does not know anything about baseball.

ROUSH IN LIMELIGHT.

The final member of the Federal output came to the Giants unheralded as a star, but mentioned only as a good, consistent player, who would plug up several holes before the season was over. He is "E." Roush. Roush is not working under the handicap given Kauff, nor is he considered the star that is Kauff, but he is helping the Giants nevertheless. His batting average to date is .294 and his hits have come at a most useful time. A fast man on the bases, a careful and sure guardian of the outfield territory assigned to him, Roush is rushing into the hearts of the Giant "fans" and daily earning the title of star.

"Bill" McKechnie and "Fred" Anderson and two other Federals on the Giants, have not made such remarkable showings as have done the other three, but they have worked hard and conscientiously and are certain to gain a place on the hero role soon. Anderson should have won his game against Philadelphia on Friday, and had he been backed up at all well he certainly would have realized a victory. He shows symptoms of being a great pitcher.

Giant Pitchers Not in Condition

Wanted—Men of athletic mould who can stand 60 feet 6 inches away from a given mark and throw a baseball with enough speed and deception to baffle the batting eyes of paid experts. Apply at once to John McGraw, manager of the Giants.

The above advertisement was not inserted in the newspapers of the country yesterday, but it would have been if John McGraw thought he would get results in this way. Dangling at the end of his rope of patience, McGraw is about ready to declare that there are no more pitchers in the world besides the men now enjoying life, liberty and the pursuit of victory on opposition baseball clubs.

The manager of the Giants does not care to be interviewed about his pitchers. He has a hard time controlling his feelings without talking about the failure of the alabmen to hold up their end of the game. He admits that the pitching problem is more difficult than the puzzle of the Sphinx, and he asserts that right now he has as little hope of solving either problem, with the prospects as good for one as for the other.

Pitchers Get Respite.

Cold weather and overabundance of moisture prevented one or more Giant pitchers from working yesterday against Grover Cleveland Alexander, but it did not keep McGraw from wondering when these pitchers would get into condition to hold the opposition in check. Not in many years has McGraw been so depressed about his twirlers nor have his prospects been so dismal.

"Rube" Benton, the eccentric southpaw who almost motorcycled his way out of baseball while in Cincinnati, and now is carried by the Giants, probably will not be able to pitch for two weeks. John B. Foster says Benton will not pitch for years unless some warm weather chases the cold winds away.

When the club left Marlin and headed north on the exhibition trip Benton was in fair condition. But as soon as cold weather was met Benton's condition waned. He developed a sore arm and has not been able to rid himself of the ailment to rent a space in some Turkish bath Foster thinks it would be a good idea and put Benton in the middle of this space. "Maybe he would lose his sore arm there," suggested Foster.

Perritt Good in Spots.

"'Pol' Perritt was in great shape when at Marlin," continued Foster. "He seemed to be better able to handle the ball than at any time, and he cheered McGraw a lot by his work. But he does not seem able to stand up under any strain now. He pitches in spots, but none of these spots is around the Polo Ground. Perritt was a cold weather worker with St. Louis. I don't know what he might be called now."

"We were not expecting 'Matty' to start until warm weather sets in, but if the rest of the men continue to fail the veteran probably will have to step in and take his turn. At that, I think he will win more games than the rest. Tesreau is all right, but he can't win games alone. Anderson showed well Friday and Palmero appears to be able to win a game. The rest are decidedly uncertain."

If the pitchers alone were troubling McGraw he probably could wrestle and strangle this difficulty. But heaped upon his shoulders is the indifference of several other daily performers. In the six games played almost every man on the club has had a hand in helping to bring defeat rather than victory. Four games have been lost through errors. Some one is going to feel the wrath of McGraw soon.

PITTSBURG LEADER BANS THE CIGARETTE

In outlining his training policy Manager Callahan of the Pirates makes it plain that he will not insist on his men being teetotalers, although he demands temperance not only in drinking but in eating and everything else.

"I will not tolerate cigarette smoking, not only because I think it does an athlete no good but because I don't like the looks of the thing. My men must all be in their rooms by 11:30 at night and must be in uniform every day there is a game not later than 1:30.

"These are my general rules. I do not intend to hamper by men with a complicated set of regulations. Every man will be allowed as much liberty as possible so long as the privileges are not abused. If any of them show an inclination to overstep the prescribed boundary, then we will consider their cases individually and deal with them accordingly."

ROUMANIA'S CAPITAL GAYEST CITY IN EUROPE DESPITE WAR

As a Neutral Has Been Enriched by the War—Seems Indifferent to The Turmoil Around its Borders—Population in Favour of The Allies.

PERIOD OF PROSPERITY

By an Englishwoman

Living here in Bucharest, I find it difficult to realize that the most appalling catastrope the world has ever seen is shaking the very foundations of Europe. Bucharest is certainly at the present moment the gayest capital on the continent. Amazing as it may seem, the luxury loving Roumanians are more fiercely extravagant than ever in their pursuit of pleasure.

Theatres, music halls, ballrooms, cinemas and places of amusement of every description are crowded every night. In fashionable and expensive restaurants champagne flows to the fascinating strains of the delightful gypsy orchestras. In casinos gold is thrown away with a carelessness that makes one gasp; superb cars roll up and down the Calea Victorici bearing lovely, laughing women exquisitely dressed.

On every side one sees luxury, dissipation, extravagance, and—indifference. We foreigners look on with awe and amazement at the spectacle of this joyous crowd dancing madly round the edge of an active volcano.

The fact that this country may at any moment be forced into the deadly struggle does not seem to trouble the minds of the Bucharest people. Beyond loud rejoicings every time the allies gain an advantage the Roumanians do not manifest any very great interest in the great war.

Like other neutral countries Roumania has been greatly enriched by the war. for her wheat, maize, benzine, petroleum, etc., are in great demand in spite of the very high prices asked and the heavy taxes the government has put on all exports—taxes which have to be paid in gold.

The buyers are Austria and Germany, and need forces them to pay the price. So long as Roumania has corn to sell the Germans will not be reduced to famine.

* * *

During the month of January the British government bought up a quantity of Roumanian wheat, having suddenly awakened to this fact. This was such a serious blow to the Central Powers that Germany actually protested officially against the sale as being a hostile act. But M. Costinescu the capable finance minister, remained firm and the affair was definitely concluded.

If England had bought up long ago all the wheat this country had to dispose of the blockade would have been more efficacious and our brave men nearer to their goal.

Another source of wealth for Roumania at present is the propaganda which the Germans spread throughout the country. No effort is too great, no price too high ,to win her over to their side.

Their spies and agents are swarming everywhere. Bribery and corruption are rife. Many formerly respected and well known men not over blessed with this world's goods, have sold their consciences and gained huge sums of money by writing articles favorable to Germany in the various newspapers founded or bought for the purpose. Others (and they are more numerous) hitherto obscure, have set themselves up comfortably for the rest of their lives by selling their services to the propaganda committee.

The government is cautious and M. Bratianu astute enough to keep on good terms with both sides; he cleverly parries the extraordinary insolence of the German ambassador, for he does not want an ultimatum until he is prepared for it.

Almost the entire population of Roumania is for the allies and does not hesitate to show it openly.

* * *

Both the hated legations have had their windows smashed once, and on account of the hostile manifestations which have taken place from time to time they are strongly guarded day and night by policemen and soldiers, the latter being permanently quartered in the back premises ready for emergencies.

The two ministers seldom appear in public. Their newspapers, of which five are printed in Roumanian and two in German, are boycotted by the public, though large numbers of them are distributed gratis all over the town.

Exasperated by the insolence of the German edited paper Zina, the students recently turned out in groups, and seized all the copies they could lay their hands on and burned them in the open places. This done, they marched off singing patriotic songs and the "Marseillaise," to the pro-Teuton offices and demolished everything they could find.

The Germany colony in Bucharest is very large and important, and owing to the influence and protection of the late King Carol I. (born Prince Carl of Hohenzollern), and more particularly to the active interest taken in it by Queen Elisabeth (Princess of Wied), has prospered greatly. Besides a fine church there are splendid schools for both boys and girls, various clubs (vereins), ballrooms, a sanitarium run by "deaconesses," and innumerable shops, some of which rank among the best in Bucharest. The few factories to be found in Roumania are nearly all German.

Though Roumania is at present enjoying a period of exceptional prosperity, the misery of the lower classes is very great on account of the excessive rise in the price of everything owing to the war.

Being entirely an agricultural country almost everything one requires has to be imported save natural products. The few factories cannot work owing to the lack of raw materials, though one or two are working for the army. The British cotton mills have had to be closed for want of cotton. In fact the lack of cotton goods is getting serious; calico is scarce; a reel of swiug cotton costs 1s. 3d. and a cotton frock is dearer than a silk one.

* * *

Woollen goods are at fabulous prices and footwear also. Salad oil, olives, dried fruits, oranges, lemons, tea, coffee and cocoa are only for the rich; lard, butter, soap and candles are very expensive; all india rubber goods prohibitive, and rice so dear that if you were having some very select friends to dinner you would greatly impress them by having rice pudding on the menu.

Rents in Bucharest have been steadily going up for the last few years and have reached the climax. A small house composed of four rooms a kitchen with a little yard, costs about 100 pounds per annum, while a pretty looking house with five decent sized rooms, kitchen, servant's bedroom, and garden, costs 150 to 190 pounds per annum. The rich live in their own fine mansions with every modern comfort, but the poor have to pay 1 pound a month for one small room and a tiny kitchen.

The Roumanians are a light hearted, sociable race, extremely friendly, generous to a fault, and of proverbial hospitality. If frivolous they are kind hearted and quick to sympathise and life among them is in general very pleasant.

Their love of France is traditional; the upper classes speak French instead of Roumanian, read French books, wear French clothes, send their sons to study in Paris, and cultivate a French atmosphere in their homes.

Their hatred of Hungary, their secular enemy and the oppressor their race in Transylvania, is intense, and the Roumanian army, which is semi-mobilised since the war broke out, is eager to join in the frey.

This state or armed neutrality cannot last very much longer, and the Austro-Germans themselves do not try to deceive themselves as to the intentions of Roumania; their violent speeches and threats prove that they are beginning to lose all hope of winning her to their side.

Boys of Cities Lead Country In Sport Life

Advantages Gained By The Urban Lads are Superior For Training.

BY WALTER H. ECKERSALL.

Is the city bred or the country bred boy the best athlete? Each has his advantages and disadvantages. Probably the best way to answer is to go right down to the bottom of the subject and consider details.

Many athletes are made. Many are born. The athlete born with ability and instinct is superior. It takes years for the made athlete to acquire what the born athlete starts with.

How many fathers of country boys have had experience in athletics and encouraged their sons to follow sport? They are few and far between. Country parents are likely to lean toward development of the mind. Not necessarily so the body. It is true the country boy gets plenty of exercise in helping with the work around his home, but the wrong set of muscle for athletics is developed in this work. He may be able to walk farther, pitch hay long ... but when it comes to the final test on the athletic field he will find himself lacking in finesse.

CITY ENCOURAGES ATHLETICS

In the city from early childhood the boy's mind and body are developed at the same time. He is encouraged to follow athletics. Physical culture exercises, which are compulsory in the grammar high, and preparatory schools and colleges, are the best example of this.

In the country at the little red school house there are scarcely enough students to compose a baseball nine or football team. As a general rule they take little interest in track athletics. They play one old cat, scrub, or some game which does not require eighteen players. They know little of the fine points of any game, and their competitive work would be crude if compared with that of boys of their own age from a city school who have enjoyed coaching.

Another advantage in favor of the city boy is that he has opportunities to see the big teams play and gather pointers from their work. These boys have some player whom they consider a star in the branch of athletics they are intending to follow and they set him up as a model and endeavor to follow and copy his sanctions as closely as possible. They read books which give them helpful advice, and in many cases they know some college graduate who gives them instructions in their chosen line.

COUNTRY BOY MUST BE TAUGHT

These are advantages which the country boy does not have. He has no early instruction. When he is sent away to college and goes on the athletic field he finds out for himself how sadly lacking in athletic ability and knowledge he is. He will have to learn all the points which the city bred boys had been taught in high school. In many cases they do not master anything until the close of their second year, and as a result have lost one rear of competition. In natural strength and health the country boy is likely to prove superior.

Many a youngster is trained and developed when still a mere child by an athletically inclined father. The father takes pride in this work and notes the gradual advancement of his youngster and helps him at every turn. He buys him all the paraphernalia necessary and attends all the games his boy takes part in. The son, seeing this interest in his welfare, will take more interest in the sport himself and gradually will reach a high point of proficiency.

TOURNAMENTS HELD IN CITIES

In cities tournaments are held for the members of the various playgrounds. Interpack contests are conducted and the rivalry which exists between some of them has spurred the athletes to greater efforts. Everything possible is done by the directors to improve the performances of their respective members.

Considering these points and advantages which the city bred boy has over the country boy, it must be said that the city athlete should excel in the various lines of athletic endeavor. Of course there have been exceptions, but in the majority of cases the most finished athletes are bred in the city.

Some More Convincing Evidence

If more evidence were needed to demonstrate the exceptional value of the total abstainer as an insurance risk than what has already been published by this Company, it is found in the following Table covering the experience in the two Departments of the Company for the period of ten years.

Year	PER CENT OF EXPECTED LOSS: Abstainer	General
1905	56.65 per cent	74.20 per cent
1907	57.81 per cent	69.15 per cent
1909	53.50 per cent	68.46 per cent
1911	46.97 per cent	77.09 per cent
1913	60.68 per cent	64.96 per cent
1914	41.89 per cent	71.63 per cent
Average for Last 10 Years	59.68 per cent	66.19 per cent

Why not reap the advantages of Total Abstinence by insuring in a Company which grants the special terms and rates which the above Table clearly shows are deserved by those who classify for insurance in this Dept? The Head Office or any of the Branches throughout Canada will be glad to furnish full information on request.

Gus Hill's Big Musical Comedy Review, Polly and Her Pals

Gus Hill's review coming to "The Grand" next Saturday, April 29, for an engagement of 2 performances, represents a collection of all of the successful cartoon characters made famous in the past decade. 'Polly and Her Pals,' 'Pa and Ma Perkins and Polly,' are taken from the cartoons now running daily in the New York Globe, drawn by 'Pop,' 'Alex and George,' the 'Yellow Kids' of 'McFadden's Flats,' probably the first and greatest cartoon success ever known to journalism. 'Happy Hooligan' which has been running continuously in the New York American and other papers for the past twenty years. It is safe to say that more laughter could not possibly be gathered into the two and one half hour play. The fun is fast and furious, the only lull will be when a snappy musical number is being sung by the chorus to give the comedians time to get their breath. The play is designed purely for laughing purposes. A cast has been selected whose names will leave no doubt of their ability not only to make you laugh, but to keep you laughing continuously throughout the three acts of the entertainment. Of course, there's GIRLS, plenty of them. GIRLS who can sing and dance as well as look fascinating. You all know Annie Hart, she's one of the fun makers, so is Polly Holmes, both of whom have reputations that none can deny. Sallie Stembler and her brother Ed. the Stembler, known the land over in vaudeville and musical comedy, Grace Ady, a young prima donna with a wonderful future, Dan Gracy, one of the best Irish comedians in the country, Chic Burnham as Pa, and Dan Hughes as 'Hooligan,' the Washe-Brothers as 'The Yellow Kids' form a cast that will send you home with aching sides, and a happy feeling around your heart. There's youth and beauty to be found among the chorus maidens. The song numbers are not of the mushy sentimental sort, but arranged to keep the comedy, which is the paramount issue, going continually. You'll make no mistake in buying tickets for POLLY AND HER PALS.

DUBLIN RIOTS QUELLED AFTER SERIOUS FIGHTING

Russian Troops Are Said To Be Within Ninety Miles of Kut-El-Amara

Another Army is Reported to be Approaching Bagdad---Rioting Was Confined to The Dublin District

LONDON, April 26.—Russian troops are said to be within ninety miles of Kut-El-Amara, and another army is reported approaching Bagdad.

LONDON, April 26.—It was announced last night that rioting was confined to the Dublin district. Four officers, five soldiers, two volunteers, and two policemen were killed.

LONDON, April 26.—A German cruiser rescued the crew of an unknown vessel that struck a mine in the Baltic.

NEW YORK, April 26.—The Evening Mail said yesterday Irish leaders in New York had received a cypher cablegram that Dublin was captured by Irish volunteers Sunday night, that Lord Wimbourne, Lord Lieutenant, and the commander of British forces, with all the staff are prisoners in Dublin Castle, that German submarines in the Irish Sea prevent troops from England going to Ireland, and the situation is very critical.

BERLIN, April 26.—German Chancellor had a long conference with the Kaiser re American note.

Off to School, Full of Vim and Pep—Don't cram their little "tummies" with greasy meats, starchy potatoes or other indigestible foods. One or two Shredded Wheat Biscuits with hot milk make a warm, nourishing meal that supplies all the material needed for their growing bodies. The perfect food to study on, to grow on, to play on. The crispness of the shreds encourages thorough chewing, which develops sound teeth and healthy gums. Being ready-cooked, it is so easy to prepare a warm, nourishing meal with Shredded Wheat in a few moments—no kitchen worry or work.

American Ambassador Talks With The Imperial Chancellor on Submarines

Will Also See The Kaiser Before a Reply is Sent To America's Note---Seeking a Way Out

BERLIN, April 26.—Via London—The American Ambassador was called by telephone to the imperial chancellor's palace yesterday morning. He went immediately and the conference with Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg lasted an hour and ten minutes.

When he came from the conference Ambassador Gerard declined to give any information as to the nature of the discussion, and would not answer a question as to whether anyone else was present.

It is understood that the German reply to the American note will not be delivered before the imperial chancellor has another opportunity of conferring with the emperor.

Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg devoted the afternoon to conferences on the submarine question with Admiral Von Holtzendorff, chief of the admiralty staff. Several of the higher diplomatic officials participated.

HOW GERMANS FEEL.

The outcome of the present crisis depends upon what President Wilson and the American Government want. The general view of the present situation as gleaned from sources close to official circles is about as follows:

If President Wilson and the American Government are arguing that earlier concessions by Germany have not been adhered to, and insist that the submarine campaign be conducted without deviation within the limits of German assurances and pledges in former notes, then a settlement can probably be arranged, despite what is considered the "sharp and unfriendly tone" of the American note. The pledges can probably be restated if necessary, and definitely formulated, so that there can be no possibility of error or question of responsibility.

NO FURTHER LIMITATION.

If, however, the United States insists upon a further limitation of the submarine warfare against commerce, then there appears to be little chance of agreement for a satisfactory settlement, and it is considered that a breach of diplomatic relations cannot be avoided. These views are not authoritative, but represent the opinions of persons who are in a position to be well informed. These persons carefully refrained from making definite or authoritative predictions, and specified that they were voicing only their opinions, but these may possibly be straws showing which way the wind is blowing.

The request of Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg for a conference with Ambassador Gerard is thought to have been inspired by the desire of the imperial chancellor to find out what President Wilson's intentions actually are.

Germans Fear The Russians

"The Russian is Terrible" Say Teuton Army and Officers

As to the qualities and characteristics of the various non-Teutonic soldiers of Europe, German army officers speak interestingly and not without generosity, says the New York Times. The French soldier is gallant, nervous and very brave, only it is difficult to make him return a second or third time into the same fire. The English fighter is dogged and individually resourceful. The Italian, though ferocious in assault, on one impulse and hates to repeat his own deed for a second charge. That is how a German sees three of his adversaries. Ah to a fourth, he volunteers nothing, but if he is pressed, he will add: "The Russian is terrible."

The meaning of that assertion develops slowly, with many hesitations. It is not that the individual Russian soldier is particularly terrible. No, that is not what he means to say. The Russian cannot be singularized. You have to think of Russians, infinite in plurality ,a slow-moving, ominous, imposing mass. They come in lines ten and twelve deep, heedless and heavy, so controlled by their own momentum that they cannot stop. They will go anywhere, into anything, again and again, as if they did not know how to be afraid. "The only thing you can do," says the German officer "is to slaughter them and pray that you will have ammunition enough to keep it up."

TO SAVE EYES

Is the Object of This Free Prescription—Try It If your Eyes Give You Trouble.

Thousands of people suffer from eye troubles because they do not know what to do. They know some good home remedy for every other minor ailment, but none for their eye troubles. They neglect their eyes, because the trouble is not sufficient to drive them to an eye specialist, who would, anyway, charge them a heavy fee. As a last resort they go to an optician or to the five and ten-cent store, and oftentimes get glasses that they do not need, or which, after being used a few months, do their eyes more injury than good.

Here is a simple prescription that every one should use: 6 grains Bon-Opto dissolved in ¼ glass of water. Use three or four times a day to bathe the eyes. This prescription and the simple Bon-Opto system keeps the eyes clean, sharpens the vision and quickly overcomes inflammation and irritation; weak, watery, overworked, tired eyes and other similar troubles are greatly benefited and oftentimes cured by its use. Many reports showing that wearers of glasses have discarded them after a few weeks' use.

It is good for the eyes, and contains no ingredient which would injure the most sensitive eyes of an infant or the aged. Your own druggist can fill this prescription, or the Valmas Drug Co. of Toronto will fill it for you by mail. Try it, and know for once what real eye comfort is.

A personal Our Readers to whom the above article was interested, mail Bon-Opto is a very remarkable remedy. Its compliment ingredients are well known to contain it can obtain from any druggist. If they cannot be obtained from him, the "427 Bon-Opto Prescription" is sent on hand for regular use to almost every family.

INVESTIGATORS AT SCENE OF WRECK

Providence, R.I., April 25.—Employees of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad testified to-day at a joint inquiry by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Public Utilities Commission into the wreck at Bradford on Monday night, that the signals were correctly set against the Gilt Edge Express, which crashed into a local train, killing five persons. Frederick E. Babcock of the signal department of the road, declared the home signal was at "danger." Arthur S. Ross, fireman on the local, said the crash came just after the train had stopped at the Bradford station.

According to George H. French, the conductor of the local, his flagman had been sent back twenty car lengths to give warning. French testified that he saw the flagman swinging a lantern before the express approached.

At half past six to-night the Utilities Commissioners, the federal investigators and the railroad officials left this city on a special train, went to Bradford and watched a thorough test of the signals which figured in the wreck. The party returned shortly after eleven o'clock to-night.

Physician (at hospital)—"How did you happen to fall from the top of the ladder?" Patient—"A pretty woman was passing, and while trying to get a good look at her I slipped and fell." Physician—"Ah! the same old story, a woman at the bottom of it."

"Sir," said the haughty American to his adhesive tailor, "I object to this boorish dunning. I would have you know that my great-great-grandfather was one of the early settlers." "And may I ask," responded the tailor, "if you intend to follow in your great-great-grandfather's footsteps?"

Instead of grating cheese or the rind of a lemon, part it off carefully and put it through the meat chopper.

For Tired School Children

Payne, Peterborough, Ont., and give such children Vinol, because it is a non-secret preparation which contains the three oldest tonics known, and is guaranteed to strengthen and restore health to weak, overworked, run-down people, and to cure chronic coughs, colds and bronchitis, or you can get your money back.

Skouloudis Offers $1,000,000 to Loan

ATHENS, April 26. — Premier Skouloudis has offered to subscribe $1,000,000 to an internal loan if one is floated. This news appears to be the correct version of a former report that the premier, who is a man of great wealth, had given $1,000,000 to the state outright ,that amount being roughly the sum due the families of the mobilized troops, and unpaid on account of an empty treasury.

CARNIVAL SEASON IN VIENNA AGAIN DREARY.

Public Balls and Dances Have Been Prohibited—Theatre-going Cheapest muesment, Patronized to Exclusion of Others.

Vienna's second carnival season in war time is, if possible, drier than the first. This year the police have officially prohibited all public balls and dances and even private dances or entertainments are not allowed in public halls, most of the latter having been turned over to the military authorities for one purpose or another.

After twenty months of war, white kid gloves and dress suits, patent leather shoes and ball gowns, fans and cotillion favours, seem to have passed into oblivion. Even were public dances allowed, there would be no young men to dance, stuff among the young women all inclination for such pleasures seems to have died out for the duration of the war. Though some dancing schools are still going on, pupils are few.

Money is still being expended on amusements during the carnival season, but it is nearly all going into one channel and that is the theatre and opera. Night after night all these places are filled to overflowing, for the public has discovered that theatre-going is far less expensive than the ball gowns and numerous other accessories demanded in the ordinary carnival season.

Naturally, the industries which have hitherto supplied all the fashionable rekuisites for balls and parties, have suffered greatly. Some have failed entirely, while others have saved themselves only by turning their factories into other uses having some bearing on the war. For instance one of the finest fan factories is now making soldiers' knapsacks.

The truly charitable man thinks the best he can of all men. He looks for their good points, and not their bad ones.

"How many, many homes there are from which gaiety has been banished, not by sorrow but by grievance and complaints!"

She—"Didn't you say you'd go through fire and water for me?" He—Yes; but blessed if I'm going through bankruptcy for you."

Disarming—"In this great and glorious country of ours," exclaimed the political orator, "there is no North, South, no East, no West.

FIGHTING WAS SERIOUS IN THE DUBLIN RIOTS

Germans Unsuccessfully Raid Essex and Kent—No Damage Was Done

LONDON, April 26.— German airships raided Essex and Kent last night, but were driven off before any damage was done.

LONDON, April 26.—Dublin riots have been quelled after serious fighting.

TORONTO, April 26.—While a private in the 83rd Battalion was explaining the mechanism of a revolver to his daughter, it expleded, killing her.

PARIS, April 26.—German attack on French defences in Lorraine resulted in the annihilation of the foe.

SEE GAINED 25 POUNDS.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Harlowe, Ont, writes: "I was troubled for many years with weak, watery blood and dropsy. I had nervous headaches, dizziness, and sinking spells, and was in fact, a semi-invalid. Doctors told me my heart and kidneys were diseased and gave me up but by using 10 boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I have been cured of many of my old complaints and gained 25 pounds in weight.

Boston's Mayor Asks German Boats to Move

Requests that Interned Vessels go to the Outer Harbor.

BOSTON, April 26.—A report that the German steamships in port here were planning to move to an anchorage in the outer harbour instead of remaining at the wharves where they are now tied, was forwarded from Washington to-day to Collector of Customs Billings, by Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Newton.

The collector said he would make a negative reply, no information of any contemplated change having come to his attention. In to-day's mail the collector found a letter from Mayor Curley requesting that the refugee steamers be moved from their present berths to the stream "to avoid danger to lives and property in the event of ships being destroyed if war were declared."

How to Look Years Less Than Your Age

The most aged face will look years younger after the use of ordinary mercolized wax for from ten days to two weeks. This remarkable substance because of its peculiar absorptive power, actually removes the thin veil of faded or withered outer cuticle, a little at a time. Gradually the fresher, more youthful skin underneath is revealed. This absorption process being a purely hygienic one, an entirely natural complexion is acquired — quite different from the artificial complexion, which appears anything but girlish, though often bearing painful evidence of childishness. An ounce of mercolized wax, obtainable at any drug store, is sufficient to rejuvenate any complexion. It is put on like cold cream at bedtime, and removed mornings with warm water.

To eradicate such age marks as wrinkles and furrows, make a wash lotion by dissolving 1 oz. powdered saxolite in ½ pt. witch hazel. This has wonderful astringent and tonic properties. It quickly effaces all kinds of wrinkles, no matter how caused, making the skin firm, smooth and young looking.

Hold Up Old Man To Get His Liquor

One is Given Double Sentence for Assault and Robbery.

CHATHAM, April 26. — Clifford Harbert of Chatham and Arthur Currie of Harwich Township appeared before Acting Magistrates Merritt and Potter in the city police court on a charge of hold-up. Harbert was also charged with assault.

One evening last week, the defendants watched the complainant, an old man of 70, purchase a bottle of porter and a bottle of whisky at a local liquor store, and deliberately planned to hold him up. After following him some distance, they accosted him and begged a match. While searching his pockets, Harbert dragged the old man down from behind, the two prisoners making off with the basket and contents.

A description of the defendants was furnished the police by two school boys. After a hard chase Currie was arrested the same evening. Harbert, who escaped, gave himself up to the police this morning.

Both pleaded guilty on the robbery charge. Harbert pleaded not guilty on the same charge.

Currie was sentenced to six months in the Ontario Reformatory. On the robbery charge Harbert was sentenced to nine months, and nine months on the assault charge, the sentences to run concurrently.

Insanity Plea For Woman Who Killed Her Two Children

NEW YORK, April 26.—Temporary insantiy is expecttd to be the defence plea of Mrs. Ida S. Rogers in her trial begun for the murder of her two children December 29, 1914. The case is notable because of the public sympathy which has been expressed for Mrs. Rogers, who was then known as Mrs. Ida Sniffen Walters, lived in the Bronx, as the wife of Lorlys Ellton Rogers, a lawyer, the father of her two children, but to whom she was not then married. Rogers had married Miss Caroline Giddings, the sister of a professor at Columbia University, and was then living with her at a more pretentious home in this city, but divided his time between that home and an apartment in the Bronx, where the second woman lived with her children.

POISONED HER CHILDREN

Despairing of ever been married to Rogers, Mrs. Walters has admitted that she administered the poison to her two-year-old boy, John and to Lorida, a girl of eight months, and to herself. The children died, but Mrs. Walters recovered to repent her act. After her arrest Rogers admitted his double life and publicly came to the suppot of the woman who had suffered by it. Mrs. Caroline Giddings Rogers obtained a divorce from Rogers, and he, in July last, married Mrs. Walters who was at liberty under bail. A third child has since been born to them.

If a horse stumbles don't strike him with a whip. Look to his shoes, and change your blacksmith if necessary.

Petunia, nicotiana and carma seed should be placed and kept in a temperature of 60 degrees as soon as it is sown.

BERLIN POLICEMAN HAS JAW BROKEN; SOLDIER ARRESTED

It is Claimed Pte. Meinsinger Had Previously Assaulted Man For Not Enlisting.

BERLIN, April 26.—An unpleasant affair took place at the local barracks P. C. Blevins, one of the most efficient officers on the police force, was detailed to serve Pte Meinsinger with a subpoena to attend police court on a charge of having assaulted Henry Holling, who, it is claimed, had refused to enlist, owing to having a "medically unfit" card, which Meinsinger seems to have regarded as a "fake."

When P. C. Blevins called at the barracks he told the soldier that he had a subpoena for him, and when about to serve it the soldier is said to have remarked:

"I'd rather hit you on the nose than take it," and at the same time to have landed a blow on the policeman's jaw, which staggered the officer. The soldier is alleged to have struck the second time, breaking both jaw bones.

The policeman is suffering considerably and will be invalided for some time.

The soldier is under arrest, and he will now have to face a more serious charge.

WOMAN AVOIDS OPERATION

Medicine Which Made Surgeon's Work Unnecessary.

Astoria, N. Y. — "For two years I was feeling ill and took all kinds of tonics. I was getting worse every day. I had chills, my head would ache, I was always tired. I could not walk straight because of the pain in my back and I had pains in my stomach. I went to a doctor and he said I must go under an operation, but I did not go. I read in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and told my husband about it. I said 'I know nothing will help me but I will try this.' I found myself improving from the very first bottle, and in two weeks time I was able to sit down and eat a hearty breakfast with my husband, which I had not done for two years. I am now in the best of health and did not have the operation." — Mrs. JOHN A. KOZNIG, 502 Flushing Avenue, Astoria, N. Y.

Every one dreads the surgeon's knife and the operating table. Sometimes nothing else will do; but many times doctors say they are necessary when they are not. Letter after letter comes to the Pinkham Laboratory, telling how operations were advised and were not performed; or, if performed, did no good, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was used and good health followed.

If you want advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass.

HOLD LOUIS LAUFER AS SUBWAY SLASHER

Austrian Roughly Handled When Young Woman Cries Her Coat is Being Cut.

NEW YORK, Apr. 20.—Louis Laufer, twenty-five years old, a waiter, living at No. 905 Beck Street, the Bronx, was roughly handled by several men on a Bronx subway express last night when a young woman standing near him screamed that he was slashing her coat. Laufer was seized and held until the train reached the Prospect avenue station, where he was turned over to Policeman Hay and carried to the Simpson Street police station.

The young woman said her name was Nellie Shiffman of No. 73 First street. An investigation showed a long cut at the bottom of her coat. For several weeks the police have been seeking a mysterious "Jack the slasher," who has been ruining the gowns of women in the subways. Sometimes the man varied his work of ruin by pouring a black, sticky liquid on dresses.

Laufer, taken to Police Headquarters, under the charge of disorderly conduct and malicious mischief, denied that he had cut the girl's dress and stated that he was merely cleaning his finger nails. A knife was found in the outside pocket of his coat. He said that he was an Austrian and had never been arrested before.

SYRACUSE, SICILY, SUFFERS.

The war, enriching so many shipowners and seaports of the Mediterranean, has all but completed the ruin of Syracuse, once the world's richest port and the centre of its commerce.

So hard has the war hit this port that it became an important event recently when the six men of the crew of the little American schooner Albania got up her creaking echoing, broke out the Stars and Stripes, and sailed away homeward. With the departure of this ship seemed to fade the last hope of the 23,000 people who live there, a paltry handful left from the half million who once were proud to date their prosperity from 600 B.C.

While the war has brought activity to other ports of these seas, made Ostia, Brindisi, Taranto, Salonika, the two Gallipolis, supply stations for colossal fleets of war vessels and their accompanying transports brought them and their inhabitants wealth, filled their hotels to overflowing, made beds worth far more than during convention time in Chicago, wrought the prosperity of market gardeners and farmers, it has not only passed by Syracuse but has taken away what little business she had.

BACK WAS SO BAD.

The bad back comes from the kidneys, and unless the kidneys are carefully watched and properly regulated many serious troubles may follow.

Doan's Kidney Pills will cure all forms of kidney trouble, and cure the kidneys so that they will stay cured.

Mr. J. A. Lubinlecki, Dauphin, Man., writes: "It is my pleasure to write you in regard to Doan's Kidney Pills which I have been using for some time for kidney trouble, which used to affect my back so that at times I could not bend down nor could I walk straight. I learned about your pills from your almanac, and I bless the happy hour I thought of buying this medicine. One time a druggist persuaded me to buy ——'s Kidney Pills, saying they were just as good, in fact he guaranteed they were. I yielded to his advice, and what was the result? I had bearing down pains in my back for two days, so I took the balance of the pills unused to the druggist and told him to give me Doan's Kidney Pills as they would stop the pain in twelve hours at the outside. He told me he was sorry I did not use more of the pills, and lengthen the time to await results. I told him there was no need of waiting with Doan's Pills; they go right to the spot. No substitute for me."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25. See that our trade mark, "The Maple Leaf," is printed on both the lable and wrapper.

A Touch of Vernicol—and Your Furniture Is New Again

THERE is many an old piece of furniture about most houses that is dingy and battered; that doesn't match the prevailing tone of the room, that is still useful, but far from ornamental. It's a pity that someone doesn't bring out the good points of such pieces and make them really worth while. It can be done easily.

You can make wonderful changes in a few minutes with Lowe Brothers Vernicol. And it's mighty economical. Vernicol comes in convenient cans of all sizes and in colors to match the usual wood finishes.

Come in and let us show you what you can do with Vernicol.

Secret of Reason Why Old False Teeth Are So Much In Demand Is Discovered

"False teeth! False teeth! We buy them in any condition, complete or broken sets. And pay you a dollar and a half for them, or more if they are worth it."

There are scores of these advertisements in newspapers asking the general public not to throw away their discarded teeth any more than they would throw away good money or gold ornaments.

People have been wondering why, and all sorts of reasons have been given. What was done with the old teeth? Where were they sent? Were they used over again; and, made up in fresh vulcanite and used for the gallant troops who, finding their bad teeth a bar to fighting for the Empire, had braved the ordeal of the dental chair?

If not, what was the object of paying good money for old false teeth? What did the buyers do with the imitation teeth of all shapes and sizes which they would receive? They could not want the vulcanite the plates were made of—that was heated to such a temperature when the plate was made, and baked so brittle, that it would not be of any use, even with the scarcity of rubber in these days. And what value has the porcelain in its present state of imitation teeth?

For the Platinum.

These are the questions a Record reporter set out to have answered, and the variety of answers he got from people who did not know was only equalled by the variety of shapes of teeth and plates he saw in one of the offices to which people seemed to be sending all the false teeth there are.

The first thing he learned was that the teeth are of no value at all. As soon as they are received they are smashed up and thrown away. Neither is the vulcanite any good. That is also thrown away. Then what is it that the dealers are paying ten cents a tooth for, or even more?

Just the little piece of platinum wire which pins the tooth into the vulcanite. Every tooth is attached to vulcanite, or should be, by two little platinum pins, and these are the things that are being sought for with more zeal than gold. The reason is that platinum to-day is worth about two and a half times the value of gold, and an ounce of platinum can be sold for $42.

That is in this country. It would not be worth while to take it over to Great Britain and sell it, because anyone offering to buy or sell platinum in the Old Country renders himself liable to exceedingly heavy penalties. The British government is taking under its fathery care every speck of platinum that it can find, for platinum is a very valuable and scare commodity.

Comes From Russia.

Most of the platinum of the world comes from the Ural Mountains in Russia, and the metal is one of the most valuable products used in the war. Being non-fusable, it is used extensibly in sparking plugs and other electrical connections, in fusing hard metals, and in the making of high explosive shells, and as it is not affected by acids it is used a great deal for chemical works.

Scientists are trying to get a substitute for platinum, and British experimenters have produced an alloy of palladium and gold which is cheaper and which answers for some purposes, while a tungsten-gold alloy is also capable of being utilized in some cases. But nothing has yet been discovered that will fulfil all the functions of platinum and still be produced cheaply.

A few years ago platinum could be purchased at $10 an ounce. To-day it is worth $45 an ounce, and the price is going up daily. The dealers in false teeth value the two pins in an ordinary tooth about five cents each. Sometimes some of the Canadian teeth have little iron pins holding them to the vulcanite instead of platinum, and still some other teeth are not pinned at all — but the dealers sometimes get in the old-fashioned sets of teeth quite large pins of considerable thickness.

SPEAKING AS PHYSICIANS.

The Polysyllaphis' One Shows, He's There on the Job.

"In a paper in the Journal of the Chemical Society for September," says the Medical Record, of New York, discussing "The Polysyllaphic Physician," we find the word tetradimethyldiaminotetraprenylhdrazinex.

"A few lines further on the writer speaks of trimethylindaminodimethylaminophenylmethyloquionedi - imide and a little later he refers casually to tetramethyldiaminotetramethyl diaminodiphenyldihydrophenazine.

Artistic lady (who has just had her drawing room redecorated) — Well, cook, what do you think of it? Cook —It's a bit bare-like, isn't it, mum? I dessay I'm old-fashioned, but I never really feel as 'ome's as 'ome without a kespidiverer.—Punch.

An Impression of the Grand Fleet

(By E. Chouikovsky.)

A distinguished party of Russian writers and journalists recently paid a visit to the Grand Fleet. The following article, specially contributed to "The Daily Chronicle" by one of their number, vividly describes the impressions made on them by the things they saw and heard "somewhere in the North Sea". Mr. Chokowsky is one of the ablest critical writers in Russia. His work on the British Tommy Atkins has proved the most popular and successful Russian book of the war.

This is the manner in which I first saw the British fleet. Soon after we left port we sighted a squadron of very great ships. I said to an officer: "These must be super-dreadnoughts!" But he laughed and said, "No, They are only destroyers." Some miles further on we came across a second squadron, of even greater ships. I said the same again. But my friend said these were cruisers. Finally, we came to the great battleships, drawn up in two apparently endless lines.

It is idle to say my friends and I were impressed by the sight of British seapower. The Grand Fleet is the grandest spectacle I ever saw in my life. It looked more than anything else like a great city of gracious, yet tremendous shapes and towers; a strange city of streets and roads and lanes, the great hotels that moved miraculously, as if with wings. The whole sea seemed to be alive with them, with these mobile steel monsters of war.

Salute from the Flagship.

When we sighted the flagship the Iron Duke, our salute to the Admiral was wireless, and in less than two minutes back came the Admiral's wireless welcome.

Sir John Jellicoe himself was on the bridge, to greet us. Russia played the Russian National Hymn, and the crews cheered, and we cheered in response.

In Russia Sir John Jellicoe is a national hero, almost a national idol. Our children cherish his photograph, and know his features by heart. Yet when we were at last confronted by the man who directs the immense destiny of the British forces on the seas, I could hardly believe my eyes. He seemed much too simple and modest and genial a personality to be at the helm of such a terrible and tremendous machine as the British Navy.

And yet, when I asked him if it was true that he had written a personal letter to a little English girl who had sent a gift to the Fleet, he told me that every day he had similar letters to write to his children friends at home. Nevertheless the evidence of his power and strength of character was everywhere—in the discipline, efficiency and quickness one saw in the conduct of his officers and men.

We were able to learn much of the striking power of the great Fleet. We saw vessels—huge and unwieldly as they seemed—go through the most intricate movements with the most marvellous rapidity. We saw real battle-practice. Two cruisers fired at moving targets at long range, and hit the mark every time. It was splendid—to us it was almost miraculous—the deadly precision with which they loaded the great guns, found the exact range, fired and loaded again. One could not help thinking of the sight of the ingenious loading mechanism—that the great machine we saw was infinitely more clever and accurate than we men who were looking on.

Then we saw torpedoes fired from destroyers, marking the water in long lines, and the industrious trawlers sweeping for mines. On another vessel said by Germany to have been seriously damaged the Admiral showed us one solitary shell-hole in her funnels.

A Talk With the Sailors.

But best of all I liked the British sailors. I talked to many of them and they talked to me, and showed me their quarters, and their cheerful mottoes and notices on the wall, and the ingenious toys they had made out of battle-splinters. My body still aches from the heartiness of their manly friendly slaps on the shoulder. They are splendid, handsome fellows, and the industrious trawlers sweeping for mines. On another vessel said by Germany to have been seriously damaged the Admiral showed us one solitary shell-hole in her funnels.

I talked to many of them and they talked to me, and showed me their quarters, and their cheerful mottoes and notices on the wall, and the ingenious toys they had made out of battle-splinters. My body still aches from the heartiness of their manly friendly slaps on the shoulder. They are splendid, handsome fellows, and enthusiastically as if they were playing a game—as indeed they are!

I met one sailor who had jumped overboard in the coldest weather and risked his life to save a drowning dog. And there was a little midshipman I talked to whose relatives lived only four hours' journey away, but who had not been able to see them for eight months, so arduous were his duties. But he was quite cheerful, taking everything in good part, and recognizing that it was part of the game he and his friends had set themselves to play.

When we returned to Russia we shall have many great and wonderful things to relate to our own people, but nothing can surpass the magnitude, the vigilance, the power and the immensity of the British Battle Fleet, as we have seen it with our own eyes. And our admiration is mixed with gratitude for this "sure shield" of Britain is no less the unceasing shield and safe-guard of Russia.

WOMEN OF CANADA.

Fort Coulonge, Quebec.—"I am happy to tell you that your medicine did me wonderful good. I was troubled with weakness and I tried wines and other things but received very little benefit. I was young at the time and knew very little about medicines till a lady friend came to me with a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I became strong and a year afterward had twins."—Mrs. J. BEASY, Fort Coulonge, Quebec.

Thousands of women right here in Canada who are now blessed with robust health cannot understand why thousands of other women continue to worry and suffer when they can obtain for a trifling sum Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which will surely and quickly banish all pain, distress and misery and restore the womanly health.

Young mothers who preserve the charms of face and figure in spite of an increasing family and the care of growing children are always to be envied. "Favorite Prescription" gives the strength and health upon which happy motherhood depends. It enables the mother to nourish the infant life depending on her, and enjoy the happiness of watching the development of a perfectly healthy child.

DISLOCATES HER SHOULDER

Strong Man was Too Elusive in His Handshake.

Miss Lily Tompkins and William T. Barr met the other evening at Waller and Stanyan streets, San Francisco, not having seen each other for a long time.

"Well, of all things—!" and Miss Tompkins extended her hand.

"Who would have dreamt—?" and Barr gripped the proffered hand.

Something snaped. Miss Tompkins cried out in pain and Dr. George M. Terrill of the Park Emergency Hospital had to set a dislocated right shoulder.

The two are still friends, though effusiveness will in future take a back seat for "safety first," they told Dr. Terrill.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

How He Met His Fate

[Copyright,) by American Press Association.]

Three friends dining at a cafe were chatting on the subject why certain people fail to fulfil a law of nature in mating. One of them, a married man, after listening to all the others had to say, spoke up:

"Marriage is a matter which strikes people the same as lightning does. Some are thrown together, some are kept apart, some go into it thoughtfully, some toboggan into it."

"How did you happen to embark in matrimony?" asked one of the party. "You speak as if you had had one of these experiences yourself."

"My own case is peculiar. Like other young men, if they will admit it, I experienced a longing for some woman who would be all in all to me. But, in the first place, I didn't think I could afford a wife, and, in the second, nothing occurred to attach me to any woman. The day when I would get my affairs in shape and make marriage a prime object was always a few years ahead of me.

"I had reached the age of thirty-five without getting any nearer to settling down in a home when one night, while on a journey, I found myself in bed in a hotel. One can't conceive of any probability of a more unfitting place for that [illegible] I have been speaking of to start one of its matrimonial ventures. I was alone, lying awake, did not know a person in the city where I was, and it was midnight.

"I had been counting the strokes of a city clock when I heard the door open and the rustle of a dress approaching my bed. There were several matters which would naturally have occurred to me if there had been time. In the first place, I had forgotten to lock my door; in the second, whoever had entered was not likely to be a robber, nor even a thief, for there was nothing stealthy in the entrance nor the approach. It was pitch dark, and I could see nothing. I could only hear. A woman's voice—it was sweet and sounded sweeter in the loneliness of midnight—said:

"'Sorry I've been so long. I could not help it. I had to wake them up to get into the kitchen.'

"I naturally waited for developments. A hand was slipped under the bedclothes and something warm placed on my stomach. Then the hand was withdrawn, and the voice said:

"'I'll light the gas.'

"Now, there was something pleasant in all this that I knew must cease under the light. It was plain that I had been mistaken for a sick man, and I was in no hurry to disabuse the owner of the voice who had made the mistake.

"'Don't,' I said in a sort of invalid moan. 'Come and hold my hand!'

"I heard her feeling for a chair, which she drew to my bedside and, sitting down, took my hand with one of hers while she passed the other over my forehead. Not only were the hands soft, but I was quite aware that so long as it was dark I had a 'soft thing.' I wanted to say something, but feared my voice would give me away. So I contented myself with an occasional moan just to let her know that I was not in a talking mood. She encouraged me to believe that I would soon be better, and by several things she said I inferred that she was nursing some one.

"I was thus luxuriating blissfully when the thing she had put on my stomach began to burn. I presume if my face could at that moment have been seen it would have been vividly expressive. Once the thing began to burn it grew apace, and it was not long before it felt as if a redhot iron was being pushed about among my entrails.

"Did you ever hear of the boy who with one hand shoveled ice cream into his mouth and with the other held the space between his eyes that the cold made painful, crying all the while? Well, I was like that boy. I had never before held a woman's soft hand at night anywhere, certainly not in a lonely hotel, and I couldn't make up my mind to let go. I knew I had some sort of a plaster on and might take it off with my loose hand, but she would hear me and the situation would be closed. The thing kept burning and burning until I could stand it no longer.

"I heard the scratch of a match, and in an instant a gas jet illumined the room.

"There stood a girl in dishabille—a wrapper and a pigtail. She looked at me with a holy horror, then exclaimed:

"'Good gracious!'

"'You must have got into the wrong room,' I remarked.

"'I should think so.'

"'Who is the patient you are caring for?'

"'My brother. I went down to get a mustard plaster and coming back got into the wrong room.'

"'Well, you've burned a hole pretty near through me.'

"I took the thing off and flung it out on the floor.

"'You may call it fate or chance or providence or what you like, but the way I came to marry my wife was through a mustard plaster. It would take a five hundred page novel to tell the rest of the story, and I'm not in that line. You can make up a theory from my case or let it alone. Whenever I tell the story I can feel that redhot plaster on my vitals.

"'Waiter, bring a claret cup, with plenty of ice.'"

Preserving Dry Batteries.

The life of dry batteries, which are to be used in wet or damp places, may be considerably lengthened by being treated in the following manner:

The batteries are placed in glass jars a little wider and higher than themselves. A layer of dry sawdust is placed in the bottom for the battery to rest on, and the sides are packed with sawdust to within half an inch of the top. Waterproof wires are connected to the binding posts and melted paraffin poured over the battery to the top of the jar. The carbon and zinc terminals should be marked to avoid trouble when connecting several cells together. Batteries treated in this manner are waterproof and can be submerged in water if necessary.

Current Comments

Jamestown "Post."—President Wilson stands by Louis D. Brandeis and will not withdraw his nomination to the Supreme Court. It is characteristic of some statesmen to refuse to correct their mistakes, but Mr. Wilson has changed his mind on so many things that he should not stop now.

Washington "Star."—Mr. Roosevelt's nomination would not only reopen all the contention, but concede the Roosevelt claim. The leader of the bolters would appear in a triumph as the leader of the regulars; and with his nomination would go a tacit approval of the platform upon which he stood as a bolter four years ago.

Philadelphia "Inquirer."—As we have said over and over again, there is no difference in principle between protection by a tariff and protection by an anti-dumping measure, supposing the latter is workable, which it is not. But the administration won't admit it and insists upon splitting hairs and holding to disastrous theory.

—Brooklyn "Eagle"—Lord Clanricarde, the worst hated of non-resident landlords, dying at the age of 84, verifies the saying that treatened men live long. But this descendant of George Canning might have been less lucky but for the fact that he never went to Ireland but once, and then to attend his father's funeral. Tenants of 57,000 acres raged at him in vain.

Springfield "Republican," — August Belmont, who will be accepted as an authority, predicts a season of unusual interest in the turf. English and French horses of high degree have been bought and brought over by Americans and there are evidence also of increased interest in race meets as social events. At the same time New York State's new policy, given its start by the notable work of Justice Hughes, when governor, has greatly reduced the evil of race gambling. The "passing of the horse has been long delayed—by the war, among other things.

Philadelphia "Press."—The Chicago woman who discovered that it was possible to live on 33 cents a day also found that it reduced her weight some. This is the solution of more than the high cost of living. Thousands of over-weight people will be gratified to know that for 33 cents a day they may be brought down to normal. Many have tried other experiments at great cost, but without effect.

Ipdianapolis "Star." — American youth lacks a discipline that would be of value to it. Military training would each young men to respect authority. It would teach them the importance of co-operation and team work; it would teach them self-reliance; they would learn from it how to care for their physical health, and this would not be one of the least of its benefits. They would be better qualified in every way to enter into the competition of private life.

EASY TO DARKEN YOUR GRAY HAIR

You Can Bring Back Color and Lustre with Sage Tea and Sulphur.

When you darken your hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it's done so naturally, so evenly. Preparing this mixture, though, at home is mussy and troublesome. For 50 cents you can buy at any drug store the ready-to-use preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all gray hair disappears, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully darkened, glossy and luxuriant.

Gray, faded hair, though no disgrace, is a sign of old age, and as we all desire a youthful and attractive appearance, get busy at once with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, and look years younger. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite and not a medicine. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

DISH MOP UPHOLDS HONOUR.

Negro Refuses to Shovel Snow and Wins Wager.

Dish washing and snow shovelling have nothing in common, and any one attempting to force an employe to swap the proud occupation of laving plate for the menial toil of pushing a snow scoop is exceeding his rights as an employer.

Mrs. Margaret Ridsdale, of Montclair, N.Y., attempted to force William Lipscomb, a negro in her employ, to put down his dish mop and push the drifts off the porch. But William clung to the mop and said snow shovelling was beneath his station. Mrs. Ridsdale refused to pay him, but William brought suit against her for his wages. The negro's employer was ordered to pay.

The Bile is an Antiseptic

Everything is good in its place. The bile, which, under certain conditions, causes so much distress, is of the greatest value as an antiseptic and cathartic when it is properly handled by the liver.

The chief function of the liver seems to be the filtering of bile from the blood, where it acts as a poison, and pouring it into the intestines, where it hastens the course of the food mass through the alimentary canal, and by its antiseptic influence prevents fermentation of the food.

When you suffer from biliousness and indigestion and have a coated tongue, bitter taste in the mouth, headaches and loss of appetite, you will do well to look to the condition of the liver. Other symptoms are wind on the stomach, which causes belching, and the formation of gas, which gives rise to dizziness and pains about the heart.

Because the liver has failed, the food in the alimentary canal is fermenting instead of being digested, looseness and constipation of the bowels alternate, the whole digestive system is thrown out of order and the blood is poisoned.

By immediately awakening the action of the liver and bowels, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills affords relief for this condition most promptly. On this account they are generally recognized as the most effective cure for biliousness, liver complaint, indigestion, constipation, and the pains and aches which arise from poisons in the blood. The benefits are lasting because this medicine removes the cause of trouble.

INCESSANT GERMAN ENERGY SEEN THROUGHOUT HOLLAND

LONDON, April 24.—The commercial warfare which threatens to be as bitterly and ruthlessly waged as the war of arms is, on the German side, already being actively pushed forward. Once again the Germans have taken the initiative without waiting, so far as known, for formal resolutions at public meetings. With the Germans the meetings will follow when there are dividends to declare.

It has been obvious in Holland that Germany has taken fright at the Allies' too openly divulged after war commercial intentions, and, true to her habit, is already doing an immense amount of preparation for the coming battle of prices, tariffs and enterprise. Holland is thronged with German commercial men. They are not here to buy in the ordinary way. Traffic is contraband—too uncertain and costly. But there is much to be done already in the way of establishing connections in Holland, in re-establishing and strengthening old connections and in generally prospecting for business when peace, which all Germans expect soon, shall have been made.

If England is going to do one-tenth of the trade that Holland would like to do with her after the war, then English business men must also get busy here and now and not wait for the Hollander to come, hat in hand, and ask for business. As it is, Germany starts with many advantages which other traders should realize, recognize and also obtain for themselves.

In the first place, the German is not above learning Dutch. He starts, therefore, with an enormous advantage when he approaches the heads of Dutch houses on the subject of trade. The Dutchman is an excellent linguist and usually knows a good deal of English. But he prefers, naturally, to arrange business in his own tongue, and the German, true to his ideal of giving to the customer exactly what he wants, begins by being able to speak Dutch with a Hollander.

Now, most of the English speaking commercial men whom I have met here say, "Oh! the Dutchman understands English, and it is not necessary for me to learn Dutch." And so he talks commercial English and expects the Dutchman to be willing to run the risk of a bad bargain though his inability to follow in detail the conditions offered. In such a case the Dutchman falls back on an old tag. He slowly remarks, "Well, I'll talk it over with my mother." It doesn't matter whether his mother is alive or not. What he means is that he suspects there may be some danger in completing a transaction that he does not perfectly understand, and intends, from the safe distance of his private office, to cry off the deal by letter.

In the second place the German believes in the old maxim, "If you want a thing done well, do it yourself." And so he comes from Cologne, Dusseldorf, Essen, Hamburg, Elbergeld and from every other German city to arrange his business in person. If he later on appoints an agent in Holland, that agent is in most cases a German, who has probably lived in Holland for years, has probably married a Dutch woman and knows the country and its ways through and through. In this way he obtains an agent who is all for Germany and who will see that German interests are forwarded on every possible occasion.

Moreover, many German firms prefer to go to the expense of establishing themselves in Holland and thus avoid even the possibility of an agent having other interests than those of his chief firm.

But what is the custom with English firms? Over and over again I have come across both Dutchman and Germans who are the agents of English firms in Holland. These agents are often acting for half a dozen different firms of different nationalities. During the war, of course, there are no dealings between English firms and their German agents in Holland or anywhere else, but cases are as common as feathers in a pillow where a Dutchman represents both English and German houses.

Just now there is a very well organized and thoroughly executed scheme on the part of the Germans to seduce those Dutch agents who represent only English firms. During the last few weeks more wine has flowed and more fine dishes have been consumed in Dutch hotels and restaurants than has been the case for many a month. Germans are using all the arts of flattery, bribery, treating, etc., to obtain information concerning English trade in Holland. Money is being spent lavishly, and all the information thus obtained is certainly being carefully tabulated for the assistance of German houses later on.

If sleeping in a room with the windows wide open in very cold weather, try putting a layer of newspapers between the mattress and the springs. This will make the bed much warmer.

Had No Ambition To Do Her Housework.

System Was All Run Down.

Mrs. Herbert Doherty, Beaver Brook, N.B., writes: "I have used some of your Burdock Blood Bitters, and found it to be a great medicine. My system was in a run down condition for over a year. I suffered with bad headache, and did not seem to have any ambition to do my housework. In the morning I could not half eat, and what I did eat did not apparently seem to do me any good. After using four bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters I was an entirely different woman. I cannot recommend B.B.B. too highly to people suffering the same as I was."

The blood reaches every portion of the body to distribute nutriment, and remove effete matter and waste products, clearly then, any influence, good or bad, affecting the blood, must necessarily affect the entire system for good or evil as the case may be. To this fact is due the wonderful efficacy of Burdock Blood Bitters in removing every form of disease. It at once strikes to the root of the trouble, and quickly restores the depleted system to a condition of vigorous health.

B.B.B. has been on the market for the past forty years, and is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

WHEN YOU WAKE UP DRINK GLASS OF HOT WATER

Says inside-bathing makes anyone look and feel clean, sweet and refreshed.

Wash yourself on the inside before breakfast like you do up the outside. This is vastly more important because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing illness, while the bowel pores do.

For every ounce of food and drink taken into the stomach, nearly an ounce of waste material must be carried out of the body. If this waste material is not eliminated day by day it quickly ferments and generates poisons, gases and toxins which are absorbed or sucked into the blood stream, through the lymph ducts which should suck only nourishment to sustain the body.

A splendid health measure is to drink, before breakfast each day, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless way to wash these poisons, gases and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels; thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs but very little at the drug store but is sufficient to make anyone an enthusiast on inside-bathing. Men and women who are accustomed to wake up with a dull, aching head or have furred tongue, bad taste, nasty breath, sallow complexion, others who have bilious attacks, acid stomach or constipation are assured of pronounced improvement in both health and appearance shortly.

Statistics of Language.

The English language is estimated to be spoken by 160,000,000 people. Next in order is the German language, which is spoken by 130,000,000 people. The others in their order are: Russian, 100,000,000; French, 70,000,000; Italian and Spanish, 50,000,000 each, and Portuguese, 35,000,000.

English is spoken by 27.3 per cent. of the whole, German, 22.2, Russian 17.1, French 11.9, Italian and Spanish 8.6 each, and Portuguese 4.3. In 1801 the English language ranked fifth, being spoken by 20,520,000.

The Russian language then headed the list, being spoken by 30,770,000, with the German language second and spoken by 30,580,000 pepole. —Philadelphia "Inquirer."

Tells How He Escaped Death by Leap Into Space From Ballon

NEW YORK, April 25.—Nobody has particular envy for the man who jumps from a balloon by means of a parachute at a country circus. Therefore one must feel a thrill at the thought of such a jump made over the battle field of Verdun, where the parachute and its human freight present a target for the enemy fire. Such a jump was made by a young French lieutenant, according to the Daily News, when a captive balloon broke away and threatened to fall inside the German lines, bringing either capture or death to its commander.

At the time of his adventure the lieutenant, was engaged in making observations from the 'sausage' as such balloons are called. He had not been up long when the steel hawser that connected him with the earth was cut by a German shell. At once the balloon started toward the German trenches, fanned along by a south wind. The word of the accident spread through the French lines and the soldiers watched the balloon growing smaller in the distance.

AEROPLANES PURSUE SAUSAGE

Although four aeroplanes started in pursuit of the 'sausage' there appeared to be little hope of their being able to aid the unfortunate lieutenant. Just as the balloon got so far away that it was no longer possible to see the basket a speck was seen to part from the balloon, which shot up a thousand feet with the extra weight removed. Suddenly the little speck appeared to be pulled up in midair, and observers through their glasses could see that it was a man with a parachute. A cheer went up as the man realised what had happened, but a full ten minutes of suspense lasted as the man became the target for the fire from the German lines until he was safe on the ground not far from the French front.

The young officer in describing his experience said:—"The first intimation that something had gone wrong was when I felt a slight shock. I thought the telephone cable had parted. All at once I became aware that the other balloons were growing smaller, and I grasped the fact that I was adrift. A glance at my barometer told I was already 5,000 feet up.

"I tried to pull the cord working the hydrogen automatic control, but it became tangled and refused to work. I tried to climb up to it, but failed. Then I feared I was lost. My first thought was to destroy my papers then I thought of blowing my brains out to avoid falling into the hands of the Boches. Then, however, came an inspiration. Why not try the parachute? I had to be quick, for I was now 11,000 feet up.

DROPS IN SPACE

"The cord which was tied around my body was sixty-feet long, so I had to jump that distance into the void before the box containing the parachute would open and set it free. For a few seconds I held onto the car with my hands. Then I let go. I must have dropped more than one hundred feet before the parachute unfurled, and it was not an agreeable sensation. But after that I did not mind and was able to look about me.

"After a time I felt a sensation of complete security. When I was only about two thousand feet from the earth I became aware that the wind was carrying me toward the German lines. Then I lost consciousness. In the intervals that it returned I realised I was under fire, but I was not hurt by any bullets. When I finally landed I discovered I was about three hundred yards from the enemy. I had been twenty minutes in falling and was only slightly bruised. However, I am not anxious to try it again.

GERMANY INFLUENCING MEXICO, SAYS FALL

EL PASO, Texas, April 25.—Germany is influencing the Mexican situation in a way which will bear close scrutiny, according to United States Senator Albert P. Fall, who is here to get information on Mexico for Congress.

Senator Fall said that Germans in Mexico City have been publishing information in Spanish regarding the European war for distribution for the glorification of the Fatherland. It is generally believed in Mexico that after the war Germany will assist the Mexican in a financial way said the Senator.

CLEANSES YOUR HAIR MAKES IT BEAUTIFUL, THICK, GLOSSY, WAVY

Try This! All Dandruff Disappears and Hair Stops Coming Out

Surely try a "Danderine Hair Cleanse" if you wish to immediately double the beauty of your hair. Just moisten a cloth with Danderine and draw it carefully through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; this will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt or any excessive oil—in a few minutes you will be amazed. Your hair will be wavy, fluffy and abundant and possess an incomparable softness, lustre and luxuriance.

Besides beautifying the hair, one application of Danderine dissolves every particle of dandruff! invigorates the scalp, stopping itching and falling hair.

Danderine is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. Its exhilarating, stimulating and life-producing properties cause the hair to grow long, strong and beautiful.

You can surely have pretty, soft, lustrous hair, and lots of it, if you will just get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter and try it as directed.

BOLD TRAIN ROBBER.

Tall, Handsome Youth Goes Through Union Pacific Limited.

Rawlins, Wyo., April 24.— A sheriff's posse of two dozen men mounted on fast horses early to-day resumed the chase begun last night for the bandit, a tall, handsome youth, who held up nearly fifty passengers on the Union Pacific Limited train, west of Hanna, Wyoming. He got about $400 from the passengers and handed over to the brakeman a watch he had promised to return to the porter on the occasion of a former hold-up on April 5.

Believe It If You Will.—A man in a state of inebriety was walking up a side street one day when he saw a notice outside a restaurant announcing: "Beef, mutton, vegetables, cheese, ten to one; soup, fish, joints, etc., five to nine." "Hello," said the man: "seems a decent price, that sounds all right." He walked into the shop and placed a shilling on the counter, and exclaimed: "A bob on beef!" About an hour later he strolled back and walked in, and to his astonishment heard a waitress calling out her order: "Mutton, one; beef, two; cheese, three." "Confound me luck!" he said, "another good second."

Robber Slain in Wild Chase After Wounding 2 Men

Her Escort Shot, Girl Drives Highwayman to Flight by Screams

NEW YORK, April 25.—After holding up a man and a young woman in the Bronx at eleven o'clock for purposes of robbery, highwaymen shot and seriously wounded the man, were pursued more than half a mile by the screaming young woman and then wounded a policeman, who shot and killed one of the robbers.

Joseph Schweitzer a salesman, twenty-three years old, of No. 833 Courtlandt avenue, the Bronx, was walking in Cromwell avenue near 161st with Miss Frances Schlehlain, of No. 623 Courthandt avenue, when two men jumped from a clump of bushes and stopped them.

With pistols leveled at their heads the robbers directed the couple to make no outcry. Then one of the highwaymen pushed Schweitzer over to the curb while his companion kept a pistol aimed at the young woman.

While the first robber was trying to search Schweitzer's pockets the latter resisted, struck the robber in the face with his fist, and tried to seize his weapon. The thief was too quick for him, however, and as he recovered from the blow he shot Schweitzer, the bullet entering his right chest and piercing both lungs.

GIRL SOUNDS ALARM

A moment after the shot was fired Miss Schlehlain screamed. This, and the fact that a shot had been fired which might be heard by a policeman, frightened the highwaymen from their task of robbery and they fled south in Cromwel lavenue.

Miss Schlehlain saw her escort reel and fall, but as he fell he drew a police whistle from his pocket and began to blow.

The brave young woman seized the police whistle from Schweitzer and started in pursuit of the robbers. She followed them down Cromwell avenue, blowing the police whistle with all her might with every breath and was fast enough to keep the two criminals in view all the time.

The pursuit had continued more than half a mile when the two men turned to cross the bridge north over the New York Central lines at 151st street. Since the strike of car cleaners the policemen have been stationed the policemen haave been stationed day and night on all bridges over the depressed railroad to prevent any one from dropping bombs on trains. Policeman Patrick McGovern, of the Highbridge station and eighteen years on the force, was on this bridge. He heard the police whistle and as he came nearer and nearer to him he became ready for action.

POLICEMAN FIRES FROM GROUND

As he saw two men come out of the darkness, running upon the bridge, he drew his pistol and called to them to halt. In their immediate rear came Miss Schlehlain, her exhaust breath making the whistle shriek.

The highwaymen stopped a second, and then one of them drew his revolver and shot several times at the policeman. One bullet grazed his right temple making a long but not dangerous wound. But McGovern reeled under the impact of the bullet and fell. The robbers were starting across the bridge and had passed him when McGovern turned where he had fallen and fired one shot. The bullet entered the middle of the forehead of one robber and he dropped dead.

McGovern leaned on his left elbow and emptied his pistol at the other man but he escaped into the darkness on the west side of the bridge. Miss Schlehlain was going to follow him, still blowing the whistle, when Policeman McGovern called to her to stop. It required much argument to dissuade her.

SCHWEITZER BADLY WOUNDED

The shots quickly attracted other policemen and McGovern and Schweitzer, who was found where he had fallen, at 161st street, were hurried to Lebanon Hospital. There is was said Schweitzer's wound may be fatal. The policeman's wound was dressed, but it was thought best to keep him at the hospital for the night.

The body of the dead highwayman was sent to the Bronx morgue. It is that of a man about twenty-seven years old, with smooth face and hard features. He had light sandy hair, blue eyes and weighed about 145 pounds. He wore a new blue serge suit, newunderwe ar and new shoes. This fact led the police to believe he may have been released within the last few days from some prison. There was nothing in his pockets by which he could be identified. As he fell, fatally wounded, he clutched in his hand the pistol with which he wounded the policeman.

Miss Schlehlain was unable to say last night if this was the man who wounded her escort.

LADY'S SHIRT WAIST.

By Anabel Worthington.

Whether we are prompted by motives of convenience or not in doing so, the fact remains that we cling to the plain blousing shirt waist, relinquishing the styles of previous days. Of course, we have to have some little point of attraction for diversity in the make-up of our shirt waists, and we will need to make our own in order to have the waist look as though it really belonged to the woman wearing it. Here is a model of extreme simplicity in:—

No. 7,077.—A waist of smart device that gives an air of grace and that is perfectly unornamented. The fronts are gathered at the shoulders and roll back at the neck to form revers, leaving just the throat to spread its beauty. Falling in full, graceful folds, the blouse, closing at centre front, has a silk girdle to confine the waist fulness. The chief attraction of this waist is in the extending of the sleeves to the neck edge. At the back a high collar in fancy outline raises itself to the ears. The sleeves are gathered at the wrist to give better shape to a cuff of the material that is finished with edging and which flares downward. In the back the waist is gathered in group effect at the centre and a tape stitched thereto to mark the waist line, completing a garment that will give every satisfaction.

In sizes 34 to 42 bust measure, the pattern will give you a perfect fit. Using 36 inch material for size 36, the waist may be developed with just 2¾ yards of goods and ⅞ yards of edging.

To obtain this pattern send only cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

GOVERNMENT TROOPS RUSHED TO DUBLIN

Several German Attacks Repulsed By The French

Violent Bombardment on The Whole Front West of the Meuse

Germans Attempted to Attack a French Post in the Lorraine District But Were Repulsed With Heavy Losses---Prisoners Admit That The Germans Lost Heavily in Yesterday's Attacks---Government Troops Rushed to Dublin---Insurrection is Well in Hand.

FRENCH AEROPLANE RAID

PARIS, April 26.—(French Official)—An intense bombardment of Avocourt wood and Hill 304 by heavy German guns last night was reported in the official statement from the War Office to-day, but no important infantry actions occurred on the Verdun front.

The bombardment was violent on the whole front west of the Meuse, but attained its greatest intensity on the French left, in the Woevre. German howitzers played upon French positions. Around Haudremont and Ronvaux, the Germans attempted to attack a small French post north of Embermenil, in Lorraine, but were repulsed with heavy losses. Prisoners admit that the Germans also lost heavily in yesterday's attacks against the French salient at La Chapelotte. North of the Aisne, French troops took seventy-two prisoners in the course of yesterday's attack, which resulted in the capture of a small wood south of Bois Des Buttes. Several German reconnaissances were dispersed on the Paissy and Tyon sectors.

Decline To Safeguard Freighters

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, April 26.—President Wilson's demand that German submarines warn freighters as well as passenger liners, constitutes the most serious obstacle in the way of satisfactory settlement of the German-American relations, the United Press learned authoritatively to-day. Other points at controversy can be settled without any danger of a diplomatic rupture, but strong opposition exists here to safeguarding the crews of freighters since it is held that every enemy freighter is engaged almost solely in carrying munitions or other war supplies to the Allies. Matters marked time to-day pending the return of Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg from his second conference with the Kaiser at army headquarters.

Brought Down a Battleplane

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, April 26.—A French aeroplane at thre o'clock this morning attacked a Zeppelin off ZeeBrugge at a height of 13,200 feet, throwing nine incendiary shells at the dirigible, returning from last night's raid on England. It was a thrilling battle. The Zeppelin finally tilted its nose skyward and moved off, but apparently was damaged. The War Office announced that a French aviator brought down one of the famous German Fokker fighting planes at Luneville, near Nancy. The pilot was made prisoner.

Wilson Will Not Withdraw His Demand

Special to The Examiner.

WASHINGTON, April 26.—President Wilson will under no circumstances withdraw his demand that the German submarines warn freighters, as well as passenger liners, it was declared on good authority here to-day.

This statement was made by officials who commented on the United Press despatches from Berlin, reporting the President's demand with regard to freighters to be the chief obstacle in the way of an amicable settlement.

Since the beginning of the submarine controversies, the United States has not wavered in its position that freighters must be warned. President Wilson is known to feel strongly upon this point. The President has received no word from Ambassador Gerard tending to place more than a hopeful aspect to the situation.

Martial Law In Dublin County

Special to the Examiner.

LONDON, April 26.—Government troops hastily transported from England and rushed forward from Belfast, have reached Dublin and occupied St. Stephens Green and Liberty Hall, in the heart of the Irish capital, Premier Asquith announced in the Commons this afternoon.

Martial law has been declared in Dublin County. Chief Secretary for Ireland Birrell announced that he will leave for Ireland this afternoon to direct the suppression of the revolt.

LONDON, April 26.—Prompt and energetic steps were being taken by the Government to-day to put down the serious insurrection of Sinn Fein volunteers at Dublin. The censor permitted us to cable this fact through, though it is impossible to give details at this time. Dublin was still cut off from telegraphic communication to-day, and according to the best available information the principal part of the Irish capital is still in the hands of the rebels. It is believed that serious fighting between the Sinn Fein forces and the Government troops continue, although the revolt thus far has not spread to other districts. Information regarding the revolt is still confined to the official despatches. The censor has passed no press despatches on the fighting, and the London newspapers to-day fell back upon editorial comment on the uprising. For several weeks rumours that a revolution was impending in Ireland have been in circulation, some reports even fixing the outbreak definitely on Easter Sunday. The newspapers generally took the view that the reports were no surprise. "The outbreak will not come quite as abolt out of the blue from any one in touch with Irish affairs," said the London Chronicle. "Ever since the Ulster volunteers set up their deplorable example of open lawlessness and armed defiance of the Crown, the temptation of all Irish extremists has been to preach violence as the one argument to which English rule must listen." The official statements give the number of the casualties on the side of the Government as about a dozen killed and twenty more wounded. They do not attempt to give the Sinn Fein casualties, nor do they state that any important position seised by the rebels has been definitely recapture dfrom them. Both of these reticences suggest that the Sinn Feiners may still be holding out. We are also left in the dark as to whether any connection exists between the unsuccesaful descent of Sir Roger Casement and his Germans on the Irish coast on or about Good Friday morning, and the Dublin outbreak on Easter Monday afternoon.

FUNERAL WAS A GREAT TRIBUTE TO POPULAR CITIZEN

From Far and Near Representatives of Many Walks of Life Gathered to Pay Last Tribute to Hon. Mr. Stratton

AN IMPRESSIVE CORTEGE

The funeral of Hon. J. R. Stratton which took place yesterday afternoon from "Strathormond" the family residence on George street to Little Lake Cemetery was a striking testimonial to the hold. Mr. Stratton had upon the affection and esteem of the city and district generally. All sections of the life of the city and county were represented in the cortege, which followed the remains to their last resting place. Representatives of the municipal bodies of the city, county and various townships, the Masonic fraternity, officers of the 93rd Battalion, the staff and employees of the Examiner and many other bodies occupied places in the long line of carriages.

A very impressive service was held at the house conducted by Rev. J. P. Wilson, pastor of Trinity Methodist church assisted by Rev. J. R. Webb, pastor of Murray street Baptist church nd Major J. C. Davidson, chaplain of the 93rd battalion.

Rev. Mr. Wilson spoke as follows:—

We are to-day performing the last kind offices for a worthy citizen. We were not surprised when the intelligence reached us, that Hon. J. R. Stratton had crossed the great divide, and joined that company of the vast majority, for we knew that there was a conflict between him and severe illness, one knew not which would triumph. The city however, did receive the information of his departure with profound sorrow; here was unusual regret expressed at the loss of such an impotant citizen. Mr. Stratton had gotten possession of the affections of his townspeople in a remarkable manner. There was always something so genial and open-hearted in his intercourse with his fellow citizens, that it gave him a warm place in their affections, no man in the country was better known .He stood with the white light beating on him for years, Ho was viewed from every angle as few of his townsmen ever had been.

Some things in his life must impress us all — the early period of which he assumed the responsibilities of life. In early manhood he took up on himself burdens of business. At a time when young men generally are seeking pleasure he was engaged with the stern realities of business.

His attitude for business early appeared. In his teens he assumed the management of the large publishing house which he has guided so wisely; elected to School Board, he, a boy, sat among the city fathers. At 29 years of age he represented his County in Parliament and rose to the high place of Cabinet Minister, holding portfolio of Provincial Secretary.

Mr. Stratton was an active, high spirited citizen, a man of wide sympathies, keen business outlook, of broad views of life and practical gossip of the great problems that effect humanity. For twenty years he represented his county in parliament, not only his own political party, but he was broad enough to feel that he was the representative of all classes and creeds of his constituency.

He was a splendid example to all young men of what a definite purpose a resolute will, abstemious habits, a stout heart and willing hands can accomplish in this free land. He was a loyal citizen of Peterborough. This city came first, its interests were uppermost. He was a loyal member of the congregation of Charlotte street church (now Trinity) most regular in attendance, generous in support, thoughtful towards his pastor. He

EXAMINER'S NEW STORY BEGINS ON SATURDAY

The Examiner's new serial story, "The Harbour of Doubt," by Frank Williams, will commence in Saturday's issue and will be found one of the best published in serial form.

It is a heart-gripping tale of the fisher folk, with thrills aplenty, with love, with adventure, with wholesome charm always. Starvation stalks when the fish fail and the grim tragedy of life is shown with simplicity and power. The privation, the peril and the final salvation of a whole people form the background to the vital issues of love and honour, with which the principal characters are occupied.

The young skipper of "The Charming Lass" is threatened with disgrace and imprisonment, under the accusation of murder. At the same time his fellow islanders are menaced with famine because of the season's failure in the fish supply. The hero's leadership achieves relief for his fellows, but his own final vindication is due to the ingenuity and resourcefulness of a devoted woman.

There is presented to the reader a vivid portrayal of manners of life unfamiliar and picturesque. The author knows intimately the folk of whom he writes and his interpretation gives to the reader an almost equal knowledge.

SEVENTEEN MEN TO BE TRANSFERRED TO PIONEER BATTALION

93rd to Lose Some of its Men to New Unit---Word Having Been Received From Headquarters to Transfer Them ---More Names Wanted of Men Who Enlisted in Outside Units---To-day's Orders And General Military News

Word has been received from the headquarters of this division that the 93rd Battalion will be required to supply seventeen men to the 4th Canadian Pioneer Battalion which is being raised. This division is asked to give 200 men and the 93rd's share has been set at seventeen. The men are being selected to-day and will leave on Saturday morning to join the Pioneer Battalion.

Arrangements are being made for the accommodation of the men of the outside detachments of the 93rd Battalion, who are due to arrive at the first of next week, and many Peterborough men in the battalion who have been quartered in the armouries all winter will be allowed to sleep at home for the remainder of the battalion's stay here, while the newcomers will go into the barracks.

Many names of Peterborough boys who have enlisted elsewhere or in units to which this city did not send drafts have been received by the Examiner. It should be understood that no names of men who went with the 57th contingent to the 2nd Battalion, the 24th Field Battery's quota to the 4th Battery, the Peterborough contingents with the 21st, 39th and 59th Battalions, the 8th C.M.R. or the 25th, 33rd or 52nd Batteries are required, as these names are included in the Peterborough lists proper.

GRAND JURY'S REPORT OF COUNTRY "BAD LANDS"

Presented at the Court House This Morning to Chief Justice Sir Glenholme Falconbridge—Deals With Barren, Unproductive District in This County That Has Given Courts Numerous Cases.

LIST OF RECOMMENDATIONS

A voluminous report on the conditions in that belt of barren territory in Peterborough County which, on its court record, has deserved the appellation of "bad lands," was handed by the Grand Jury of the February Assizes to Chief Justice Sir Glenholme Falconbridge this morning.

Instead of dismissing the jury at the previous session, Chief Justice Mulock commissioned them to obtain and present a report, based on their personal investigation, of the moral and social conditions in the "no man's land" that stretches across this country from the vicinity of Stoney Lake to the northern fringe of the Havelock district.

In its ordinary presentment the Grand Jury had referred to the Landsay case of alleged incest and child murder, which bulged the docket with kindred charges and continuing, observed—

"With Your Lordship we regret to note the several criminal cases brought before the Court, but venture to suggest that such a state of affairs is one to some extent abnormal in the history of this district. We agree that something of environment and condition of living in the sparsely settled and unproductive districts is a factor in inducing a relaxation of moral observance, and is to be regretted.

"Your Lordship is right in your assumption that the lands in that district are not suitable to adequately support a population in reasonable comfort, nor to afford the necessary municipal expenditure to provide what is necessary for the life of the people. All this makes for a careless, if not degenerate, people when all the refinements of civilized life are absent and cannot be provided."

So impressed was Chief Justice Mulock that he directed the Grand Jury to enquire into the conditions of life in the localities mentioned, and to prepare a comprehensive report of what they had found.

The personnel of the Grand Jury was as follows:

F. Allison, W. P. Adamson, Sidney Blewett, C. R. Banks, Wm. Brooks, George Cockburn, Job Coon, John Dickson, Robert Patterson, J. W. Rork, Harold Rye, Wm. Stevens and Henry W. Stock (foreman).

Went to Havelock.

Immediately the Grand Jury began to collect information from men acquainted with the district, and several members gave personal attention by enquiry and examination. A personal inspection could not be undertaken on account of the state of the roads and the inclement weather of the early season. A meeting of the Jury was held in Havelock at which additional evidence was heard.

In the accompanying summary of the Jury's report it will be noted that no "bad lands" are definitely located. Residents of the northernmost townships repudiate the reflection upon the social, economic, educational and other conditions in their communities. These are most emphatic statements. But from the various matter in the report, the district is apparently a sterile, rocky sweep through a number of the intermediate townships. Sections of Belmont, Methuen and Dummer are mentioned in the addenda to the report.

In receiving the volume which comprised thirty typewritten pages and was compiled under the direction of the Jury by Ald F. H. Dobbin, Chief Justice Falconbridge thanked the Jurors for their industry and painstaking effort in this matter, and said he would present the report to the Chief Justice of the Exchequer for his consideration. The Jury was then dismissed.

A SUMMARY OF THE GRAND JURY'S FINDING AND ITS RECOMMENDATION.

Briefly, the view of the Grand Jury was that effort should be made at once to extend and to improve the school facilities, even to go so far as to put in use a modified system of what is termed consolidated schools, the pupils to be conveyed to and from schools. It was pointed out that this had in other places a lessening effect

THE COMMISSION INTO KYTE CHARGES GETS UNDER WAY

Great Array of Legal Talent, so Many That it Was Hard To Determine The Powers and Limitation of Each Council

ALLISON IS THERE

OTTAWA, Ont., April 26. — The small board room of the Dominion Railway Commission was crowded when the Royal Commission, comprising Sir William Meredith and Mr. Justice Duff, commenced its investigation into the Kyte charges to-day. "Colonel" J. Wesley Allison, General Sir Sam Hughes, and General Sir Alexander Bertram, were present when the inquiry opened. Mr. Allison spent the interval before the arrival in the room of the Commissioners reading the Hansard report of the Kyte speech in the House. Sir Sam Hughes came to the court room direct from a review of two battalions from Calgary and Edmonton. A great array of legal talent including some of the most prominent lawyers in Canada were present, representing various interests.

There were so many lawyers, indeed, that some time was spent trying to determine definitely the powers and limitations of each. F. F. B. Johnstone, K.C., the chief counsel for the opposition, refused to make any definite statement as to the attitude he would take. "The question of cross-examination," said Mr. Johnstone, "would depend upon circumstances."

"Then does my learned friend want to stand as lord high chancellor on one end of the stage, and lord high executioner on the other end of the stage. We do not want an enemy in the disguise of a friend," said Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., counsel for the Shell Committee.

When the preliminaries were over, Colonel David Carnegie, chief expert ordinance advisor to the Shell committee, was the first witness called. He is an Englishman with considerable experience in British arsenals, and in Canadian steel plants. When he was introduced to Sir Sam Hughes just after the war commenced, he said, he was treated with such characteristic abruptness, that he almost resigned before he was engaged. However, he was appointed at a salary of one thousand dollars per month. Col. Carnegie detailed early negotiations between the British government and Sir Sam Hughes for placing munitions orders in Canada. Canada was in the condition at the time to turn out extensive shell orders, said Carnegie, but manufacturers "buckled to" and did admirable work in that direction. The first order was arranged early in October. The Shell committee contracted to deliver one hundred thousand eighteen pound shells and the same number of fifteen pounders at $8.55 and $8.30 respectively. Regarding fuses Col. Carnegie said he visited England in January, 1915, and returned with an order for Canadian manufacturers. He found great difficulty in getting them to take it up owing to the cost of installing machinery. He said the initial cost of installing necessary machinery might easily be two hundred thousand dollars.

Should Have Read Fifteen Cents

In the advertisement of Robert Fair and Company, yesterday, one item, Japanese and Chinese Matting which sold regularly at 25c per yard, was advertised in the Examiner at 6c per yard. This should have read 15c a yard, according to the copy supplied by the Fair Company. Owing to getting out the paper early yesterday the same care was not possible with the advertising as otherwise would have been the case.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26, 1916

THE LATE MR. STRATTON AND THE EXAMINER.

Hon. J. R. Stratton has passed away and been laid at rest amidst tributes of respect that strongly speak of a life of public service and usefulness, and good deeds that justify the esteem in which he was held by the public amongst whom he has passed so many years of busy and useful life. The Examiner and its staff know well how to appreciate their loss on the removal of the head who moulded the policy and directed the work of the Examiner. Those who have been associated with him in its publication, some of them almost ever since he was conected with journalism and others for a quarter of a century and a little less, know of his journalistic policy and how it was directed to making Examiner an influence for good in the community. Its policy was, as dictated by Mr. Stratton, to earnestly as possible advocate every movement and encourage every interest that could contribute to the material and moral well-being of the city and its people. This policy included respectful treatment of citizens and a generous attitude towards all men, independently of religious belief or social standing; independently of political affiliation; and though in relation to the latter, in the heat of political excitement, some things might have appeared in the Examiner, perhaps a little at variance, it is to be remembered that, none are free from the influence and occasional intemperate expression of human feelings. When the occasion passed these feelings were forgotten and normal attitude resumed.

In his public and private life Mr. Stratton was alert in the promotion of public interests, both personally and through the Examiner, and the same policy was applied by both to the quieter arena of personal relations. None knows better than the writer of these words what countless private benefactions apart from any other consideration than the need of the object, and unknown otherwise to the world, can be credited to the good heart, genial kindness and tireless liberality of the late Mr. Stratton; and nearly everybody knows that by the application of his policy through the Examiner, cooperating with his personal efforts, the benefits that have been advocated and gained for the city and community.

The Examiner and its staff will miss Mr. Stratton and gratefully remember the invariably harmonious relations that have existed for longer and shorter periods of personal and business association; the country will miss him; the city and its people will miss the influence of a faithful and influential friend of its interests, and thousands who have grateful memories of his kindness, will miss a true friend; in all the relations of his active life he will be missed, and his example, his attitude towards, and the recognition of, his duties to, the country and society, should be one to be followed by other public men and other citizens. In fact his life, both public and private, and in all ways, will create the feeling that there are too few J. R. Strattons in the world.

A TRULY NATIONAL SERVICE.

The public is reminded, as well as admonished, of and in respect of the truly national and St. George's day service to be held in St. John's Church to-morrow evening. It will be quite in sympathy with the national spirit of co-operation and co-ordination of effect that characterizes the Empire, and every section of it at this time; and a recognition of the day of the patron saint of the senior partner in the United Kingdom firm, which is the centre of the greatest empire of history. The service will be entirely undenominational, being conducted by ministers and laymen representing every Protestant denomination in the city.

TESTAMENTARY HEARTLESSNESS

A surrogate court Judge, speaking a few days ago of the many strange wills that came before him, for proof, instanced one case in a county in this district which seems to involve peculiar heartlessness or thoughtfulness. A farmer had a rather poor farm, and making a living from it involved extremely hard work, and even sacrifice, by every member of the family. It was no surprise that it became encumbered with a mortgage, and that every nerve was strained to accumulate a sum to lift the mortgage and save the home. A sum of $1,500 was got into the bank for this purpose. The father died and his will gave the son the farm, the mother a living on the farm, the daughter $25.00, and the $1,500 in the bank was given to the missionary society of the ——— Church. It needs little thought to appreciate the gross injustice and even heartless cruelty of such a disposition of the property of the testator. The mother who had no doubt worked harder than the father to accumulate the little property, was left a possibly unwelcome presence in the old home, at the mercy of the uncertain kindness of a son, and almost certain unkindness of a future daughter-in-law. The daughter was cut off with $25, without a home. The $1,500 which the whole family had worked and sweated for; pinched and denied themselves to get by little into the bank, was turned over to missions, leaving the family to the old struggle with the thin-soiled, ungrateful farm and the mortgage, and doomed to life-long drudgery and suffering. The money was almost a matter of life and death to the family, while it was a comparatively small thing to the missionary fund — it would not pay one year's salary of one of the administrative officials. One could have the highest respect for a missionary society which, knowing the circumstances, refused to accept such a bequest; and a missionary society which, knowing the circumstances, accepted such a bequest, cannot expect to be blessed in spreading the Gospel of Him, whose chief characteristic—thought for the poor, the burdened, the oppressed—is outraged by the diversion of hard-earned money from its work in alleviating the toil and misery of those who earned it.

The thoughtlessness of this husband in making his will is to be regretted and reprobated; the more, inasmuch as it is too common a type of the attitude of husbands towards wives. A man and his wife work hard to build up a home and accumulate property so that they may have a restful old age, the wife the harder—all day in the unending duties of housekeeping—without "hired help," and far into the night, making and mending for husband and children, doing work for which no time could be found during the busy day. Such a wife, who has done more, suffered more, worked harder, and done the largest share in getting the property together, if the husband dies intestate, gets only her "thirds"; and if he makes a will nearly always the wife is cut off with a "living," which, in many cases, is but a living death—a humiliating sojourn in a home she helped create, where she is displaced as the head of the house by strangers, without perhaps, a cent to call her own; a barely tolerated dependent upon the bounty of others in respect of means she has helped to create. The world is full of injustice and humble domestic tragedies, but the greatest tragedy of all is too often the cruel and unjust treatment of wives by husbands in their exercise of testamentary heartlessness.

Lonsdale to Be Freed at End of the War

LONDON, April 26.—Private William Lonsdale, a British soldier, who was first sentenced to death, then to twenty years' imprisonment in a fortress for striking a German guard in a prison camp, writes to his wife in Sheffield that he has been officially informed he is to be released at the end of the war for good conduct.

The interest taken in him by the New York American was largely instrumental in saving Lonsdale's life.

As to The Place of The United States in Case of War With Germany

Suppose the United States goes to war with Germany. Will it go to war independently; "on its own hook, so to-speak," or will it go as an ally of the 'Entente? Great Britain, France, Russia and Italy are now bound by a solemn covenant to prosecute the war jointly, and to make peace jointly. No nation can cease hostilities without the consent of all the others. When one makes peace all must agree.

Should the United States act with them in such an agreement, lending its money, its munitions, its navy, or would the solitary step be better? Sentiment in this country is against foreign alliances, but George Washington's vision never contemplated such a hideous world war as is now spread before us.

It is all very comforting for Americans to sit back in their easy chairs and say that war with Germany will not amount to anything, because the Kaiser's reservists are not to be feared, and because the German navy cannot get out to do any damage to the mainland of America or to land troops on the Atlantic seaboard. But with Germany freed of her present assailants, with her navy intact behind her naval bases ready to take the sea and with her army smarting to get at the nation which she regards as responsible for supplying munitions to France, England and Russia, and seeking revenge, and with the whole German nation smarting under resentment and anger, it might be a different matter. Would it not be to the interests of the nation to consider such a situation as that? It is time for plain talking and cool thinking—New York Herald.

Uncle Sam, as The Herald properly says, is opposed to "entangling alliances," but when it comes to going up against a power like Germany there is strength in numbers. "We must hang together or we shall hang separately," is a remark attributed to the author of the Declaration of Independence, and it seems to fit exactly the relationship of the United States toward the Allies in the event of war with Germany. When the time comes Uncle Sam will find it to his interest to throw in his lot with the Entente powers, and by strengthening the combination against Germany place the latter on her good behaviour for all time to come. There is room, however, for a good many "supposes" and for more diplomatic correspondence, before the United States goes to war. Just wait and see.

Then the old question is being raised as to whether the United States would be more of more advantage to the Allies as a belligerent than she now is as a neutral. On this point, The Montreal Mail says:

The presence of one regiment of American soldiers in Europe would be of incalculable advantage to the cause of liberty. It would round off and complete the entente cordiale between all the nations of the earth which are fighting for eternal peace. For American soldiers, few or many, to stand shoulder to shoulder with the troops of Britain, France, Russia, Italy and Serbia would consolidate for all time the nations that did not delight in war. The American navy is by no means to be despised. It is of superb quality, and can give a good account of itself wherever it may go. It would be a delight to see the Stars and Stripes floating alongside the Union Jack in the North Sea and the British Channel.

Then the entrance of the United States into the war would mean the release of scores of German ships now interned in American ports which are badly needed by the Allies to-day. Last, but not least, it would mean millions of dollars available for use against the common foe.

It is hardly worth while discussing an event which it is more than likely will never happen. Woodrow Wilson does not contemplate at present going further than the breaking off of diplomatic relations with Germany, and there is still considerable reason to doubt whether matters will ever get so far.—Brantford Expositor.

WELL KNOWN ATHLETES MENTIONED IN DISPATCHES

The Toronto Star says:

The athletes are being mentioned in despatches from the front. In yesterday's account of the battle of St. Eloi, in which the 19th and 20th Battalions distinguished themselves, Corp. Gordon Bole and Corp. Alan Lynch were mentioned for gallantry under fire. Bole was a member of the Osgoode Hall hockey team two years ago and rowed in various Argonaut Club fours, while Lynch was one of the foremost paddlers at Parkdale Canoe Club. Although only 19, he paddled in the senior war canoe two years ago, and in the four which won the junior, intermediate and senior races on Dominion Day. Lynch was also a good football player of the Parkdale team.

Dr. Frank R. Hassard, famous University of Toronto outside wing, now of the R.A.M.C., has been admitted to the Stationary Hospital at St. Omer, suffering from a fracture of the metacarpal bone of the left hand. Prior to enlisting Dr. Hassard spent a year in a New York Hospital. He went to England last July.

A cable received in New Westminster from the Adjutant-General announced the death in Folkestone Hospital, England, of Lance-Corp. George Oddy, 47th Battalion, who on Saturday was reported dangerously ill with pneumonia. Oddy was 37 years old, and was a member of the lacrosse team which toured Canada in 1900, and which established the reputation of New Westminster as a lacrosse centre. He has three brothers, one of whom, Sergt. Crossland Oddy, is also with the 47th Battalion.

RUSSIAS' MOVE DESIGNED TO AID ALLIES IN WEST

London, April 25.—Discussing the meaning and reasons of Russia's early offensive, Mr. Waclaw Caenrniewski, who knows personally almost every little town in the immediately affected districts of his own country, says that while the present Russian offensive seems to have created some surprise elsewhere than in Russia the new events are quite apparent.

"We all know very well," he writes in the Daily Graphic, "the fact that Russia, Great Britain, France, and perhaps even Roumania, have been making thorough preparations for a great attack against the Central Powers. A simultaneous offensive is generally expected, and it is expected this spring or early summer. Now comes Russia's move, and the conditions can yet scarcely be described as spring, especially in Western Russia, where snow and frost still reign. The Russian move is not the great Entente offensive for which we are looking. All large military operations have, apart from the main reason, many others, and the present is an example.

"It is more than probable that the beginning of the offensive was arranged by the Russian General Staff in reply to the German attacks in the west. While Germany was sending enormous masses of troops and munitions to the western front for Verdun Russia was making ready on a similar scale in Lithuania. Unable to push their lines in the east any further since last autumn, the Germans have spared no pains to construct very strong intrenchments there. The Russian press two or three months ago gave a good account of these German digging-in activities, and it was this knowledge that caused me with absolute conviction to foresee a great German attack on the western front. It was obviously with the intention of western offensive that the eastern defences were made solid. All last autumn and winter were occupied in fortifying along their entire eastern front. Dug-outs were made deep, comfortable and roomy. Electric light and electric heating apparatus were placed in them. Trenches were so arranged as to be kept dry even in the spring floods. Light railways were built along the firing line, the lack of roads thus being overcome.

The idea, as I have said, was to enable fewer troops to hold the eastern front and to send more to the west. Russia is putting that comfortable theory to the test. The opportunity to attack when the main German strength was in the west has been seized directly the western formations are fully engaged. The Germans once dislodged from their Russian positions will be quite unable to build similar trenches or lay railway tracks before the late spring or even early summer on account of the mud and water from the thawing snows. Thus the main attack made by the Grand Alliance would find the Germans all unprepared on their eastern front.

A further reason—in one way the main reason—of the Russian move yet remains. It lies in the actual conditions along the present eastern line. Military operations are difficult to the point of impossibility in early spring, when winter snow thawing, the ice-bound rivers break through and overflow the countryside. In this respect those rivers which discharge into the Baltic represent more danger for operating armies than those flowing toward the Black Sea. The reason is simple. While the upper parts of the Lithtanian rivers, with their southern situation, thaw at an earlier date and are already flooding their banks, the lower parts, situated in the northern and consequently colder climate, are still icebound. The ice acts as a cork, and forms natural dams with resultant inundations for miles around by the flood waters from the south. The Vistula is particularly bad in this effect on the country that it drains, and the Niemen and the Dvina are only less unbridled.

The Russian line runs along the left bank of the Dvina. It might easily be inundated by the spring floods and if thus very important for the Russians before that time arrives to get to the higher regions occupied by the Germans. This is why in this particular part of the Russian front, between Dvinsk and Riga, the Russians are fighting with great vigor. Further south again there is a hidden danger for the Russian troops in the Pinsk marshes, which are still covered with snow and ice. Everywhere the Russians are pushing to more suitable positions.

On the southern section of the Russian front we hardly need to speak. The Russian offensive in Galicia has been carried on with little interruption for many weeks past, and the reasons for the Russian operations lie chiefly in the relations between Roumania and the Entente Powers. For the moment our interest lies in conjecture whether the present Russian move will be entirely suspended during the flood season or will continue until it develops into a general attack on all sides against the Central Powers.

It was decided to enter teams in both the intermediate and junior series of the O. L. A.

Cost of Living In Great Britain

Average in British Cities Higher Than in America.

LONDON, April 24.—It costs more to live in London to-day than it costs to live in New York.

It costs more to live in the smaller cities and towns of England's provinces than it costs to live in the cities and towns of the United States.

Practically the only exception in England's favour is clothing; and even clothing is higher. A good sack suit, English fit, which used to cost $20, now sells for $22.50. The price is still rising. So are other prices. Hardly a day passes that an advance of 5 or 10 per cent. is not announced in some staple.

Beef is 40 cents, mutton 28, pork 26; hardly any lamb is to be had; the killing of calves is prohibited; bread 9 cents a 2-pound loaf; good butter 42 cents; tea 52 cents; very soft coal $7.80 a ton; anthracite, $11.28.

Rentals are about the same as in the United States, but include nothing.

Cooking and lighting gas in a five-roomed flat cannot be kept below $10 or $12 monthly.

Telephone calls are 6 cents each.

Cigars which would be dear in the United States at a nickel apiece retail in England at 14 cents.

The income tax has risen. It begins with income of £130 ($624) yearly. The assessment increases more than proportionately as the income grows larger. A man earning $2,500 annually pays 38 cents on every $4.80. If his income is from invested capital the rate is much higher.

GET ROUMANIAN CEREALS.

60,000 Carloads of Corn Sent to Teutons in Three Months.

BERLIN, April 24.—About 60,000 carloads of corn have been sent from Roumania to Germany and Austria during the last three months. It is reported from Bucharest that next week will be begun the forwarding of 140,000 carloads recently sold by Roumania. The Overseas News Agency states that the British were unable to obtain even half of the 60,000 carloads of corn they desired to purchase.

Grand Jury's Report Of County "Bad Lands"

for not only did the attendance improve and remain sustained, but that the roads were improved.

That additional grants be made to assist in securing fully qualified and competent teachers.

It was strongly maintained that crime did not exist and manifest itself in the northern parts of the district to a greater extent than in other places but that it seemed to gain larger publicity. It was agreed that, as a factor, the element of isolation was largely contributory.

On one suggestion the Grand Jury seemed united, that a practical and likely to be effective measure would be the institution of a police patrol, with something in a modified way of the functions and power of the North West Mounted Police, to make efficient and regular inspection of the district, to search out and expose every case of low life and low living conditions, and with some power to act and thus avoid delays. It was held that if it were taken as being true, as claimed, that many of the worst cases drift in from outside, that such rigid inspection followed by corrective measures would do much to break up the habit of settling down to exist in circumstances that must infallibly tend to a slackness in life.

Side by side with this, a work of report and suggestion could be carried on. Based on such, the departments might in cases where the outlook promises little of decent living remove to another part of the province any who could not fail to be so benefitted by a better chance in improved surroundings. Some such action would break up the habit of squatting now so frequent.

It was the sense of those of the Grand Jury who heard the evidence of witnesses at court on February 17 and 18 bearing on certain cases before the court, of a reluctance to tell all that might be told of conditions which must have had a bearing on what was before the court.

JURY'S FORMAL RESOLUTION

Moved by Mr. Job Coon, seconded by Mr. Harold Rye.

"That your Grand Jury having met in conference and carefully and thoroughly discussed conditions as outlined in the presentment made to the court during the month of February last, that it is the sense of the Grand Jury that a remedied measure of large value would be of the institution of the Provincial Government, through the proper department of a system of local police patrol, that an officer be appointed whose sole object would be to travel the district intimately and searchingly, to have power to judge as to conditions and to act, to the end that, for the future, conditions of living that seem and do make for low life and degredation be broken up.

That in the interests of the community the authorities act, and at once.

That the matter of increased support to such schools as would necessarily need such be referred to the County Council with the suggestion that the advice and assistance of the inspector of schools for the county be obtained.

That with regard to the suggestion that families be removed and relocated on other lands, the Grand Jury is informed that there are many who want to get out but cannot under the circumstances which they are placed. Investigation would most surely disclose, and if well founded, action could be taken. But the view is held by those conversant with the situation that there are others who would not mend ways and mode of life and circumstances under any set of conditions. In such the only practical thing would be to place them under strict surveillance for the future and so gradually guide into a better state of effort and living. In just such work would the inspection of the police patrol prove most effectual.

CROWN ATTORNEY HATTON SAYS A "CLEAN-UP" MUST BE MADE.

In January last (1916), County Crown Attorney G. W. Hatton, addressed a letter to the Attorney General's Department, Toronto, in which he referred to the docket about to be presented to the Court, specifying certain cases which have recently been before the Court and public. He added in part:

Public opinion in this and the adjoining counties is aroused to the frequency of this class of crime (incest), and some steps should be taken, in fact must be taken, to clean them up. Even though we consider this crime from an economic basis there can be no question but that it is cheaper, that is, will cost less money to take and carry out the necessary steps to wipe out this crime and all that it governs and leads to.

We have the inquests, the preliminary hearings, and the trials and all the expenses necessary and incidental to the same, the upkeep of the gaols, prisons, reformatories and several asylums. But when we take into consideration the suffering of these poor children, their health and lives ruined, the immorality and crime itself in all its unspeakable hideousness, its effect on the community, the degenerates and the prostitution which always follow, the lowering of the standard of our people, permeating through generations of crime.

Incredible Number of Cases.

The number of these cases that have come before me in one year of my appointment as Crown Attorney is hardly credible. And the difficulty, the almost impossibility of obtaining convictions is another strong reason why an effort should be made to make conditions such as will prevent the commission of the crime to as less a degree as possible.

To do this we must give as much notoriety to the mode of life of these people as possible, open up to the light of public opinion, and this can be done by a proper system of inspection. It is generally conceded now that a man's home is not his to the total exclusion of the state, that we all have an interest more or less one with another.

Inspection Needed.

Mr. Hatton referred to the state inspection of barns, piggeries, back yards, etc., the placarding and disinfecting of houses to regulate disease and epidemic and the pest houses referred to the homes of these poor defenceless children, subjected to the brutal lust of their fathers and brothers are as completely neglected as if they did not exist.

Houses, outbuildings and premises should be cleaned regularly. Beds, bedding, nearly always in a deplorable condition, should be looked after, as the entire family and visitors nearly always occupy one bedroom.

Separate bedrooms, especially for female children as soon as they can be trusted to sleep alone, with proper locks, etc., must be insisted on. If the people are too poor to make these improvements the Government should take charge and lend the money. From an economic point of view again, it is cheaper—but we must get rid of the question of cost as much as possible—there are other and weightier reasons.

In conclusion, wrote Mr. Hatton—my excuse for writing the above is, that since my appointment as Crown Attorney for the County of Peterborough, I have had so many cases of young children who have been criminally assaulted, and I am told that similar conditions prevail in other districts of this Province.

FIFTY-TWO CHILDREN BROUGHT TO THE SHELTER BY MR. COCHRANE.

Through his wide experience in Peterborough County as High County Constable since 1878, and as agent of the Children's Aid Society, Mr. George Cochrane should be worthy of a prominent place in the Grand Jury's report. When Mr. Cochrane was consulted he had not recovered from the effects of a severe accident, hence his contribution to the subject is given as an interview. He said:

Around and north of Apsley and in Chandos, people are fairly comfortable and well-to-do. Much depends upon the individual energy and hopefulness. The settlers in Anstruther are doing fairly well. Also along Loon Lake, and those found on some lands to the west of Apsley. There are good settlements across Cavendish, principally in the north end, and these comprise a good and energetic class of settlers. Fully two-thirds of the township of Belmont should never have been settled in an endeavour to do farming. This is clearly seen when it is remembered that the lumbering is done, the supplying of vegetables and fodder to the lumber camps is at an end, such occupations, the cutting of wood and the collection of tanbark, practically ceased. It was surprising what a small area of good land would be found north of Havelock village.

As to the abandoned farms. These are we know now as a direct result of ill-advised attempts to settle. While members of the older people were, so to speak, anchored to localities and unable to reach a point to get away, the younger, seeing no future in prospect, were moving away, a perfectly natural and obvious condition. In fact so many have gone out in years past to the West that their withdrawal has given emphasis to the belief that settlement and farming in the district has offered little opportunity.

Conditions Ameliorating.

As to the reports and what is put forward as evidence of immorality in the district. It was true that such existed. But we should not assume that it was a condition that would not be found elsewhere where almost similar conditions and surroundings presented themselves. The isolation, the absence of friendly and social intercourse was always provocative. But in a large measure the cases, those the most serious in giving colour to a state of affairs, drifted in from the east and south, just as such a state of low life congregates in certain quarters of a large city.

Five Murders Recorded.

The record of crimes, noticeable by their seriousness, was a thing to be considered. These indicate a lack of restraining influences. Five murders had been done in the last twenty years, four of these in the last ten or twelve years. The records of Mr. Cochrane's service showed that within a not unreasonable length of years he had taken, as agent for the Children's Aid Society, fifty-two children in decent and comfortable living conditions. The circumstances must be deplorable when such heroic measures are admissable and necessary. There was no question but that left in the environment in which they were found these children would have made no progress at all, would have lived in a condition of extreme poverty and grown up, probably, to ultimately become a burden on society at large. His impression was that many of these cases, or cases where the worst conditions prevailed, were to be found in the section between Havelock and Stoney Lake.

Suggests Ranching.

Mr. Cochrane suggests large cattle ranches. The lands could be reforested only with extreme difficulty. The soil is light. Fires are not infrequent. Indeed the only way to at all reforest the lands would be by planting. This as an experiment had been tried near Westwood. While the plot showed that in the lapse of many years timber would be produced the growth was slow. The experimental section had been invaded by cattle another plantation practically destroyed. If reforestation were carried on insofar as planting is concerned, the areas so treated would have to be set apart and secured from fire, and the depredations of stock in general, and cattle in particular.

INVESTIGATION SUGGESTED IN CERTAIN DISTRICTS BY MR. E. A. PECK.

He Says Number of Persons Living In Squalid Conditions Is Quite Small.

Mr. E. A. Peck wrote that he had a fair idea of conditions in the township of Harvey, Galway and Cavendish, but was not so well acquainted with Burleigh, Chandas, etc.

"As far as my experience goes the people are, as a rule, fairly well-to-do, have suitable residences, plenty of food and fuel, etc., and good schools in which they are much interested.

"It should be borne in mind that there are in sections substantial areas of fair land, and while at one time there was a good deal of want, caused by lumbering operations coming to an end, conditions are very much improved. Many have gone away, and those that remain do get the benefit of the clearings and improvements made by those who have left the district."

Further on Mr. Peck asserts—There are slum conditions in every urban municipality, so there are similar conditions in the rural districts, and active steps should be taken to remedy this evil. What I wish to emphasize, however, is that the percentage of persons living in squalid conditions is quite small. To suggest that the settlers as a whole be urged to abandon their homes and go to New Ontario, or to the West is not, in my opinion, practicable.

Mr. Peck suggests—that the government decline to grant location or to extend any more lands in the district unless under special circumstances where it could be shown that such action would be of benefit to some bona-fide resident.

Extended powers should be given to the Emigration Department of either the Dominion or the Province, possibly to a sub-committee of the Dominion Commission or Conservation Commission with a view of searching out and dealing with all cases of destitution in the district, and of course money would require to be appropriated for that purpose.

Sub-committees should be appointed in the different townships, or probably the members of the municipal council would themselves act with a view of securing information of local interest.

Effort should be made to remove the families of the destitute to New Ontario, and place them upon the partially improved and cleared farms which the Province is arranging to have put in condition for settlers.

Mr. Peck concludes by advocating a reforestation system in the section referred to.

APSLEY MERCHANT DECLARES IT IS FRONTIER SECTION NOT NORTH COUNTRY.

That Is Open to Investigation—Village Has Sixty Recruits Whose Conduct Has Been Above Question.

Mr. William Gallon, merchant of Apsley wrote:

I have been a resident of the north country for over thirty years and can say without fear of contradiction that the morals of this section are above reproach. It seems that when things happen that are rather shady it is at once credited to the north country, while in every case it is in Dummer, Havelock or some frontier settlement.

I am pleased that you wrote me in reference to the matter. We have now some fifty or sixty boys in khaki, drilling as part of the 93rd regiment, and Rev. E. W. Gardiner and Rev. S. Carr who have both taken an active part in the recruiting will bear out in saying that a better and more law-abiding lot of boys could not be found in Ontario. No swearing, no drinking or obscene language is heard or seen in the village of Apsley. I am sure I don't know how I can make the denial of immortality stronger.

BETTER SCHOOLS WOULD HELP SOLVE PROBLEM SAYS J. W. COON.

Sections Cannot Afford to Pay Properly Qualified Teachers and the Communities Suffer.

Mr. J. W. Coon of Havelock wrote as follows:

Referring to these northern townships we find that they are settled some years ago when timber was plentiful and lumber progressing.

DESCRIPTION

A seal brown, 6 hands high, weighs 1,250 lbs., bred by G. H. Rundle, Piqua, Ohio. This horse is one of the handsomest and most perfect built, and has the best feet and legs of any horse in Canada; he has excellent breeding and disposition. He has not been raced since 1908 his record 2.08¾; is no measure of his speed. Can show 2.00 speed any time. Mr. Rundle refused $4,000 for him as a three-year-old only on account of Mr. Rundle's health he would not be in Canada. His oldest foals are coming 4 years. 4 out of 5 are trotters—so horse gets better foals. Breeders looking for speed will do well to send 100 miles to this great horse. He should be seen to be appreciated.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

The pioneers of the district were a fairly thrifty class, and although the district and country is rough and broken up with rocky ridges there is considerable good land which in turn forms good settlements and we find good farmers.

There are also some classes which are careless living fellows, such as you find wherever man is found. One of the greatest drawbacks in these sections is the low standard of the public schools. They seem to be unable to pay sufficient money to secure teachers of the best qualifications. In my opinion, if the Government could be induced to encourage these people with school grants that would enable them to secure school the year round and organize a system whereby the children would keep at school and thus enable them to secure an education to assist in meeting the duties of life, I thoroughly believe that money spent in this direction would have a telling effect for good on the present and future generations.

MR. JAS. THOMPSON, M.P.P., KNOWS ONLY ISOLATED CASES OF REAL POVERTY

Other Sections Are Fairly Well Off and Great Majority of People Live Normal Lives.

Mr. James Thompson, M.PP. for I. st Peterborough, wrote:

I know ninety per cent. of the settlers in Methuen, Chandos, Anstruther and Burleigh, and I think it will be found that there exists very little of extreme poverty in these four townships, although they had bad crop failures in 1913-14.

In the northern part of Belmont and Dummer one may find a few isolated cases of extreme poverty. In the Oak Lake district almost every settler is fairly comfortable, with a good school, and the great majority of the people living normal lives. This will also apply to the Carl settlement in the north end of Methuen township. In the whole of the township of Chandos will be found good schools, while seventy-five per cent. of the people have good stock, including horses, hogs, cattle, etc., and are comfortable and there is very little actual poverty among the rest.

In the extreme north of Anstruther are about ten or fifteen families. I know them but have not visited them, and I think they are comfortable, but further information can be had at Apsley. In the south of Anstruther will be found good schools and fair farm buildings. This will apply to all the people in the Apsley district. There is not much settlement between Apsley and Mt. Julien except along the main road. The settlers along this road are fairly comfortable and the settlements around and between Mt. Julien and Burleigh are above the average.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM BAFFLES GRAND JUROR LIVING IN DUMMER.

Mr. Robert Patterson of Dummer, one of the Grand Jurors, thus briefly gave his opinion as to the state of the general environment of the people in question:

Being one of the Grand Jury I heard the remarks of Chief Justice Mulock. First, I think this state of affairs exists, but the remedy is too much for me. His Lordship called them farmers. These people don't grow their potatoes. A number live on pasture lots owned by some one else, but all could have plenty of potatoes if they would plant and care for them.

HOPELESSLY POOR IN TOWNSHIPS OF GALWAY AND CAVENDISH ARE FEW.

Mr. Robert White of Ewan, P.O., referring to Galways and Cavendish townships, stated that about ninety per cent. of the people were living about as decently as would be found in any poor country.

"You might find two or three families that do not have enough to live on, but it is because they are too shiftless to make a living. But the same people could not live at all in a town or front township on account of the rents and cost of fuel and taxes. Out here their wood costs nothing, only their time collecting it. The rent is free, as they generally get a home put up on a lot that they can locate from the government. In these townships the taxes are light.

HIGH STANDARD IN CHANDOS.

Reeve F. J. Bullied vouched for the high standard of the residents of Chandos. The ratepayers were a church going people, and he knew no degeneracy. Law and order prevail. The conditions are the same as in the townships adjoining the city. Galley four

DR. FORD, OF NORWOOD, SAYS CONDITIONS IMPROVED IN RECENT YEARS.

Dr. Samuel P. Ford, of Norwood, replied to a communication from the Grand Jury as follows (in part):

Let me say that bad as the conditions in many parts are now they are not nearly as bad as they were from twenty-five to forty-five years ago. Of the very large number of cases of illegitimacy that I have been brought in direct contact with professionally, fully seventy-five per cent. occurred previous to say thirty years ago. The same statement will hold good in regard to a number of cases of incest. But nothwithstanding this marked improvement there are many more of these cases than there ought to be.

As to the causes: Poverty and illiteracy and isolation have all had more or less effect in producing this unfortunate state of affairs. I have come across many cases where whole families of nine or ten persons were compelled, on account of poverty, to live and eat and sleep in one room, thus familiarising boys and girls with circumstances that should only take place in seclusion, and stimulating their passions to like deeds. I visited a family in the township of Lake consisting of father and mother and six children. They were six miles from a neighbor, and when that point was reached it was six miles to the next. They had no school and no church privileges, and what could be expected under such circumstances?

I visited a settlement in the township of Methuen some years ago and I was told that they had not had a religious service of any kind for ten years. But to my mind the greatest cause of these conditions of immorality is to be found in the frequent marriages that take place between feeble minded young men and women, resulting in the bringing into the world of a lot of degenerates, who scarcely know right from wrong.

I could give a host of illustrations of this statement if it were necessary. I have nothing but contempt for the man who would issue a marriage license in such cases, and the severest condemnation for the clergyman who would perform the ceremony. I have in mind a family living not ten miles from here, both parents not far removed from idiocy, who were married a few years ago, and are bringing into the world children that can never be anything but a burden to the community.

I could extend these observations, but think probably I have given you all you need.

STATED CASE GRANTED FOR THOS. DUCKWORTH

Orangeville, April 24.—Mr. Justice Kelly on application of G. R. McKeown, K.C., M.P.P., of Toronto, attorney for Thomas Duckworth, who is confined in the County Jail here under sentence of death for the murder of his brother-in-law, Harry Strutt in November last, and was sentenced at the Dufferin Spring Assizes to be hanged on May 12th, has granted a stated case for submission to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court.

The question to be argued is that while the jury were at liberty to believe or disbelieve the witnesses, they were not at liberty to substitute the evidence given at the inquest before the Coroner's jury for that given at the trial and base their verdict thereon.

The case will likely be argued during the coming week. Mr. T. C. Robinette, K.C., who defended the prisoner at the trial here in March, will be associated with Mr. McKeown. If the application is successful it will mean a new trial.

The jury originally stood eight to four in favor of manslaughter, and finally after eight hours' deliberation returned a verdict of murder, with a strong recommendation to mercy. A petition for executive clemency has been very numerously signed and will be presented if the pending application fails.

Duckworth has been a model prisoner since his incarceration and since his trial has learned to read and write being previously illiterate.

HARRISON FORD and MARIE CARROLL—With the New York No. 5 Company of "Rolling Stones," which will be seen at "The Grand" tomorrow, Thursday evening.

"Rolling Stones" described by its author, Edgar Selwyn, as a comedy of "youth, love and adventure," comes here under the direction of Selwyn and Company which indicates in advance a fine production and a worthy cast. In fact, the latter will be the same as seen during the six months' engagement of the play at the Harris Theatre, New York, including Leonard Doyle, Harrison Ford, Marie Carroll, Margaret Brainard, Arthur Aylesworth, Frank Kingdon, and all the others who have been playing in the piece since the middle of last summer. "Rolling Stones" has largely met with success through the originality of its author in developing a story of unusual interest replete with lively, snappy comedy, some melodrama, many delightful love scenes and a touch of romance wherever opportunity presents. With these various ingredients it is small wonder that it has been one of the best patronized attractions in New York and other cities during the current season.

THIS RANGE MEANS AN EXCEPTIONAL SAVING OF FUEL

Peterborough Hardware Co. Now Handling The Gurney-Oxford Stoves—An Invitation to Inspect These Wonderful Values

A new departure in the history of the Peterborough Hardware has recently taken place, that is, the introduction of stoves, as a line of merchandise, handled by this enterprising firm. This well known store will sell exclusively the Gurney-Oxford stove and in doing so, believe they can give prospective purchasers exceptional value for their money. The Gurney-Oxford range in its various grades and styles represents the last word in modern cooking equipment. Then again the prices are attractive and sure to please the most economic purse.

This splendid range is the highest development in steel construction. It is the very best effort to meet every demand of the household. Each stove is equipped with the Gurney-Oxford economizer, free of charge. With this economizer the heat of the oven can be regulated perfectly by a single movement of the economizer handle on the top of the range. The old style damper control, meant that sometimes even an expert got unexpected results in the way of oven heat and unexpected results in the kitchen usually means a baking failure and waste work and material. This cannot happen with the Gurney-Oxford "Economizer" control, for you simply put that handle to the degree of heat wanted and the desired results follow. This is a special equipment with the Gurney ranges only, and people contemplating the buying of a range will do well to realize its unequalled worth.

The Gurney-Oxford Chancellor steel range, selling at $85.50, is a wonderful value and will suit all requirements. An extremely low priced stove is the Gurney-Oxford Prince at $36.75 and would be suitable for a small sized family. Many other values too, might be mentioned, but every householder is invited to see the same at the Peterborough Hardware Co. Store. 14-1w.

URIC ACID SUFFERING.

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Alaska A New Tourists' Paradise

By inaugurating a fine steamship service from points on the North Pacific Coast to Alaska, the Grand Trunk Pacific has unlocked the gateway to a new Tourists' Paradise. This delightful region abounds in expansive lakes and beautiful fjords, whose shimmering waters, nestling at the foot of snow-capped peaks and glittering glaciers, reflect the gorgeous colours of the Northern sky. In addition to possessing scenic glories similar to, but often transcending those of Norway, Alaska, has charms peculiar to its climate, geographical situation and traditions. Here reside the licensed Indian, with his strange customs and stranger totem poles recording the history of his tribe and symbolizing his religion; the quaint, stoic Eskimo of the Seward Peninsula, and the hardy pioneer of all nationalities. Then the unequalled opportunities for fishing and hunting in this region of abandoning natural life and natural beauties are attractions which make an especial appeal to the sportsman.

The big, excellently appointed oil-burning steamships of the Grand Trunk Pacific, the "Prince Rupert" and the "Prince George" are providing service this season from Seattle Victoria, Vancouver and Prince Rupert to the Alaskan points of Ketchikan, Wrangell, Juneau and Skagway. These steamships link up with the Grand Trunk Pacific's transcontinental line at Prince Rupert and passengers are enabled to save at least two days on the Alaskan trip by using this route.

A new folder describing and picturing this Alaskan trip and the journey through the "Norway of America" has just been issued by the Grand Trunk, and a copy of this publication may be obtained on application to B. A. Rose, C.P.R. T. A. and C. E. Horning, D.P.A., Toronto, Ont.

Bryan and Ford in New Party, is Report

WASHINGTON, April 26.—Political circles discussed a rumour that William Jennings Bryan, Henry Ford and George B. McClellan, former Mayor of New York, will organize a new national party and put a Presidential ticket in the field next Fall. It was stated they would gather soon in Harrisburg, Pa., to discuss plans.

Mr. Bryan believes, it is declared there are enough voters opposed to war and preparedness to justify the move. Mr. Ford, it was said, might head the new party-ticket.

The boom in recruiting for the 93rd Battalion is evidenced by the fact that nine men were taken on the strength of the battalion to-day. A couple of weeks of the same kind of recruiting would leave the battalion in good shape.

The band of the 93rd Battalion left for Westwood at 1.30 o'clock to-day to take part in a reception to Capt. E. Birdsall of the 2nd Battalion. Lt.-Col. Johnston, Capt. Neilson and other officers of the 93rd will be in attendance.

The public is reminded of the big popular concert under the auspices of the 93rd Band in Victoria Hall on Monday night next. The admission will only be 10c. and 15c. The band will be assisted by Mr. Asa Huycke and a splendid programme has been arranged. There will be only a couple of opportunities of hearing the band in concert programmes before they leave for camp, so that there should be a big attendance on Monday night.

The Lindsay Warder says: While in town on Good Friday Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, surprised Chaplain C. G. Williams by bestowing upon him the rank of a major and the honour of being senior recruiting officer for the entire 3rd Military Division, with headquarters at Lindsay.

Chaplain Williams, who was formerly a captain, is worthy of the honour and has merited the promotion.

Mr. George Carter, Murray street has received a letter from his son, Sergt. G. S. Carter with the 39th battalion at Shorncliffe in which it states that the camp has received a visit from Pte. Johnston Pandash, the well known Hiawatha Indian with the 21st battalion, who is on a two week's furlough earned by killing 16 Germans and two German officers by sniping. Pte. Pandash's picture appears in the London Mirror of April 10th. Sergt. Carter left here as a private and has since been promoted to be Sergt. and has now made application for a Commission.

Sergt. Carlton ("Dad") Stewart, former manager of the St. Thomas baseball club, and also a former player of the Peterborough Canadian League Club, who enlisted with the Pioneers at St. Thomas, later transferred to Guelph, and from there went to England, has been heard from. He wrote to Mr. Graney, father of 'Glad' Graney, the Cleveland American League baseball player, of St. Thomas, enclosing a page of an American magazine, containing a picture showing "Glad" Graney and Ty. Cobb of Detroit. Stewart found the pictures tacked up in a trench when his company relieved another section of Canadian soldiers "somewhere in France." Stewart wrote a short message upon it, saying that since leaving Canada he has become an efficient bomb thrower, having been successful in making it particularly hot for the Germans on many occasions. "Dad" says that his many years of service on the ball field has especially fitted him for his new duties.

TORONTO, April 26.— No sooner had James Crockfield, a private in the 198th Battalion, pleaded guilty to perjury in connection with a declaration that he had served in no other battalion, than Magistrate Denison sentenced him to two years in the Kingston Penitentiary.

When the soldier heard the sentence his face blanched and in a shaky voice he said: "That is a stiff sentence. What will happen to my wife and child. Give me a chance?"

The magistrate's decision came as suddenly as had his first sentence.

"If you have a wife and family you will go to jail for 90 days."

Tobacco, cigarettes, cigars or any other article, on which the customs or excise duties have been remitted and which is offered for sale in regimental institutes, is not to be sold to any civilian as the concession is intended for the exclusive benefit of members of the Canadian Expedition ary force. Soldiers are forbidden to purchase any such articles for civilians.

With reference to militia order No. 79 and divigional order No. 253, of 1915, commanding officers will persuade all suitable men to avail themselves of the offer of furlough for the purpose of engaging in the cultivation and seeding of the land in order that agricultural work may be carried on effectively and adequate agricultural production ensured.

Returned Soldiers Want Positions

Who Will Lend a Hand to a Hand—Two Situations Wanted

Situations are wanted for two returned men. One is a fair accountant and would be useful as a stock room keeper or some such work. The other has some knowledge of handling machines, but after his disability in the field, cannot do, just now, heavy work. As it is something of a chore to telephone the several manufacturers in the city to try and place these deserving men, this method is made use of to draw attention to their needs. Who can make room? If there be plenty of work going now is the time to show it. Please 'phone any possible opportunity to the office of the Patriotic Fund, and the men will be put in communication. Mention any place. There must be one to suit the circumstances.

First Marriage in Trinity Church

Couple Was Presented With a Bible By the Trustees of the Church

The first marriage to take place in Trinity Methodist church took place this afternoon when Stella Fry of this city was united in marriage to John Porter Scott of Toronto. In accordance with the time honoured custom, the couple were presented with a beautiful Bible by the trustees of the church in recognition of the fact that they were the first couple to eb married in the new edifice.

Rev. J. P. Wilson performed the ceremony.

ANNUAL TOUR OF BOARD OF WORKS

The annual jaunt of the Board of Works will take place on Friday. Anyone having any complaints to make or suggestions concerning needed improvements, will find a repository in the form of Ald. McIntyre, chairman of the Board of Works. Come early and avoid the rush.

JUDGMENT RESERVED.

The only civil case before Chief Justice Sir Glenholme Falconbridge was that of K. C. McLeod vs. W. A. Mellmoyle over a real estate deal. It was concluded at ten o'clock and judgment will be given before the court is concluded.

STYLE, QUALITY AND SERVICE IN THESE

$27.50

SILK SUITS

THE magic touch of the magician must surely have been applied to these alluring garments. Skilled designers and sewers wielded the magic wand in this case and the result is a gracefulness of line that betokens charm and portrays fashion in its most adorable form.

THESE SILK SUITS are the climax of style and the price is indeed inconsiderable. Colors are Copen, Wisteria, Rose, Navy and Black. The sweeping flare is featured in both coat and skirt; belted effects and pleats are admirably worked into the designs. At $27.50 they represent a standard in suit values that is seldom equaled. If you made a selection at random you could not go astray.

The CRESSMAN Grocery Limited

ONTARIO'S CROPS STILL GIVE GOOD PROMISE

Nothing to Indicate Harm From Spring Weather—Fall Wheat Though Thin and Short is Coming Along Without any Disaster—Clover Looking Well, Too—No Scarcity of Feed—Horses Low in Price

Wintering Crops.

Fall wheat so far gives excellent promise. The top is not so heavy as usual, as much of the crop was sown late, owing to wet ground, but the fields were well protected by snow during the winter, and now have a healthy and vigorous appearance. So far there has been but little injury from spring "heaving," and there are very few complaints of injury from insects.

The clover crop, like fall wheat, has come throuhg the winter in good shape, except on very low places or on poorly drained land. There has been but little injury from heaving and at present the promise is for one of the best hay seasons for years Alfalfa is also promising well.

Orchards and Small Fruits.

The winter was not trying to fruit trees, the greatest damage to orchards resulting from the girdling of young trees by mice and rabbits driven to hunger by the deep snow lying so long. In instances grape vines and raspberry canes have been frozen back more or less owing to tenderness from the late fall growth, but the injury will not likely affect the general yield. Strawberries and other small fruits are about normal. The San Jose Scale is still complained of in the Lake Erie counties, where it has got a hold in many old orchards but elsewhere this pest is being combatted in its earlier stages, and is being kept more under check. The general outlook at present for all classes of fruit is favourable, apple buds giving better promise than for years.

Live Stock.

The wintering of live stock was a comparatively easy matter, owing to there being a large quantity of grain on hand which had been more or less sprouted by the wet harvesting. Corn and straw were also in abundance, although not of such good quality as in more recent years, and there was a good average of roots, but hay was scarce and high in price.

The demand for horses, notwithstanding war conditions, has not been encouraging. The animals as a rule, are in good working condition, although many have suffered from a mild form of distemper.

On the whole cattle have wintered well. No serious disease has been complained of, but there have been a few cases of abortion, and a more frequent complaint of a form of indigestion, said to be resulting from eating musty grain, straw or other fodder. Dairy cattle are said to be rather thin in flesh owing to the heavy drain upon their milking powers during the rich pastures of the midsummer and fall of last year. Beef cattle are not as plentiful as usual, as prices of fat stock have been most enticing. Store cattle are also rather scarce, but are up to the average in quality, although there are complaints that some are rather of the dairy type. Calves are being better cared for than formerly.

Sheep have wintered well, and lambs are said to be coming on nicely. As with other live stock, much depends upon the handling.

A correspondent describes the hog as the farm "mortgage lifter" at present prices. The heavy demand for bacon hogs has made a shortage in the number on hand. There are even less complaints than usual of sickness among swine.

Owing to there being a good supply of fodder corn and of straw on hand and also a considerable quantity of sprouted grain for feed, other fodders have held out well, although hay has been fed more sparingly than usual. Live stock will be carried over nicely to the grass.

Farm Labour and Production.

The enlistment of so many men from the farms, and the enticing prices paid by factories making munitions and other military supplies, have caused a shortage of labour that is much felt in rural districts. Several correspondents state that in many cases there is only one man on each 100-acre farm; others say that on such farms there is only about one out of five that has a hired man left on it. In many instances women have to assist in the field work. Much less fall wheat was sown in 1915, and a larger area than ever will be devoted to grass for hay and pasturing. About the usual acreage of spring grains will be grown; likely, more oats. Corn and beans will also have a slightly increased area, prices for the latter having attracted attention. Canning crops will not be popular, as they usually require more attention. Wages are higher than ever, men asking and getting from $30 to $40 with board and in some cases more. While some farmers are not optimistic over present conditions, others are full of confidence especially where they can interchange help work with their neighbours.

Death of Former Peterboro Man

Edward Perdue Passed Away in Atchison County—Was a Successful Business Man

The appended extracts taken from the "Atchison Champion," refer to a former resident of Peterborough county:

Edward Perdue, one of Atchison county's oldest and best known citizens, passed away at his home near Huron. For the past three months he has been bedfast, suffering with Bright's disease and heart trouble and for two weeks had been sinking rapidly.

Lived Here 45 Years.

Mr. Perdue has lived in Atchison county for the past forty-five years, and the position and influence he has obtained give an idea of the sterling worth and character of the man. He was born of Irish parentage on a farm in Peterborough county, Ontario, Canada, June 27, 1860, where he spent his youth. He came to Atchison in 1870 and during the first year worked at various odd jobs. The next five years he was a construction foreman on the Santa Fe railroad from Atchison west. During that time he saved enough to buy a farm near Huron, and since that time has devoted himself chiefly to the raising and feeding of livestock.

At the time of his death he was owner of 1,040 acres of the best farm lands in Lancaster township. At the same time Mr. Perdue has been active along other lines. In 1891 he helped organize the Huron State bank, of which he was president. He was one of the organizers of the Commercial State bank of Atchison, which was succeeded by the First National bank. Mr. Perdue has been president of the last named bank since 1900.

Starting without a cent Mr. Perdue accumulated a large fortune through his own efforts and rare business judgment. He leaves an estate estimated at over $200,000.

Prominent in Politics.

Mr. Perdue has been a lifelong Democrat and has always taken a more or less active part in political affairs of the county. He was county commissioner for one term beginning in 1897. In 1904 he was elected to the state legislature and served one term, declining re-election. He was a member of the Catholic church and belonged to the A. O. U. W. and the Modern Woodmen of America.

He was married in 1878 to Mary Viola Davey of Brown county, who survives him. His seven children are all living. They are Mrs. Maria Walters, Mrs. J. M. Delaney, Mrs. Mabel Schmidt, Charles Perdue, Thomas H. Perdue and Edward Perdue, Jr., all of Huron and vicinity, and George Perdue, a farmer in North Dakota.

Largest Funeral.

J. A. Harouff, who attended the funeral of Edward Perdue yesterday, says it was one of the largest that he ever attended in the country. There were over 100 automobiles in line, besides numerous hacks, buggies and surries. The procession reached nearly a mile, when they went from the residence to the Catholic church in Parnell. Father Matthias conducted the services in accordance with the rites of the Catholic church. The casket was one of solid metallic, with trimmings of gold, and was one of the finest ever seen in this locality. The casket reposes in an underground brick vault in the Miller cemetery. Father Matthias and Father Roberts conducted the burial services at the grave.

Many Friends Attended.

There was one of the largest attendances in the history of the county at the funeral of the late Edward Perdue yesterday afternoon at Huron. There were about a hundred automobiles and the buggies stretched along the road for a mile and a half. The number of people is estimated at over 600.

Funeral Was a Great Tribute to Popular Citizen

was kind, generous, thoughtful of others, and anxious to be a man approved of God.

How else could he be born of such a mother—trained by such a father, reared in such a home. The influence of home life cuts deep in soul and life of a man.

I would like to mention one man in connection with this service whom you know not, Rev. Dr. Copeland of, Hot Springs, Ark., who was Mr. Stratton's spiritual adviser in the south land. He and his church were so kind to our departed brother and his wife, and Mrs. Stratton, patient, sympathetic, tender, she gave up her life to him during his long and trying illness, seconded his every effort to find a remedy and effect a cure. No toil, no self-sacrifice too great for her to pass through, in seeking relief for her husband. She has a faithful wife's recompense. "She has done what she could."

Then like all the generations of men who have preceded us, he has passed away. The close of life is a solemn and important event which all must meet.

All men have seen this inevitable experience coming to them, and some with dread and apprehension. Even our Lord Himself seemed to shrink from an experience which was common to all men. Some have endeavoured to elude death, seeking some elixir that would ward off the stroke. Others tried to reconcile men to their fate, telling them it was a law of nature which all must obey. That is one of the terms on which they received life, that all things about us are mortal and perishing—cities, states and works of art pass away. The great and the poor have all gone the same way, prince and peasant. "The path of glory leads but to the grave." All the world's a stage and men and women are the players, with their entrances and exits, and we must meet with courage this "veiled and silent sister of the night." But better than courage is to experience the words of the Psalmist, "Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil for Thou art with me."

Then death is no skeleton with a scythe in one hand and hour glass in the other—no veiled figure one cannot understand—no "silent sister of the night" with no word of love for us. It is the voice of God the Father calling his child home. At this Easter tide we hear from the other side of the empty tomb of Jesus the words "I am He that liveth and was dead and behold I am alive forever more, and I have the keys of death and hades." "Because I live ye shall live also." And thus death is interpreted by Easter and we expect to meet again those whom "we have loved long since and lost awhile."

"As Jesus our Lord met death so may we. "Father into Thy hands I commend my spirit."

Rev. J. B. Webb said:—

I am privileged to say a few words at this time at the request of the bereaved family and by the courtesy of the pastor of the late Mr. Stratton.

These are not times for either extravagant praise or for presumptions criticism.

It is a great comfort to read the challenge of the apostle Paul as he says to the Romans—"Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died".

I hope that after my death my friends may be careful of what they say in praise of me, and my enemies as careful in the matter of blame but that all will leave me and my eternal destiny in the hands of my Saviour.

One word I must say since I enjoyed the confidence of Mr. Stratton that from both his lips and pen I have learned that his thoughts were not always occupied with things of this world. While he did not carry his heart on his coat sleeve, there are those who have heard him speak of his responsibility to Christ and his need of what this world cannot give. He has said to me, what perhaps no could all say truly, that there were many things in his past life which he did wish could be blotted out but he said,—quite as truly I believe—that at the times that the greatest burden of blame as laid upon him it as undeserved. Perhaps this is the price which most men must pay who serve the public—"In that fierce light which beats upon a throne. And blackens every blot".

It is a blessed thing to know that the Lord knows our hearts—it is helpful to remember that there was a Joseph of Arimathea who while blaming himself for his tardiness in taking [illegible] place beside his Lord had it written of him—"He was a disciple of Jesus—but secretly".

Many both of rich and poor will miss our friend who has been called away. His advice in high councils will be hard to replace. Peterborough has lost a conspicuous figure and a great heart.

We are living in times when all must see the shifting nature of things that were considered stable. Times when the strongest foundations are sorely tired. Times when we would all do well to examine our anchorage. You remember these pregnant lines. "Like as a little bird that lighted,

Upon a bow that swings;
He feels it sway, but swings on unaffrighted,
Knowing that he hath wings".

If God who knows us as no earthly friend can is aware of our deep set passion for the highest things, death has no terrors—It is only an incident—a release.

The pall bearers were His Honour Judge Huyck, Dr. Carmichael and Messrs. Dan O'Connell, R. R. Hall, G. N. Gordon and J. J. Hartley.

As the long cortege made his way down George street there were several striking evidences of the esteem in which the deceased was held. When Central Park was reached the soldiers of the 93rd Battalion stood stiffly to attention while the cortege passed and down town the blinds of the stores were down and the marts of trade were silent until the last vehicle had gone on.

Many out-of-town people were here for the funeral among them being Mr. D. W. Karn of Woodstock, Rev. Father McGuire, Ennismore, Mr. W. Claude Fox, Mr. A. L. Piper of Toronto, Capt. Lorne Ardiel of London, Messrs. Edward Clarke, A. L. Young and T. Aikenhead of Toronto, Rev. Dr. Shorey of Port Hope, Mr. J. B. Pearce of Norwood, Mr. T. J. Voice of The People

The Editor of the Examiner

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow me through your columns to draw the attention of the congregations of several of the churches in the city to a matter well worthy of their reverent consideration. It does not appear to be generally understood that during the rendering of the Dead March in Saul or the Hallelujah chorus, the congregation's attitude should be one of reverence till the closing strains die away, the attitude generally assumed by those who do so is that of standing.

I would not imply a lack of reverence, but more from want of giving the matter serious thought from a reverential standpoint.

Let me give an instance. On Good Friday afternoon I paid a visit to a local church where, I had heard, a service was to be held. At the close of the service the organist rendered the Dead March in Saul, out of respect, I understand, to the late Hon. J. R. Stratton, who was closely associated with the church prior to his illness which we all know, with sadness, ended fatally. The congregation who might have assumed the attitude of reverence due to that magnificently solemn dirge by remaining till its close, quietly left the church.

Again on Easter Sunday I visited the same church and at the close of the service the organist with a true organist's soul, rendered the Hallelujah chorus, to my surprise the congregation quietly dismissed instead of remaining and assuming a reverent attitude till the closing strains of Handel's masterpiece had ceased to reverberate within the sacred precincts.

I have been in churches, when, at the close of the service and the worshippers and were preparing to leave, the opening solemn strains of the Dead March or the joyful strains of the Hallelujah chorus have (unexpected by the congregation) sounded forth from the organ, they have at once assumed a reverent attitude and remained so till the closing bars had ceased their sound and a few solemn moments of intense silence had passed.

We show honour and respect to his Majesty King George by a respectful demeanour during the rendering of the National Anthem, and rightly so, how much more then should we pay the honour and reverance due his Divine Majesty the "King of Kings and Lord of Lords" by a very reverent attitude of heart, mind and body during the rendition of that magnificent, and inspiring chorus which is none other than the Divine anthem of all nations, kindred and tongues throughout all Christendom

Give honour and reverence where honour and reverence are due. Thanking you Mr. Editor,

Yours in sincerity,
HOPEFUL.

Dear Mr. Editor,—My attention has been called by a numbeg of friends to a letter which appeared in your paper on Thursday last, in which the writer, who signs himself as "Sanitas," makes three unjust and untruthful statements:

1. He states "To-day the people are being asked to buy roses to support a church.....As the Collection is being taken in Red Cross boxes many people contributed in the belief that their donation was for patriotic work."

In writing those words "Sanitas" was making an unmitigated false statement for no Red Cross boxes were used, and the Red Cross itself was very carefully kept out of sight as far as our boxes were concerned.

2. He insinuates—the most detestable form of deceit—that the public did not know the object of the collections. On Thursday last I wrote The Examiner a letter, which was published in the most prominent part of the paper, stating that "the proceeds will be given in aid of the South End Mission, which has suffered so much through its members going to the front," (nearly all the male members of the congregation.)

3. He further states that the Police Commissioners should know the objects of the collection, and the manner in which the funds are to be used."

As far as I am concerned "Sanitas" once more is completely out of court, for I did make enquiries at the city offices with reference to the selling of Red Roses, and was told that there was no law or regulation prohibiting my friends from selling them on the streets of the city, and the object for which they were to be sold was clearly stated at the city office.

Yours truly,
J. PRICE.

DAHLIAS:

How to Grow Them Successfully

For many years the dahlia has been one of our most popular flowers, but there has been much complaint of failure in obtaining a full crop of blossoms before early fall frosts injure the plants. The fact is, we have, until lately, only half understood the requirements of the plant, and we have given it a treatment that was not calculated to insure the best results.

We have thought it necessary to start the roots into growth in the house in early spring, and the result almost invariably has been a weak growth which stunted the plants when they were transferred to the ground, as they lacked the stamina they needed in adjusting themselves to the change from indoor to outdoor conditions. The consequence was that they were so backward in development that frosts generally injured them before they had perfected the first crop of flowers.

We have learned it is not necessary to start this plant growth before putting the roots into the ground. If we wait until the weather is settled and the ground warm, and plant our dahlias then in a rich soil they start into immediate growth, and go steadily ahead, and give us a generous number of fine blossoms long before the plants started in the old way ever did.

I have set out tubers in the latter part of May, and had flowers from them in late July, and from that time on to the coming of frost, thus making it possible to secure at least two months of bloom.

It is necessary that the ground in which we plant the dahlia should be rich, for a strong, steady growth is needed in order to obtain the best results. In a soil of only moderate richness growth will be slow, and development will come too late in the season to be satisfactory.

Give it a soil well supplied with plant food and see that it has so much water that its roots are always moist. Support it well, to prevent it from being broken down by sudden winds and heavy storms, and you will find it one of the most satisfactory of all garden plants.

There are several distinct classes of this flower. The "show" dahlia is a large, double flower, rich in colour and effective in garden decorations. The "decorative" type has semi-double flowers, borne on long stalks, and is, I believe, the most satisfactory variety for general use.

The "singles" have but one row of broad petals and are showy. The "cactus" type has petals twisted and curled in such fantastic manner that they give one the impression of flowers gone crazy. The "pompones" are miniature "show" dahlias, so dwarf in habit that they are used as bedders. The same rich wide range of colour runs through all the members of the family, from purest white to darkest scarlet, crimson, purple and yellow, with intermediate shades of pink, cherry, delicate rose, and dainty cream—surely the most exacting taste can be suited so far as colour is concerned.

There are many varieties in which these colours are combined in such a way as to make the flowers wonderfully striking, the petals of dark colours being tipped with white, or vice versa, and others striped and blotched with strongly contrasting colours. The "decorative" sorts and the "singles" are excellent for cutting.

Acquitted of Incest Charge

Sandford Lindsay Freed on One Count by Jury This Morning—Murder Case Proceeding This Afternoon

Sandford Lindsay was acquitted of the charge of incest by the jury empanelled before Chief Justice Sir Glenholme Falconbridge in the Supreme Court this morning. The offence was alleged to have been committed in July, 1914, near their home in Dummer township. At the preliminary hearing some reference was made to the case, the character of which prohibits any detailed publication. Mr. Daniel O'Connell and Mr. G. N. Gordon are representing the prisoner, and Mr. T. J. Rigny, of Kingston, and Mr. C. W. Hatton are conducting the prosecution.

The jury was composed of the following: Messrs. Bruce Gillespie, Geo. Agnew, Leonard Edwards, W. Evans White, Joseph Crowe, Kenneth Throop, Wm. Thackeray, of the city, and Michael Whibbs and Wm. Hunter, of Douro; W. H. Dyrell, of Otonabee; Clayton Telford, of Ennismore, and Wm. Fitzgerald, of Otonabee.

This afternoon the hearing of a charge of murdering an unborn infant was opened with Lindsay the defendant.

Horseshoes Talked Over Higher Prices

Mr. M. S. Donoghue, of Peterborough, was elected secretary of the Master Horseshoers' Association of Ontario at the annual convention in Ottawa, concluded yesterday. He with Mr. Geo. Bathgate, also of this city, were speakers at the convention banquet in the Windsor Hotel. Many questions relating to the trade were discussed at the various sessions. Prices of everything had increased since 1910; shoes are being raised 50 cents per hundred, and it was felt that a 25 per cent. advances in prices should be made. The horseshoer who had perhaps the hardest work of any man in the community, was getting the old prices for his work in spite of the high cost of living, labour and material. This was a matter which could be settled in the local associations. The next convention will be held in Toronto.

A Prophetic Conference To Be Held Here

The session of St. Paul's church, after giving the matter careful consideration, has decided to arrange for the holding of a Prophetic and Bible Conference in Peterboro during the last four days of May. A number of noted speakers have arranged to take part and others have yet to be heard from.

There is a widespread feeling that the times in which we live are times when people should be studying the Scriptures to see what light they give on present day conditions. Many of the great Bible prophecies, fulfilled and unfulfilled, will be discussed during the conference. Sessions will be held afternoon and evening. Further details about the speakers and their subjects will be published later.

New York Stock Market

Summary of To-day's Activities on the New York Stock Exchange

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, April 26.—The Stock Market opened irregular to-day, during the first few minutes, and there was a downward trend. U. S Steel was off 1-4 of a point, reflecting disappointment in the dividend action despite the record earnings announced during the first half hour. Steel dropped another 1-4 of a point, to 82 7-8. Munition shares opened higher but were soon sold off.

WEDDING BELLS

STEPHENSON—COUGHLAN.

A quiet wedding took place at Peterborough on Tuesday, April 25th, the contracting parties being Herbert A. Stephenson of Norwood, Ont., and Katharine T. Coughlan of Toledo, Ohio, formerly of Hastings, Ont. The ceremony was performed by Reverend Father Phelan, Rector of St. Peter's Cathedral, Peterborough.

PERKS — WISE.

A quiet but pretty wedding took place at St. George's church, South Peterborough on Monday, by the Rev. J. Price, when Miss Elsie E. Wise, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edwine Wise, 65 Crescent street, became the bride of Mr. Harold Perks, late of Worcestershire, England. The bride was assisted by her cousin, Miss Amy Wise, and the groom was supported by Private W. Woodrow of the 93rd Battalion. Mr. and Mrs. Perks will reside on Braidwood avenue.

SHIELD--GRAHAM.

The marriage took place on Tuesday afternoon, April 18th, at 2 p.m., at Cedarhurst Farm, Mount Pleasant, of Annie Kathryn, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Graham, to T. Garnet Shield, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Shield, Peterboro. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. R. Butler, of Cavan, in the presence only of the immediate friends of the bride and groom. The wedding march was played by Mrs. C. H. Shield, sister of the bride.

The bride who was given away by her father, looked lovely in a gown of white mousseline silk trimmed with lace and pearls and wore a veil which was arranged flat over the head with a Juliet cap of orange blossoms. Her flowers were a sheaf of white carnations. Little Annie Marshall Graham, niece of the bride, was the maid of honour and looked very sweet in a gown of pale blue silk trimmed with lace and carrying a basket of white and pink carnations.

The groom's gift to the bride was a gold necklace set with pearls, and to the maid of honor a gold pendant, also set with pearls. While the register was being signed "A Perfect Day" was pleasingly rendered by T. B. Shield, the cousin of the groom. A dainty luncheon was served in the dining room. The bride's table was pretty with pink and white tulips.

22,000 at Baltimore's Farewell to Sunday

BALTIMORE, April 26.—Billy Sunday ended his eight weeks' campaign here amid the cheers and tears of 23,000 persons in the Tabernacle and half as many more outside who could not get into the big tent.

It seems certain the amount Sunday will receive here will far exceed that given in any other city, even including Philadelphia. The total number of "trail hitters" on the eight weeks was 98,260. The total attendance on the forty-nine days of actual service was 1,500,000.

ST. GEORGE'S DAY.

Service will be held on Thursday at St. John's Church at 8 p.m., to commemorate the Patron Saint of England. The Colonel and officers of the 93rd Battalion, and the Mayor and city officials will attend in state. The sermon will be preached by the Rev. Canon Cornish; the first lesson will be read by Captain Rollins, and the second lesson by His Honour Judge Huycke. A new feature in the celebration of St. George's Day will be the rendering of the Hallelujah Chorus (Handel) by the band of the 33rd Battalion. Thus it will be seen that this celebration of our Patron Saint's Day may be considered as national, Church and Army, to say nothing of Law and State, being represented.

The members of the following societies are cordially and earnestly invited to attend this great national service: "The Sons of England," the "St. George's Society" and the "Daughters of the Empire."

The Mayor, Aldermen and other city officials will meet at the City Buildings at 7.30 p.m. and march in a procession to the church. The Colonel and officers of the 93rd Battalion will march direct from the armouries to the church.

Three Zeppelins Threw 100 Bombs

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 26.—Three Zeppelins threw down 100 bombs off the Thames Estuary in last night's raid, but there were no casualties and no damage, the War Office announced to-day.

The German Admiralty in an official statement issued this afternoon, announced that the Zeppelins bombarded London, Colchested, Blackwater and Ramesgate.

Big Tanker Puts Up a Fight

Examiner Special:

BERLIN, April 26, Via Wireless—The British steamer Goldmouth, after being warned by a German submarine to stop immediately, opened fire on the "U" boat and a half-hour engagement occurred before the vessel was sunk.

British Warships Have Returned

Special to the Examiner:

LONDON, April 26.—British warships which engaged the German squadron that attacked Lowestoft yesterday morning, have returned to their base, bringing about a score of wounded. The British ships were only slightly damaged. One aviator was lost.

Situation Is Under Control

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 26.—Baron Wimborn, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, has wired from Dublin that "situation satisfactory. St. Stephens Green has been reoccupied by Government troops, and provincial news reassuring."

NEW YORK, April 26.—The Evening Sun reported this afternoon that it has received news from a reliable source that 10,000 Irish are taking part in the revolt in Dublin, and with adjoining counties, and that John McNeal, leader of the Irish volunteers and editor of the official organ has been shot (accipe hoc cum grano salis).

Two Hundred Forty Dwellings Damaged

Special to the Examiner:

LONDON, April 26.—Four persons wer killed and twelve wounded by shells fired from German cruisers in the raid on Lowestoft and Yarmouth on the English East Soast early yesterday, it was officially announced this afternoon. At Lowestoft 240 dwellings were damaged. At Yarmouth only two buildings were damaged.

WASHINGTON, April 26.—Belligerents should presume an armed merchantman is peaceful, unless there is "conclusive evidence" to the contrary. This is the position of the United States, officially declared to-day by the State Department. Merely because an enemy merchant vessel is armed does not constitute sufficient reason for belligerents to declare it a warship and to attack it regardless of the rights of persons aboard.

The notes declare an enemy warship "May properly exercise force to compell the surrender, if an armed merchantman fires first."

The right to sink merchantmen "in any circumstances is doubtful," the memorandum declares.

LINDSAY AND WIFE ARE FREE AGAIN

Prosecution Fell to Pieces This Afternoon —They Were Liberated

In the hearing of the Charge of murder against Sandford Lindsay, this afternoon, the prosecution collapsed completely, and verdicts of not guily were declared without the Jury leaving their seats. This applied to all the charges against both Lindsay and his wife, who were thereupon discharged. Chief Justice Falconbridge made no comments except to Lindsay, when he said. "You are the only man who knows what you did."

Crown Prosecutor Rigny followed up the murder charge against Lindsay. He could not cross-examine his own witnesses, and the defence naturally did not attempt delving operations. Mr. Rigny simply admitted that there was not enough direct evidence in the testimony produced to ask for a verdict. Mrs. Lindsay was brought in by Mrs. McElhaney, formally arraigned and discharged. When it was all over and she stepped from the box it was into a full-armed embrace and kiss from her husband.

Hon. Mr. Stratton's Banking Associates Pass Resolution

The following communication has been received by Mrs. Stratton:

TORONTO, April 20th, 1916.—At a meeting of the undersigned, formerly directors of the Traders Bank of Canada, the following resolution was passed, and the Supervisor, Mr. Stuart Strathy, was requested to convey same to Mrs. J. R. Stratton:

The Directors, who were closely associated for many years with the late Hon. J. R. Stratton on the Board of the Traders Bank of Canada, desire to express their sincere regret on learning of his decease. Our intercourse with him was always of the most pleasant character. His long and varied business experience proved of the greatest benefit to the Bank, and under all conditions, his relations to the Bank were in the highest degree marked by the strictest integrity and honour. He was generous and liberal in his views of business but he was also extremely careful in guarding the interests of the shareholders, and conservative in his idea of management. No institution ever had a Director more industrious or loyal than he was, or more willing to give his time and talents to the Traders, in which he took a special interest.

We beg to offer to Mrs. Stratton our sincere sympathy in this hour of loss and sorrow, and to assure her that we personally regret the passing of one who was always genial and loyal to his colleagues as well as to the institution itself.

Sgt. Peter Victor Interviewed By a Toronto Newspaperman— Is in Toronto To-day Getting A Special Shoe Made

TORONTO, April 26.—"Jack Grant of the 80th Rifles, went out with me to repair some barbed wire, and when Grant had lugged me back to my trenches with a stretcher bearer there to receive me, I had a sniper's bullet in the thigh," said Sergt. P. Victor of Peterborough, at the Prince George, Toronto, to-day. "It was in the daylight but misty, and I hoped that we might be missed. Well that Hun that potted me did not miss. Had been in the trenches only a month. The place wasn't far from Neuve Chapelle." The sergeant limps, but he is having a special shoe made. "When I frisk along the recruiters will spot me and want me to enlist all over again," laughed the Peterborough humourist.

French Aeroplanes Fight A German Squadron Over City of Monastir

One German Was Shot Down And Two Others Were Forced to Descend---Many Americans are Leaving Germany

WASHINGTON, April 27.—The State Department says the life of British Ambassador Spring-Rice is threatened if Sir Roger Casement is treated other than as a prisoner of war.

SALONIKA, April 27.—French aeroplanes yesterday fought a battle with a German squadron over Monastir. One German was shot down, two others were forced to descend.

AMSTERDAM, April 27.—Many Americans are leaving Germany. Foreigners have been notified that none can leave for twenty days.

NEW YORK, April 27.—Word was received that the second German raider, flying the Dutch flag, blew up while trying to land arms on the Irish coast.

WASHINGTON, April 27.—Dutch steamer Berkelstroom was sunk by gun fire from two German submarines in the North Sea. British seaplane attacked submarines.

New Army of Tsar Wildy Cheered On Its Arrival in France

MARSEILLES, April 27.—Marseilles was again the centre of tremendous enthusiasm Tuesday as another contingent of Russian troops arrived unexpectedly.

The word that more Russians were coming soon spread and great crowds gathered at the quay to witness their disembarkation.

It was a stirring scene as the Russians lined the decks of the transports, returning the cheers from the crowds massed along the shore, while the flotilla of warships and merchantmen in the harbour saluted with flags and salvos of booming cannon.

A regiment of French hussars was drawn up along the quay as a guard of honour, the French bands playing the Russian national hymn, to which the Russian bands responded with the Marseillaise.

The Governor of Marseilles and the commander of the Marseilles military district headed a distinguished gathering of French officers who extended a hearty greeting to the newly arrived Russians.

After an exchange between the French and Russian officers the disembarkation of the troops began amid continuous hurrahs by the crowds, which later were swelled by a large number of workmen from the surrounding factories and docks.

The Russians formed platoons, and with flags flying marched through the principal streets. Everywhere along the route they received an ovation. They were greeted by French trumpeters of the Sixth Hussars, and welcomed when they came out of the boats by one hundred and fifty wounded French soldiers who had been transported in ambulances and the tramcars to the quay.

Having been paid this tribute by men who had actually shed blood in the common cause, the Russians showed great devotion to the French wounded, and sent up cheers as the wounded departed.

The new troops are composed of young men of excellent appearance and sturdy bearing, similar to those in the previous detachments.

RELICS OF SECOND DYNASTY FOUND IN EGYPTIAN TOMBS

PHILADELPHIA, April 26.—Valuable archaeological specimens, ranging from the second dynasty to the Byzantine empire, 500 B.C. to 500 A.D., have been unearthed at Denderah. This report was received by the University of Pennsylvania Museum to-day from Dr. Clarence S. Fisher, director of the university's Egyptian expedition.

Perhaps one of the most remarkable specimens, Dr. Fisher states, is a necklace with the cartouche of Seosotris. These are said to be the first inscribed beads ever found in Egypt.

The necklace was found on the mummy of a mature woman It is believed to have been worn by a daughter of Seosotris, a great king identified with a Pharoah of the Twelfth Dynasty about 3500 B.C.

Other discoveries reported by Dr. Fisher include a lapsus lasuli frog with golden eyes, numerous bronze pieces, 500 pieces of pottery and some steel from the tombs of noted men in many ages.

In the earliest graves, about 7,000 years old, children were found buried beside a cow or a calf, and in one instance an infant was found in a large jar, together with a dog.

In one tomb, at least 4,000 years old, was found a bunch of dates, dried up, but easily recognizable, Dr. Fisher wrote.

ARMED GUARDS AT TRIAL

NEW YORK, April 27. — Armed guards patrolled the corridors of the Federal Court House to-day when Lieut. Robert Fay, Walter Scholz and Paul Daeche were placed on trial charged with conspiring to blow up at sea ships carrying war supplies to the Allies. Bombs, shell casings and quantities of high explosives were among the exhibits. According to the indictments the men plotted to attch bombs to the rudders of merchant ships carrying war cargoes so that vessels would be rendered helpless at sea.

MADE IN CANADA

ROYAL YEAST

GAVE LIFE TO SAVE A WARSHIP

Drowned While Attempting to Warn Torpedo Boat Crew of the Approaching Enemy.

Since the beginning of the war the Russian Aland Islands have been cut off almost entirely from communication with the outside world, and one of the Islanders who has reached Stockholm after an adventurous voyage in a small boat, gives an interesting account of war experiences.

German torpedo boats and submarines often enter the numerous straits and channels between the islands, he said. Early in the war a German torpedo boat ran on a rock and sank. A German warship which did not come within sight, landed men from a boat on an uninhabited island near Eckero, the most western of the larger islands.

The Alanders, believing the strangers were shipwrecked mariners, went in boats to relieve them. The Germans offered a considerable sum if a skilled Aland pilot was placed at their disposition. The islanders refused, and the Germans, fearing their presence would be reported, made off

The Alander was a witness of the German warships' attack on the fortified island of Uto, which lies halfway between the Aland Islands proper and the Finnish mainland. He asserts that during the attack the Germans lost a large transport, which struk a mine. Whether the ship contained troops or only stores he does not know.

Saw Cruiser Approach.

The heroine of Aland was a certain Signe Olisen, a girl from the mainland, who was stopping with relatives at Marieuham when the war began. She remained on the island as a member of the nurses' corps, held in readiness in case of a battle.

While walking alone on the cliffs she was the first person to see approaching a cruiser which she guessed to be a German. A Russian torpedo boat was lying in a creek in an island a mile away in a position from which the enemy could not be seen. A heavy sea was running, and navigation was doubly dangerous owing to the numerous rocks. Mlle. Olisen, hoping to save the torpedo boat, took a boat and rowed toward the island. Hardly had she got round the cape which hid the torpedo boat from sight when her boat ran on a rock and a heavy wave capsized it. A Russian boat at once set out, but arrived too late. The girl was dead.

MORE JAMAICANS FOR WAR.

Hardships of Last Contingent Fail to Halt Enlistments.

NEW YORK, April 26.—According to Percy Sandford, who has just returned to the Hotel Wolcott from two months in Jamaica, that island has come in for its share of popularity this season. He says the hotels in Kingston have been filled and the merchants have had all the business they could handle.

"Jamaica is getting ready to send a third contingent to the war," said Mr. Sandford, "although an unfavourable impression was made by what happened to the last. The men, all unused to cold weather, were sent to England via Halifax, and the ship got in a blizzard. Some of them were incapacitated by having a hand or foot, or both frozen, necessitating amputation.

"There was great alarm in Jamaica recently when it was reported on dit that there was a German raider off the coast. The Home Guard started to get ready to defend the island, but the rumour turned out to be unfounded."

Zeppelins Appeared Over East Kent Coast But Had To Turn Back

Mist Hampered Operations in Attempted Raid Last Night---British Carried Out Raids South of Labassee Canal

LONDON, April 27.—Zeppelins appeared over the East Kent Coast last night, but mist hampered operations and they turned back.

OTTAWA, April 27.—A five thousand dollar accidental fire occurred in the military stores building.

LONDON, April 27.—Total casualties to date in Ireland as a result of rioting are 42 killed and 46 wounded. The situation is now well in hand by the authorities.

LONDON, April 27.—British carried out raids south of Lallaasee Canal. Hand to hand fighting occurred. Several German prisoners were taken.

PARIS, April 27.—Germans are preparing for a new drive west of the Meuse.

MOST GRUESOME BATTLE RAGES ON THE CARSO FRONT

LONDON, April 27.—The Morning Post's correspondent on the Italian front writes:

The hills of Carso might well be called hills of death. In no theatre of the war has there been seen such a Macabre and tragic battle front as the Carso. The main characteristic of this army, whose achievement is sometimes wrongly considered slow or too careful, is that it has never given up an inch of ground conquered on a front of more than 600 kilometres.

Each shell as it bursts scatters the rocks in a thousand splinters, deadly as bullets. This is one reason why the Italian losses are so heavy. Many corps have been living for months under these terrible conditions. It made me shudder to see many soldiers, exhausted by fatigue, asleep leaning against a trench parapet, with mangled remains unspeakably horrible sticking out in many places.

The Carso is the centre of a furious struggle between the two armies, each endeavouring to wear the other down. The Austrians have concentrated about a million men in front of the sector of Gorizia and on the Carso. The next offensive will be one of the greatest battles of the war. The territorial advantages gained in such a battle will seem small at least to those not knowing the ground, nevertheless the day of final struggle will determine victory or defeat. The Italians are waiting impatiently, sure of victory.

BIG GERMAN GUNS POUND VERDUN HOMES TO DUST

Streets Utterly Deserted of Humanity Except Occasional Soldiers—Silence of The Town Blasted by High Explosive Shells

(By Stanley Washburn)

VERDUN, France, April 25.—The defense of Verdun is the story of the character and morale of an heroic army which, though taken in the least expected quarter, could not be blasted out of its stubborn determination to resist, even though the Germans for weeks employed the products of their industries and their human resources almost without interruption since the first attack

With all this expenditure, the Germans have been able only to bend the defense at a cost at least double what the capture of Verdun would have been worth to them from a strategic point of view.

Through the courtesy of the French Government every facility was placed at my disposal to enable me to observe the situation to-day in Verdun. The city to-night impressed me as one of the most impressing places I have yet encountered in the war zone.

GERMANS DESTROYING CITY

The Germans, having failed to realise their aim of breaking the French defense outside of the town, have turned their attention to the complete destruction of the city itself.

They have been pouring shells into Verdun at the rate of from 600 to 800 daily, taking one-quarter of the town after another. They have already fired 30,000 shells within forty days

The streets were utterly deserted by human beings, except for an occasional soldier hurrying with an urgent message, the scene being relieved only by lonely dogs skulking through the alleys. Every window was barred.

The silence was broken by the terrible detonations of the high explosive shells. These arrived about once every two minutes with the roar of express trains. Their landing was announced by a detonation like the explosion of a land mine, with clouds of dust and debris leaping into the air like the eruption of a volcano.

BUILDINGS TORN TO DEBRIS

The calibres of these ambassadors of Teutonic "frightfulness" apparently range from 15 to 26 centimeters. I observed four of the latter explode and their arrival was extremely harrowing. Five and six story buildings simply melt into piles of debris, clouds of dust rising to a height of hundreds of feet.

Accompanied by the governor of the fortress I motored to an observation point in one of the adjacent forts, where an excellent view of the entire terrain was obtainable. Telescopes made it possible to see the Germans behind their lines. Save for the shelling everywhere, especially of the town itself, the day was relatively quiet.

It seems difficult to get an accurate estimate of the German losses, but from all the sources questioned and from observation of the terrain here compared with analogous territory on the Eastern front, where I know the losses, approximately, the Germans must certainly have lost from 175,000 to 200,000 men.

FRENCH FIRE ACCURATE

When one considers the enormous numbers engaged and the accuracy of the French 75s it is possible even more casualties may have resulted.

The most extraordinary feature of the entire defense has been the capacity of the French to adapt themselves to the situation in the matter of transport. I am informed that the Germans had twelve lines or rail feeding this front. The French met the rail shortage by motor transport, which, after the first few days, enabled them to fight with a relatively small handicap.

From personal observation during a single day it seems improbable that the Germans will be able to secure any decisive advantage here without losses which would be increasingly incommensurate with their strategic gains.

GERMAN PRISONERS DEPRESSED.

From the prisoners I was able to talk to I gathered that news of the Verdun failure is beginning to percolate along the German front, resulting in great depression in the German lines.

Before going to Verdun I spent two days in the Argonne district, visiting two separate corps, inspecting the first line trenches and observation points. Accompanied by the General Commanding I examined the entire organization of corps, including the transport, commissariat, intelligence, and all other departments and I have never seen a more efficient organization, not excepting the best of the Japanese army.

The morale of the French soldiers is extraordinary and it is an inspiration to be with them.

Tea, Coffee and Children

It would be difficult for any parent in the Dominion to find a physician of modern education who would contend that tea and coffee are not harmful, especially to growing children.

The fact remains, however, that many parents give these beverages to their little folks and allow their use in older children at a time when physical and mental development is the most rapid.

The drug, caffeine, in tea and coffee retards growth and interferes with school progress. Disturbances of eyesight, headaches, nervousness, irritability, indigestion and other ills appear in many, seemingly without cause, and the damage often occurs at the most impressionable period of life.

No parent should permit the use of tea or coffee in the growing young; for the men and women of tomorrow will be what the parent of today makes the children by wise upbringing.

Children as well as adults need an invigorating, warm drink, and in a growing number of Canadian homes it has been found that the most wholesome table beverage is

INSTANT POSTUM

This pure food-drink, made of prime wheat and a bit of wholesome molasses is readily prepared at the table, a cup at a time.

A level teaspoonful of Instant Postum in a cup of hot water, with cream and sugar added make an attractive, healthful drink, and its pleasant flavour wins children and usually the parents.

MOTHER! YOUR CHILD IS CROSS, FEVERISH, FROM CONSTIPATION

If Tongue is Coated, Breath Bad, Stomach Sour, Clean Liver and Bowels

Give "California Syrup of Figs" at once—a teaspoonful to-day often saves a sick child to-morrow.

If your little one is out-of-sorts, half-sick, isn't resting, eating and acting naturally—look, Mother! see if tongue is coated. This is a sure sign that its little stomach, liver and bowels are clogged with waste. When cross, irritable, feverish, stomach sour, breath bad or has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, sore throat, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the constipated poison, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

Mothers can rest easy after giving this harmless "fruit laxative," because it never fails to cleanse the little one's liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach and they dearly love its pleasant taste. Full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups printed on each bottle.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs"; then see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company."

An Easy Way to Increase Weight

Good Advice For Thin Folks

The trouble with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on dragging their stomach or stuffing it with greasy foods, rubbing on useless "flesh creams," or following some foolish physical culture stunt, while the real cause of thinness goes untouched. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract assimilates the food you eat.

There is a preparation known to reliable druggists almost everywhere which scientifically embodies the missing elements needed by the digestive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This modern treatment is called Sargol and has been termed the greatest of flesh builders. Sargol aids through regenerative, re-constructive powers to coax the stomach and intestines to literally soak up the fattening elements of your food and pass them into the blood where they are carried to the starved tissues, building cells and tissues of pure flesh. You can readily picture what result this amazing transformation should produce as with increased weight the cheeks fill out, hollows about the neck, shoulders and bust disappear and from 10 to 20 pounds of solid, healthy flesh is added to the body. Sargol is absolutely harmless, inexpensive, efficient. All leading druggists of this vicinity have it and will refund your money if you are not satisfied as per the guarantee found in every package.

If you find a druggist who is unable to supply you send $1.00 money order or registered letter to the National Laboratories, 76 St. Antoine St., Montreal, and a complete ten days' treatment will be sent you postpaid, in plain wrapper.

NOTE—Sargol is recommended only as a flesh builder and while excellent results in cases of nervous indigestion, etc., have been reported, care should be taken about using it unless a gain of weight is desired.

Tourist to guide)—"That's a very imposing statue, guide." Guide—"Indeed, you are right, sir; most people are imposed on by it. They think it's marble, but it's only painted wood."

No farmer can plough a field by turning it over in his mind.

Gin Pills FOR THE KIDNEYS

Why Demanded

"Gin Pills did for my husband and me what no other remedy could. I have advised two other parties to use them, one of them being my mother who has been a great sufferer for upwards of 20 years, and one box cured her, so as to enable her to sleep on her left side, something she could not do for many a year. The doctors told her they could not cure her, but could relieve her by an operation for a floating kidney, but on account of her age they did not think it desirable for her to go. Upon my advice she tried Gin Pills which cured her and for which she is ever ready to speak in terms of praise."

A recent number of a Bavarian trade organ, Handel und Industrie, states that the Krupp works have just turned out a steel safe that will put all burglars to shame. It is reported that this famous Essen firm has succeeded in making a steel of such resistibility that it withstands the methods of attack and the tools at present known to burglars. At a melting test, steel plates with a surface of 11.8 by 11.8 inches and a thickness of 1.57 inches were used, which in the separate testings, were subjected for a different length of time to an oxyacetylene flame. At one of these tests a hole of 1.968 in. diameter and 1.377 in. depth was burned into the plate but for this not less than 476 gallons of acetylene and 534 gallons of oxygen were used, and the time consumed was one and one-quarter hours. In order to produce a hole large enough to admit the hand, 2,642 gallons of oxygen and 2,378 gallons of acetylene would be needed, while the performance of this work would require six hours.

The United States is by far the greatest paper-producing country in the world. It is estimated that the present annual output of the American paper mills is worth $300,000,000. The United States is, however, a comparatively small exporter of paper, the manufacturers in the past having had about all they could do to supply the home demand. Paper exports have been increasing to England and Argentina.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Matrimonial Agent

[Copyright, ..., by American Press Association.]

Driving along a country road, I came upon a small house bearing a sign, "Matrimonial Agency." Curiosity led me to stop and investigate. Instead of being received by a woman, as I expected, a man answered my summons. He led me into a poorly furnished sitting room and waited for me to declare the object of my coming.

He was an uncouth looking man, with red hair and a freckled skin, but there was nothing unpleasant about his expression unless it was his eye. It was not exactly malevolent; it rather indicated a soul within harassed by some adversity.

"Well," I said when we were seated, "I saw your sign, and as I am looking for a wife I thought I would come in and see what you have to offer. But first tell me how you, a man, happen to be running a matrimonial agency, a business that seems to pertain rather to woman?"

"I'm here to make stories for other people, not to tell mine."

"What do you mean by making stories?"

"Stories according to the novel writers all begin with the meetin' of a man and a woman. Usually they marry at the end of the yarn, and the novelist slinks out of the business."

"Stinks out of the business?"

"But why do you use the word 'slink' in speaking of the novelist?"

"Why doesn't he stand up square and say: 'I've told you about this couple, what kind of a time they've had gittin' each other, all the fool pranks they've played a-doin' of it to the day they was married'? But y' mought as well understand that I don't mean to say they're goin' to keep it up. They may git on together, but the chances are—for the first two or three years anyway—they won't. They may fight right along, hangin' on for the sake of their children, or they may find their way into the divorce courts. Anyway, they got to git over a lot of troubles. Ef the novelist would be fair about it and tell his readers just what to expect if the story run on, he wouldn't sell so many of his novels, but he'd have a clean conscience. He don't do no sich thing. He don't even take 'em through the honeymoon. There's lots of couples goin' off together all alone by theirselves, afeared somebody 'll butt in, and before they've got through the honeymoon wish somebody would butt in. Honeymoon! Why do they call it honeymoon? Because it changes. When it begins the moon's full and begins to wane right off. It isn't the full moon they mean, 'cause in two weeks the moon's new ag'in and begins to wane. That's the time a couple begins to git tired of each other's undivided company—that is, if they don't begin before."

"Oh, you're too sweeping in your statements," I interrupted. "There are lots of happy marriages, lots where the honeymoon never ends. But I'm interested. Tell me your own story. I don't want a wife. I only came in here from curiosity. Of course I've no right to take up your time without profit to you. You must make your fee all the same."

"Well, stranger, ef y' put it that a-way I don't mind tellin' you. I went through the novel experience part, and I confess it was very slick. The gal and I got the sulks at each other every two or three days, sometimes several times a day. But the makin' up was wo'th it all. Then we said goodby to the story business and sailed off into the honeymoon stage. Somehow when we got miffed at each other the makin' up wasn't so sorghum-like. Before we got home we had a real fight that we didn't make up at all.

"I won't go over what follered. Children came to us and, seein' their mother fightin' me all the time, they tuk a hand and tuk to pitchin' stools at me. I stood it for a matter of ten years, when one day when they driv' me outen the house with griddirons and rollin' pins I didn't go back no more.

"They say ef a man wants to get on he oughter be in a business he knows somepin about. What I don't know about matrimony ain't wo'th knowin'. But I don't seem to get on very well at it. I reckon I'm too hopper. Ef I wa'n't no honester than the novelists I could make it go well enough, but I ain't no sich low down cuss."

"There are cases," I remarked, "where one knows too much about his business or, stated differently, he attaches too much importance to his own experience."

"That may be it, stranger. Anyway, you seem to be different from the rest who come here. You know it all yourself. You don't rely on me for anything except the introduction. That's what I want. You've paid the fee. You mought as well get the worth of your money. Let me introduce you to a young woman I've got on my list—good lookin', healthy, blue eyes. They say them kind is tricky, but you're not afraid. She wants a husband, and she wants one bad. What dy'e say?"

This attempt to force me to back my opinions was too much for me. I declined.

But an interest had been excited in this unfortunate man, and I determined to try to unite him to his family. In time I discovered the main causes of the trouble, and by correcting them succeeded in bringing about happiness where before there had been only misery.

DONALD CHAMBERLIN.

Carlyle's Temper.

Carlyle bad tempered? Not at all, if we are to place any belief in the testimony of the maid behind the broom. One of Carlyle's servants, Jessie, who on marrying became Mrs. Broadfoot, has left a very favorable impression of her old master, said The London Standard.

"I could have lived with him all my days," she says, "and it always makes me angry when I read, as I sometimes do, that he was bad tempered. He was the very reverse, in my opinion. I never would have left him when I did if I had not been going to get married, and I took great pride in attending on him and studying all his wants and wishes.

"It was one of my duties to rush out and move on all street organs and things of that kind. Many a time in the morning before he arose I used to fill his pipe, the short clay he used in his bedroom, for him and strike the match to light it. I always cut up his tobacco (he bought it in flat cakes), and kept his tin box regularly supplied. He was always so grateful for these little services."

So much for popular belief and the dictum of the democratic servant biographer.

A Lucky Find.

The roof of an old house in Augher, Co. Tyrone, collapsed the other day, and when the owner was clearing off the debris he was lucky enough to find a roll of bank notes, which had evidently been hidden in the thatch of the dwelling. A number of gold coins were found concealed in the same house on a previous occasion.

Golf.

Brown—I wish I belonged to a golf club.

Jones—You don't need to.

"How so?"

"Just walk five miles or so, and every twenty or thirty yards hit the pavement a hard whack with your stick and swear."—Exchange

Havelock News

HAVELOCK, April 25.—Pte. Thos. Falkner of the Army Service Corps, Kingston, spent a few days at his home prior to going overseas.

Miss Minnie Walton left last week for Peterboro, where she will reside in future with her mother and her brother, who have been living there the past few months.

Mrs. Hester Matheson left last week for Toronto where she was to be joined by her daughter, Mrs. (Major) McLean, and from which city the two were to go to England via New York, to be with Major McLean until he is ordered to the front.

Ptes. Harold Matheson and Harry Balfour have been provisionally promoted to Lance Corporals and are now in Peterboro attending a special course of instruction.

Letters have been received from Sappers W. J. and Charles Rose announcing their safe arrival in England and they are at present in the beautiful little village of Statfold.

Ptes. Chase and Anderson of town are confined to the hospital in Peterboro.

Mr. Ray Williams of Toronto was home last week attending the bedside of his brother, Master Enal Williams.

The annual services of the local Oddfellows will be held this year at the morning service in the Methodist church, on the 30th inst., when they will be accompanied by the I.O.O.F. band.

The L.O.L. Lodge will hold an At Home in the town hall on Easter Monday night. April 24th.

Mr. Jack Moore, the C.P.R. operator here, has purchased an Excelsior motor cycle.

Messrs. Edw. Fennell and F. J. Squire of town, have been appointed Justices of the Peace recently.

Captain F. E. Birdsall of the Third Battalion, First Contingent, who was wounded in action, and has been under treatment at the Canadian Hospital in England, arrived home on Saturday, April 15th, accompanied by his mother, who went over to England some months ago to visit him.

Mr. Ray Williams of London is the guest of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Williams.

Mr. Ross Wilde of Shelburne is the guest of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wilde.

A sale of work and tea will be held at the rectory on Thursday of this week April 27th, under the auspices of the Girls' Guild.

The Departure of The Platoon From Apsley

Northerners Said Farewell on Thursday Last—Are Now in Lakefield

Apsley, April 24.—Monday, April 17th, was the semi-monthly pay day of the soldiers who have been in training here since last November and will be the last, as Captain Bygate, paymaster, notified the company. They were due to start for Lakefield on Thursday, the 20th. The boys were dismissed at noon and allowed to go to their homes for a farewell visit with orders to assemble at 7.30 on Thursday morning. On Wednesday night they were all again in the village. The ladies of the Patriotic Society had prepared parcels of home made candies and maple sugar, etc., and gave them to each of the boys that evening. On the morning of the 20th it was raining and the prospect of marching the 20 miles to Burleigh Falls that day seemed to be doubtful; however it cleared off by 8.30, and the two waggons with the outfits were being loaded. Friends and relatives from a distance began coming in from all quarters to say good bye to their boys. At the call of the Lieut., the boys fall in, the roll was called, and after a short drill, the Rev. E. W. Gardiner, who had procured a sufficient number of Testaments (khaki covered) from the Toronto Bible Society, and assisted by Rev. W. G. Carr, presented each soldier with a copy, their name and number written on the fly leaf. That favorite hymn, "God be with you till we meet again," was sung, all joining; afterwards "God Save the King" was sung. The order was then given, "Form fours; right turn; quick march!" and our brave lads swung off over the hill to do their duty in the trenches—to fight—if need be—to die for those who were left at home. They will be certain to give a good account of themselves. They marched out from Apsley at 9.30 a.m., reached Brown's Falls, Burleigh, at 1 p.m., and Mr. Wm. McCauley very generously provided them with lunch and hot tea, and fed the two teams. Burleigh Falls was reached before nightfall, where they were billeted for the night.

We are pleased to state that the patients in the isolation hospital are improving rapidly and will soon be fit to join their comrades at Lakefield. Pte. Hugh Jones is now in a fair way of recovering from his severe attack of pneumonia and hopes to join the company in Peterboro. Ptes. James Downing and John Gifford have just returned from a recruiting trip in and around Clydesdale and report several additional recruits.

WHY HAIR FALLS OUT

Dandruff causes a feverish irritation of the scalp, the hair roots shrink, loosen and then the hair comes out fast. To stop falling hair at once and rid the scalp of every particle of dandruff, get a 25-cent bottle of Danderine at any drug store, pour a little in your hand and rub well into the scalp. After a few applications all dandruff disappears and the hair stops coming out.

Shocking!—They were engaged to be married, and called each other by their first names, Tom and Fanny, and he was telling her how he had always liked the name of Fanny, and how it sounded like music in his ear. "I like the name so much," he added as a sort of clincher to the argument, "that when my sister Clara asked me to name her pet terrier, I at once called her Fanny — after you, dearest!" "But I don't think that was very nice," said the fair girl, edging away from him. "How would you like to have a dog named after you?" "Why, that's nothing," said Tom airily, as he saw he'd made a mistake. "Half the cats in the country are named after me!"

The West Parisiville Birthday club met at Mrs. Sylvia Thomas's last Saturday to remind her of her birthday. It was a complete surprise to her.—Potsdam Herald-Recorder.

Mad Palpitation

OF THE HEART

ALSO WEAK and DIZZY SPELLS.

When the heart begins to palpitate it will beat fast for several seconds, then slow, then start to flutter, and a feeling of utter depression will come over your whole system, accompanied by weak, fainting and dizzy spells, and if you should happen to wake up in the night with your heart palpitating, and that "all gone" sinking sensation, you feel as if you were surely going to die.

When you feel this way, you may be sure that both your heart and nerves are out of order, and what you require is a real good heart and nerve tonic; one that will build up and strengthen both the heart and nerve system.

For this purpose nothing can equal Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

Mrs. J. P. Nicholls, Listowel, Ont., writes: "I was run down, my heart would palpitate so, and I would take weak and dizzy spells. A friend advised me to take your Heart and Nerve Pills, so I started at once, and found that I felt much stronger, and my heart was ever so much better in a short time. I cannot praise your medicine too highly for it has done me a world of good. My husband has also been bothered with heart trouble, ever since childhood, and finds great relief by using your valuable pills."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

SUGAR HAS MADE A FURTHER ADVANCE IN PRICE THIS WEEK

One of the Few Features Locally This Week—Butter and Eggs are Both Easier in Tone—Loose Hay is Firm Around $22—Other Market Items

MARKET FEATURES.

Another advance in the price of sugar which now retails about $8.30 a cwt., is one of the few features of this week's market news. These increases have been so consistently continuous that they have ceased to attract attention and are being accepted as a matter of course. It was stated months ago that sugar was going up and it has gone, so far that an extra ten cents is neither here nor there. Sugar is a luxury anyway, and one of these days many persons will wake up to the fact that they can get along without it while the war scale is in effect. Two or three spoons of sugar in coffee used to be the regular thing, but now the palate must be satisfied with less saccharine strength.

Butter was easy at thirty cents all week and should continue so for the time being, in short, until the cheese factories begin to absorb the new grass milk. Some farmers have been declaring that the pasturage has come in slowly, but it certainly has arrived now, and should soon be represented by a more copious milk flow.

Eggs are plentiful at 19 and 20c. a dozen with a good demand. The storage houses are getting large supplies these days, it is reported.

Hogs are quoted at $11.25 until Friday, locally. Grains, hides etc. are unchanged this week. Loose hay is bringing about $22 on the local market and a keen demand for army purposes in the Montreal district is in earnest that there will be no weakness until the new crop arrives.

TRAINING 10,000,000 MEN.

Colonel Koumenieff, who is now retired and whose activities are confined to army missions for the Russian Government, has just returned to Petrograd from a tour of the empire, including Central Asia, and has told the correspondent of the Paris Figaro that 10,000,000 Russian soldiers, of whom a certain part are already trained, can easily be put in the field between 1916 and 1918, if the war lasts that long.

"They are all men of sound constitution and of military age," he says. "We will leave in peace at home the men of the older classes corresponding to the oldest classes of the German landsturm. Russia has enough men of sound constitution and fit for war to make a breach in the German lines and destroy the Kaiser's strongest armies."

GOING

to the front?—Then don't forget you will need some Zam-Buk! The soldiers at the front are asking for more of it. Pte. J. R. Smith, of the "Princess Pats," writing home, says: "Tell my friends there is one thing I should be glad to get—that's Zam-Buk." Also Corp. Fremlin, of the 16th Field Ambulance, writing from France, says: "We are finding Zam-Buk splendid for injuries and ailments, but we haven't enough of it."

Zam-Buk cannot be equalled for the injuries and ailments incidental to trench life. There is nothing that ends pain and heals so quickly. For cuts, scratches, bruises, stiff joints, and all skin ailments it is equally good. For sore and blistered feet, caused by long standing and marching, there is nothing brings such relief as Zam-Buk, and for sores of all kinds Zam-Buk is invaluable. Having some Zam-Buk on hand to apply immediately an injury is sustained will save a man much unnecessary pain.

If you are not going to the front, there is another way in which you can "do your bit"—help relieve the sufferings of the men in the trenches by sending them Zam-Buk. All druggists 50c. box, 3 for $1.25, or post free for price, from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

ZAM-BUK

READ THEM WRONG.

A young man full of conceit, approached the Bishop of his diocese and said to him:

"Bishop, I am sure I am called upon to preach. For three nights in succession now I have in a dream seen the letters, 'G.P.C.—Go Preach Christ'—like enormous letters of fire in the sky."

The bishop looked at the young man and remarked dryly: "I think, my young friend, you have misread the letters. They spell 'Go Plow Corn.'"

If slugs bother the roses sift ashes on the bushes when they are wet with dew or rain. See that the ashes reach the under side of the leaves.

Radishes are easily the most popular crop in the home garden, and there is no section of the country in which they may not be grown to advantage.

There is no other flower which takes the place of the rose, and a little care and study will succeed with it as certain as with any common garden flower.

If the farmer is to raise any horses for the market he should dispense with barbed wire fences, especially between pastures where the horses are kept.

The Racking Pains of Sciatic Rheumatism

Were Well-nigh Unbearable—After Five Years of Suffering Cure Was Effected by Dr. Chase's Medicines

For downright excruciating pain few ailments can be compared to sciatic rheumatism. Since this condition of the sciatic nerve denotes exhaustion of the nervous system the logical cure is found in the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to nourish the starved nerves back to health and vigor.

Reports are continually coming in to us regarding the splendid results obtained in the treatment of sciatic rheumatism by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food after each meal and Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills occasionally as a means of arousing the action of the liver, kidneys and bowels and thereby keeping the system freed of pain causing poisonous impurities.

Mr. W. J. Talbot, Edenwold, Sask., writes: "It is a great pleasure for me to recommend Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and Nerve Food as a cure for Sciatic Rheumatism. The pain I have suffered has been well-nigh unbearable. It would start in the hips and run down the legs to the toes, gradually getting worse. The nerves contract until one is practically useless. My doctor tried many different treatments, but could only afford relief for a time.

"For about five years I was subject to this trouble with severe attacks which would last about two months. The last attack I had was shortened to two weeks by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and Nerve Food. This treatment was continued until I was satisfied that the cure was lasting."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, six for $2.50. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S WAIST.

By Anabel Worthington.

Novelty means newness of idea that best expresses individuality in a garment; therefore, we may well say that this design suggests a waist that is novel in its entirety. Most of us are artistic in appreciation, if in no other way. No one can look at this model and refuse to admit that it is strikingly smart. We have unusual opportunity for combining materials in making this waist.

No. 7587. Has the vest and collar in one, showing an exquisite application of the new collar idea. In surplice style, the vest closes the blouse with abundant fullness. Down the centre of the back is a strip in panel effect, an extension of the collar itself. It is made of the contrasting cloth that forms the vest and is stylishly cut. The cuffs of the short sleeves are also of this material. When long sleeves are employed they are made of the goods forming the blouse front portion. An equally pretty waist may be made of all one material, if your choice is such. As illustrated, the closing is made with the ever popular buttons that ornament and serve on the same garment.

The pattern is cut in sizes 36, 38, 40 and 42 bust measure. To make in size 38 will require 1¼ yards light goods, ⅞ yard dark; if in 36 inch width, 2 yards when made of one material.

To obtain the pattern send 10 cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 10 cents, or 2 for 25c.

SALTS FINE FOR ACHING KIDNEYS

We eat too much meat which clogs Kidneys, then the Back hurts

Most folks forget that the kidneys like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged, and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges; torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which everybody should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well known druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Home Health Club

By Dr. David H. Reeder

Ventilation and Colds.—A manufacturer from the East called at the Home Health Club offices a few days ago and wanted to know if there was not some way in which he could prevent himself from taking cold whenever he passed a night on the sleeping cars. I answered that the only time I have had a cold for many months followed immediately after a recent trip to New York which required a day and a night on a Pullman car. I tried my best to get ventilation, but there were so many other passengers that wanted the ventilators closed and the heat turned on to the full extent, that I simply had to swelter. I succeeded in securing a berth near the front end of the car, and I fastened the curtains of my berth back so that the fresh air that came in when the doors were opened would help, but as soon as I was asleep the porter very carefully closed and buttoned them for fear I might take cold. Once I woke up during the night and found myself dreached with perspiration. As long as I remained awake I again kept the curtain open and was comfortable.

Air that has been breathed over and over by many people in a superheated and closed room, whether in a car or a house, is no more fit for use than water that has been drunk and voided into the supply that must be used by the people. Air in active motion quickly purifies itself, so also does water, but stagnant air like stagnant water is poisonous and as a rule the first and most common result of its use is manifested in what are called colds.

In my own case, clean, healthy blood and a strong constitution enabled me to throw off the effects of the cold very quickly, but it was humiliating for a time because I consider it is almost a disgrace and in time will be looked upon as a shame and almost a crime to take cold or to have any other easily preventable ailment.

The largest foreign purchaser of the products of the United States is Canada, which bought products valued at $345,000,000 last year. Cuba came next with purchases of $69,000,000, and then Argentina, $45,000,000; Mexico, $39,000,000; Brazil, $30,000,000; Panama, $23,000,000, and Chile $17,000,000.

If you have a pine floor do not wear out your life scrubbing it. Cover it with a good lenoleum, which will cost about $1.35 per square yard. If varnished once or twice a year it will not wear out for five or ten years with good care. If rugs are kept where standing it will save the feet as well as the linoleum.

Scissors are excellent to shred lettuce; they are much more convenient than a knife.

MY TERRIBLE HACKING AND SPLITTING COUGH

WAS ENTIRELY CURED BY

DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP.

Mrs. Clara Jackson, Huntsville, Ont., writes us under date of January 12th, 1915. "I take great pleasure in writing you concerning Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. Last winter I contracted a very bad cough which troubled me all through the summer. This winter I started to take Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and after taking three bottles I can truthfully say that I fell like another woman. The terrible hacking and splitting cough, and the dry sensation in my throat is entirely cured. I would certainly recommend it to anyone troubled with bronchitis or lung trouble. I have not words too grateful to give you."

All obstinate coughs and colds yield quickly to the action of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, combining as it does all the lung healing virtues of the Norway pine tree, and the soothing, healing and expectorant properties of other excellent herbs, roots and barks.

"Dr. Wood's" has been on the market for the past twenty-five years, and we claim that it is the best cure for a cough or cold that you can possibly procure. The thousands of testimonials we have received prove that our claim is right.

All we ask you is to see that you get "Dr. Wood's" when you ask for it, and don't accept some no-account substitute.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price, 25c and 50c.

WHOLE OF IRELAND UNDER MARTIAL LAW

Member of 93rd Meets With Tragic Death

SINN FEIN REVOLT IN DUBLIN HAS NOW APPARENTLY COLLAPSED

The Loyalty of The Irish Nationalist Leaders and The Masses in Ireland to British Government Has Resulted in End of the Trouble, Although More Fighting May Occur When Goverment Troops Are Rounding up The Rebels---County Under Martial Law.

GERMAN ATTACKS ONCE MORE STOPPED

LONDON, April 27.—The loyalty of the Irish Nationalist leaders and the masses in Ireland to the British Government has resulted in the collapse of the Dublin Sinn Fein revolt inspired by Germany. Official despatches to-day reported the situation now comparatively quiet in the Irish capital. It is possible more fighting may occur while Government troops are rounding up the Sinn Fein rebels, but the arrival of troops from England apparently disheartened the rebels. The London newspapers to-day launched a fierce attack upon Chief Secretary for Ireland Birrell and Lord Wimborne, demanding their immediate resignations. The Express, Daily Telegraph and Post joined with the Northcliffe papers in declaring that Birrell's weakness and irresolution were responsible for the Sinn Fein uprising. The Express demands that Lord Kitchener be sent to Ireland as Lord Lieutenant. "The Government," said the Express, "must jettison the Ministers whose inaction made possible the scene that disgraced Dublin."

.. PARIS (French Official), April 27.—Following an intense bombardment on a front extending from Avocourt to Pepper Heights, north of Verdun, a small force of Germans last night attempted to attack. The War Office announced to-day that the enemy was immediately stopped by the French curtain of fire. Though there have been reports of increasing activity on the Vosges front and at the extreme southeastern end of the battle line, no important engagements occurred in those sectors last night. A German reconnaissance attempted to reach the French positions east of Le Mesnil, in Lorraine, but was quickly dispersed. North of the Aisne, German patrols were repulsed in grenade fighting. A French aeroplane shot down a German aeroplane which fell in Spincourt Forest.

Whole of Ireland Under Martial Law

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 27.—The whole of Ireland has been placed under martial law, Premier Asquith stated in the House of Commons this afternoon.

"The situation in Ireland is still serious," said the Prime Minister. "The rebels continue to hold some important public buildings in Dublin."

There are indications that the disorder is spreading to other parts of the country, Premier Asquith announced. Western districts if Ireland are reported to be affected. Street fighting continues in Dublin. Riots have occurred in Louth, Ardee Swords and Lusk. Prosperous counties of Tipperary, Connaught, Clare and Limerick seem to be effected. The Government, it is understood, is hurrying more troops across the Irish Sea to cope with the rebels.

The Pope has advised all good Catholics in Ireland to be loyal to Britain.

Sir Edward Carson, Unionist leader, and John Redmond, Irish Nationalist leader, bitter foes in the Home Rule fight in Parliament, joined hands in strong declarations of support of the Government.

Sir Edward declared he wanted to assure the country he would gladly join hands with Redmond and Nationalist leaders in doing everything possible to "put down these rebels now and forever more."

Redmond was loudly applauded when he replied to Carson. "In behalf of all my colleagues and the overwhelming majority of Irish people, I wish to express my cordial detestation of the acts of the Dublin rioters," said the Irish leader.

A Big British Submarine Sunk

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 27.—The British submarine E-22 has been sunk in the North Sea, the Admiralty announced this afternoon. Only two of her crew were saved. The E-22 was one of the newest of the British submarines, designed and built since the beginning of the war. It is probable that she carried a crew of between 20 and 30 men.

Berlin Official Statements

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, April 27.—Berlin official statements to-day declare that the British submarine E-22, which the British Admiralty admits lost, was sunk in the fighting off Lowestoft Tuesday. The German war office reports the capture of a portion of a British trench near Givinchy, and also that German airships bombarded Margate, England, last night.

Messages Of Sympathy And Appreciation

The following telegram and letter of sympathy and appreciation, to Mrs. Stratton, from Sir Frederick William Taylor and Sir John Gibson, former Lieut.-Governor of Ontario, speak for themselves:

Montreal, April 20.

The Manager Peterborough Examiner.

Please express to Mrs. Stratton and family my regret and sympathy in the death of J. R. Stratton, who, during my residence in Peterborough, went out of his way to do me a good turn on more than one occasion.

F. Williams Taylor.

Ravenscliffe, Hamilton,
April 26th, 1916.

My Dear Mrs. Stratton.—I wanted very much to get away for the funeral of my old friend and colleague, your dear husband, but was absolutely unable. When one by one of those with whom I spent some of the most eventful years of my life, keep slipping away, I feel very sad and keep thinking my own time would too come before long.

Mr. Stratton and I had a good deal in common when in the Government together and we were very close friends who could implicitly rely on each other. His word was always enough, and I have been accustomed to hearing that remark made about him—kind hearted and liberal, energetic and forceful shrewd and sensible; he was always he man who could be relied on to accomplish things, and indeed he assumed burdens which, in many cases, should have been borne by others. I shall always think of him as one of the dearest friends and companions of my life. My sympathy with you, dear Mrs. Stratton in which Lady Gibson joins me, is very genuine. You have lost a truly kind-hearted and good husband. God help you to bear the loss.

Very sincerely yours,
J. M. Gibson.

Mrs. J. R. Stratton,
Peterborough.

INMATE OF THE PROTESTANT HOME MADE HIS ESCAPE

George Stevenson Was Not Allowed to Leave The Institution Alone—Left Yesterday Morning and Has not Been Heard of Since—Believed to Have Been Seen Standing in The River

POLICE ARE NOTIFIED

The disappearance from the Protestant Home early yesterday morning of George Stevenson has given rise to the suspicion that he may have ended his life. A man answering to his description was seen standing in a shallow part of the river a short distance below the Auburn power house. He was first seen by Mr. T. A. Lang, an electrician at the Auburn power house, who resides at 544 Elm street. When Mr. Lang first saw the man standing in the river under the G.T.R., railway bridge he concluded that he was a resident of the vicinity who frequently employs his time gathering driftwood along the river bank. Enquiries were instituted later and it was found that the resident spoken of had not been out for over a week. Later in the day a member of the Protestant Home staff came along in search of Stevenson and learned from Mr. Lang that a man answering to his description had been seen standing in the river shortly before eight o'clock.

ESCAPED THROUGH WINDOW

Stevenson escaped from the Home early yesterday morning. He climbed through the smoking room window and was not missed for sometime. He has been an inmate of the Home for some years, and has frequently attempted to leave the premises. This he was not allowed to do unless accompained. He left the Home on a previous occasion but was located a short time afterward and returned to the institution.

BROODED CONSIDERABLE

At one time Stevenson was a well to do farmer on the second line of Smith Township. Adversity fell heavily upon his shoulders and he subsequently lost possession of his property. This in latter years caused him to brood to considerable extent. He made frequent references to the matter. He was a son of the late Johnathan Stevenson.

When he made his first escape from the Home he was found near the river looking into the water. If he went in yesterday at the point named the body would be carried down the river as the current is very swift at that particular point. Stevenson was considered to be frrational at times.

The police have been notified and have instituted a search for the missing man.

J. E. R. Munro,
Captain.
Adjutant 93rd Overseas Battalion C.E.F.

N.B. — The Commanding Officer has been pleased to allow seat checks in lieu of late passes for the show at the Grand Opera House to-night.

Major A. G. Carruthers of the 39th Overseas Battalion recently arrived in Canada from the Old Country, having come over on the Pretorian, in charge of a number of wounded soldiers.

Arrangements are being completed for the bringing in of the outside detachments of the 93rd Battalion and by this time next week the whole battalion will be mobolised here, although the number of men who are out on plowing and seeding furlough will make the increase in the strength of the battalion less noticeable than it otherwise would have been. It is probable that the Lakefield contingent which now includes the Apsley platoon will move into Peterborough on Monday, and the Havelock platoon on Tuesday. The Norwood platoon will not come in until Wednesday as the citizens of Norwood have planned to bid farewell to the soldier boys on Tuesday evening next.

The draft of seventeen men from the 93rd battalion for the 4th Pioneer Battalion has been practically completed and the men have been notified of the transfer. It is not known definitely when the draft will leave, but it will be in the course of a few days. Sergt Watson will be in charge of the draft.

Private John Boik Drowned Last Night

Mary Anderson Who Was With Him Rescued By Mr. Wm. H. Lytle From River Near Foot of Sherbrooke Street—Slipped at Edge of Bank and Pulled Girl With Him.

CAME FROM RUSSIA

FACTS OF LAST NIGHT'S FATALITY.

Cause—Miss Anderson says Boik slipped as they were walking along the bank, plunged down into the water dragging her with him.

Private John Boik, a twenty-one year old Russian in the 93rd Battalion, was drowned shortly after nine o'clock last night in the backwash of the river at the foot of Sherbrooke street.

Mary Anderson, a thirty year old Scotch girl, employed at the Snowden House, who was in company with the soldier, was rescued by Mr. Wm. H. Lytle, and at the Nicholls Hospital to-day was rapidly recovering from the effects of her immersion.

The scene of the fatality was directly off Water street, about thirty yards north of extreme east end of Sherbrooke street. At this point the C.P.R., several years ago, laid a new siding from the "spur" line, crossing Sherbrooke street, and paralleling Water street. A great quantity of earth was piled over the site of the old English boathouse. Necessarily, the siding was levelled with the street, and the gravel used in its construction spilled over into the arm of the river that is almost enclosed by the "spur" line. The bank was thus left almost a sheer drop in some places, and its easiest slope is a sharp declivity at the foot of which the water immediately reaches to a considerable depth.

It was learned this morning that Private Boik and Mary Anderson had been keeping company for some time, and last night they strolled down the east side of Water street until they came to the C.P.R. siding which they stepped across and continued south along the bank. They were arm in arm and when Boik stumbled or slipped on the edge on the bank he plunged down the steep slope or twenty or twenty-five feet into the water and Miss Anderson fell with him. When it is remembered that this bank had been built out into the water it will be understood that they were immediately precipitated into a deep pocket.

Help Fortunately Nearby.

The girl shrieked and shouted for help. Mr. Wm. H. Lytle and his father, Mr. Thos. Lytle, were unloading a car of freight on this siding. At the first cry, the former called out "what's the matter," and the young woman was able to gargle a reply that she was drowning. Both father and son were soon through to the east side of the track and slid down the bank to the water's edge.

Darkness Intense.

The darkness was intense, impenetrable. Mr. Wm. Lytle carried a long rope with a hale hook on the end of it. He threw it at the only object he discerned. It caught in the girl's dress. The first drag brought her closer in, but the hook slipped. A second throw was even more successful, and in a few minutes Mr. Lytle drew her out to the steep bank. There was no other sound from the water. In fact Mr. Lytle says the soldier did not cry out. At any rate he did not hear him. When Mr. Lytle first reached the water's edge there was only the splashing and a ghastly gurgle. Hence in the darkness, he was of the impression that there was only one person in the water.

Girl Quickly Brought To.

That was until he and his father had succeeded in dragging Miss Anderson to the top of the bank, where she soon responded to effective first aid applied by Mr. Lytle. Her first

OBJECTION FROM BRITISH WAR OFFICE AGAINST ORDERS

Cable Said That Their Placing Would Interfere With Contracts Already Let in The United States

COMMITTEE WENT AHEAD

OTTAWA, April 27.—Col. Carnegie, ordnance expert of the shell committee, continued his testimony to-day before the Meredith-Duff Commission on the Kyte charges. Col. Carnegie explained that heavy orders for fuses had to go to the States because the Canadian manufacturers were not in a position to handle them, as they lacked the necessary equipment. While a United States contract was given largely to the International Arms Co. and American Ammunitions Co. the department had been informed that a number of typewriter, watch case and other kinds of manufacturers were handling the work largely.

Through evidence this morning it was shown that at the very time that the contract was being negotiated in New York with the American Ammunition Company and the International Arms Co., a cable was received from the war office, pointing out that the placing of these orders would interfere with those already being executed in the United States and suggesting that they should be placed through J. P. Morgan and Company, the British Government agents.

The recipt of the cable was admitted but the contract was, nevertheless placed in the United States by the Canadian Shell Committee.

It developed in evidence that a certain telegram from T. A. Russell giving figures for making fuses, was lost, and the contract was handed to Bassick for the American syndicate.

Referring to the question asked by the War Office that other fuse orders were being interfered with the cable stated that the report was unfounded and appeared to have emanated from disappointed promoters.

Col. Carnegie said the cable was prepared in a conference with Gen. Hughes and Betram. He had drafted the cable, but it had "perhaps been strengthened with ebullitions by the Minister of Militia." (Laughter).

SANITARY INSPECTOR'S TELEPHONE NUMBER

Citizens Often Pester The Wrong Man—If You Want to Abuse Somebody Call 933

Sanitary Inspector Spence is indebted to Mr. A. W. Spence, 372 Downie street, for taking a share of the abuse that is intended for the guardian of the public health. Citizens often call Mr. A. W. Spence, Downie street, whose telephone number is 1051, in mistake for Sanitary Inspector Spence, whose telephone number is 933, and is listed under "City Municipal Offices." Mr. Spence, of Downie street, is often called upon to listen to a tirade of abuse concerning some alleged delinquency or an enquiry as to why the "ashes were not taken away from a certain street or house. So frequent has this nuisance become that Mr. Spence of Downie street threatens to have his telephone removed.

Citizens in search of Sanitary Inspector Spence would do well to consult the telephone numbers listed under "City Municipal Offices." The Sanitary Inspector's number is 933.

TWO IDEALS.

We have only to read the despatches from day to day to get a contrast idea of the ruling spirit of the Huns and the allied nations in this war. The Huns one day or night raid the British coast, dropping incendiary and other bombs upon peaceful cities and innocent non-combatants. A flotilla of raiders steals into Lowestoft and bombards a no less dangerous city than a watering place. At the same time the Hun aerial warfare on women and children is continually going on, Britain being the shining mark. Both British and French confine their bombing from the air to fortified places or naval or aerial bases. While German aviators were bombing castles in England on Sunday, British aviators were pursuing the raiding Hun baby killers. Other British aviators were bombing the German air ship base in Flanders. One form of activity is plain murder, done in defiance of international law and every sentiment of humanity; the other is legitimate warfare, without outraging the laws that, according to civilization, rule civilized nations in the conduct of war. The one is gratuitous frightfulness, unprovoked murder; the other is self defence, justified by both divine and human law. German frightfulness does not frighten; it only makes determination more obstinate. Every air raid on non-combatants in England is only another nail in the coffin of Prussian militarism whose slogan is success even by the outrage of the laws of God and man and all considerations of humanity. In the abstract, the murder of innocent British people is odious; but it is the price that has to be paid for freedom and exemption of the world of humanity from such a devlish cult as German "Kultur." This war is a fight between the devil and his works and the Divine rights of humanity; and the issue is not doubtful, though the path of victory is red with the blood of thousands, poured out in sacrifice for the good of human kind. The circle, however, is closing in slowly but irresistibly, and the day is slowly coming when Prussianism will be crushed and the world—including the blinded German people—will be permitted to breathe the air of freedom, unmingled with the smoke of battle and to pursue the even tenor of their way, unharmed by the loud alarums of war.

A STRIKE FOR "THE DAY."

Germany, that is official Germany and the war lords, have long been longing and praying — to the devil—for the dawning of "The Day,' when her army and navy should strike Great Britain prostrate. But the answer to the prayer is slow in coming, and the Huns seem to think the best they can do is to accept "the day" in instalments and strike peacemeal. A day close to the day of England's patron saint was selected as one instalment of achieving the day of the overthrow of British power. The programme in detail apparently included—a Zeppelin raid on England ;an aeroplane raid on Dover; a bombardment of the British coast by warships and a revolt in Ireland by the landing of German troops and arms. These several phases of the great stroke were evidently thought out and prepared for with German thoroughness and much time and money spent to insure success. But the scheme was a collapse and all round complete failure. The failure was most complete in the largest attempt—to stir up revolt in Ireland. Not only Sir Roger Casement, the renegade, must have been insane, as the German authorities that helped and encouraged him, if they thought any considerable portion of the Irish people were insane enough to prefer German rule to British rule; German despotism — enslavement of mind and soul—to British freedom of thought and mind—a freedom that made possible in Ireland what would have been impossible in Germany for one moment—freedom of speech to preach sedition and absence of the iron restraint that obtains under the military slavery of Germany. Not only was the plot a failure in execution, but it serves a useful purpose. The authorities doubtless thought that, with the menace of importation of German arms by Ulster "patriots" removed, and with the splendid fusion of Irish factions expressed in the splendid response of Ireland as a whole to the call of Empire, there was little danger of internal discord. But the government authorities have had demonstrated that German intrigue and plotting have been going on in Ireland. With the chief agitator in jail, and with the irreconcilables in Ireland itself, made powerless to propagate discontent and plot mischief, we may expect in the light of revealed conditions, the British authorities will be in a position to deal with any remainder of the late ruction and eliminate conditions that would make its repetition possible.

OIL ON THE STREETS.

We are additionally impressed with the benefits of the use of oil on the streets by the evidences of its permanent effects, revealed by the disappearance of snow from the streets subjected to oil last season. It is quite perceptible, especially in the well-crowned and smooth streets. It is, however, not in evidence on stretches of streets where surface drainage has been neglected and mud permitted, or where good surface drainage has been destroyed by obstructions created by one branch of the streets department working against and undoing the work of the other. With well-drained and smoothly-kept streets oil has not only proved itself to be a sure protection against flying dust, but a preservative of the good condition of the street surface. Its use has, it is hoped, come to stay, as, when the proper oil is employed, it stays even through the wash and slush of a winter of snow.

BRITISH SEA BUSINESS.

It seems incredible that Great Britain is maintaning her productive power and is adding to her wealth in the midst of this war, as Sir George Paish claims, but the figures speak for themselves. The United States is paying toll to England for enlarging facilities at the rate of fully $600,000,000 a year, and the total increase in earnings of British shipping last year was in excess of $500,000,000 a year, more than half of which came from American importers and exporters. German commerce and shipping on the high seas have been wiped out. British ships are now carrying more than half of the world's overseas trade at shipping rates that are making vessel owners rich beyond their wildest dreams.

Great Britain receives more for carrying merchandise on the high seas than half of the world's overseas trade a sinking fund to retire her total war debt as it stands to-day.—New York Commercials.

Epilogue To Elgar's Banner of St. George

Apropos of To-night's National St. George's Day's Service in St. John's

It comes from the misty ages,
The banner of England's might.
The blood-red cross of the brave St. George,
That burns on a field of white!
It speaks of the deathless heroes,
On fame's bright page inscrolled,
And bids great England ne'er forget
The glorious deeds of old!

O'er many a cloud of battle,
The banner has floated wide,
It shone like a star o'er the valiant hearts,
That dashed the Armada's pride!
For ever amid the thunders,
The sailor could do or die,
While tongues of flame leaped forth below,
And the flag of St. George was high!

O ne'er may the flag beloved,
Unfurl in a strife unblest.
But ever give strength to the righteous arm,
And hope to the hearts oppressed!
It says through the passing ages,
"Be brave if your cause be right!
Like the soldier-saint whose cross of red,
Still burns on your manner white!"

Great race, whose empire of splendour,
Has dazzled a wondering world!
May the flag that floats o'er thy wide domains
Be long to all winds unfurled!
Three crosses in concord blended,
The banner of Britain's might!
But the central gem of the ensign fair
Is the cross of the dauntless knight. —Shapcott Wensley.

What The Canadian Red Cross is Doing For Prisoners of War

The misfortune of the prisoner of war is both spiritual and material or physical. He suffers some of the pernicious effects of a prison sentence—the mental lassitude and depression of confinement and isolation from his kith and kin. In addition he is often badly clothed, lodged and fed. He is forced to accept a very low standard of living, and is like a man plunged into hopeless and squalid poverty. From certain points of view he is the most tragic of all war's victims.

The Canadian Red Cross is doing a great deal to improve the prisoners lot. It enters into correspondence with him. It keeps him in touch with his home. It uses all its diplomatic influence to secure his better treatment from his captors. It saves him for mental and moral deterioration. It keeps him in physical health by constant supplies of nutritious food. Up to the end of December over $21,000 had been spent by the Canadian Red Cross in sending food parcel from Switzerland. The public interest in this work is so great that further contributions of $12,000 were received during January. All through Canada the various branches of the Red Cross are each doing their bit for the prisoners of war.

There are 1400 Canadian prisoners. To 491 of these the Red Cross is sending money on behalf of persons who have "adopted them", the "Adopters" make themselves responsible for the maintainance of the prisoner they adopt, and provide money for regular parcels. There are 374 other prisoners who receive maintenance from persons who set on their own initiative, but keep the Red Cross informed of all their consignments.

It must not be imagined that the prisoner of war is penniless. He has arrears of pay from his own Government and is entitled to a regular allowance from the German Government and with the approval of the Canadian Government, our Red Cross has sent a card to all Canadian prisoners asking them to assign ten shillings of their pay to the Canadian Red Cross to cover part of the cost of food supplies forwarded by the Society. Five-sixths of replies received so far have been in the affirmative.

There is now no need for any Canadian to go hungry The Canadian Red Cross has indeed successfully solved a very difficult problem. It has secured for our prisoners privileges which at first seemed impossible to secure. By keeping our prisoners in good health and good spirits it is saving many valuable lives for further usefulness in Canada.

Sir Sam's Attitude During His Official Interregnum

It is not surprising that there should be a good deal of discussion over the fact that Sir Sam Hughes came to Montreal to take the salute at the Easter parade of soldiers, and brought Sir Alexander Bertram with him. Doubtless, if Colonel Wesley Allison had not been ill, he would have brought him along, too. It was no surprise to see Sir Sam on Sunday. He is a very human dignitary, and he does love glory. He regards the soldiers as his "boys," and he would no more think of depriving his boys of the privilege of saluting "pater" than he would of appearing in Parliament these days in anything but khaki—even although his title of Major-General is only an honorary one.

This latter point, by the way, is one that Sir Sam does his best to keep in the background. In this he has been so successful that many people imagine he is the head of the Canadian army. It is true that, as the politician who happens to hold the portfolio of Minister of Militia, he is ex-officio the president of the Military Council, but that portfolio has, on several occasions, been filled by a non-military man. The real head, the official Commander-in-Chief, of the Canadian Military Forces is H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught, a trained soldier of the highest capacity. His Royal Highness's experience and administrative ability have been a wonderful factor in all the military problems with which Canada has been faced during the last couple of years. Assisting the Governor-General has been Col. W. G. Gwatkin, chief of the general staff, and the experienced professional soldiers who are at the head of all the various branches of the Militia.

But perhaps it was not so much his love of glory that brought Sir Sam to Montreal for the Easter parade despite the charges hanging over him. It may have been a politician's play to the gallery. He may have desired to give a public demonstration of his power and popularity to his brother politicians in Ottawa, who have not been at all reassured by his reply to the scandalous charges with which his name is associated. Sir Sam, it would be remembered, is not in charge of the Militia Department any more. It is true that when he got back to Ottawa from England he announced that he would take charge of the Department at once. Something happened, however, before the following night, when he announced in Parliament that he "had done himself the honour of asking the Prime Minister to look after his department while the investigation was on." Perhaps the truth was that Premier Borden had done Sir Sam the honour of asking him to keep away from the Department till he had proved himself more worthy of administering it than the charges against him would seem to indicate. If the latter was the fact, the Easter parade episode in Montreal might have been arranged by Sir Sam as a demonstration of the supposed power of the man Sir Robert was dealing with.—Montreal Herald.

There are about 500 wild buffalo in the province of Alberta, Canada, and these are said to be the only wild herds left on the continent out of the vast hordes which once roamed the prairies and the foothills. Most of the 500 range in northern Alberta, and the rest in the McKenzie districts. Protection is given to the buffalo by the Northwest Mounted Police.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Charges Made by G. W. Kyte, M.P. For Richmond

The Amount Involved is Twenty-Seven Million Dollars—Generous Advances of Capital Were Made

A SUMMARY

OTTAWA, April 27.—The charges made in the House of Commons by George W. Kyte, M.P. for Richmond, N.S., forming the basis of the judicial inquiry which began here yesterday, relate essentially to contracts for the supply of fuses. They were awarded by the old Shell Committee, the body which, subsequently reorganized, became known as the Imperial Munitions Board.

The amount involved is some twenty-seven million dollars. The concerns connected with the charges are the American Ammunition Co., the International Arms and Fuse Company, the Edwards Valve Company, and the Providence Chemical Company.

The American Ammunition and the International Arms and Fuse Company secured incorporation in the United States in May of last year, the paid-up capital of the former being $3,000 and of the latter $1,000. Between the two companies, orders for five million fuses were placed by the Shell Committee, dated June 19 last. The price was to be $4.50 each, and delivery was to have been completed at the end of the present month of April. The contracts for fuses were executed by General Alexander Bertram for the Shell Committee, and were ratified and confirmed by General Sir Sam Hughes, "in accordance with authority duly conferred upon me by his Britannic Majesty's Government."

Generous advances of capital were made to permit the companies starting in business. In the case of the American Ammunition Company, there was to be a cash advance of $1,041,600 on the execution of the agreement, and $323,800 during the first four months. The International Fuse Company was advanced $1,125,000, and within four months a further amount of $562,800 was given it.

It is charged that ten days prior to the execution of the contract an agreement was entered into between B. F. Yoakum, E. W. Bassick, and E. D. Cadwell, whereby, in consideration of the contracts having been secured from the Shell Committee, they were entitled to a commission of one million dollars for having negotiated it. The alleged agreement made provision for the division on this basis: $675,000 to Yoakum, $75,000 to Bassick, and $250,000 to Cadwell and Co. Cadwell was to get all in the first instance and hold it in trust.

John Wesley Allison, it is charged, was a big factor in all these contract negotiations, and a participator in the profits. With Allison was associated B. F. Yoakum and one Eugene Lignanti. In September, 1915, Lignanti withdrew, and was to get $50,000 as his share, the remainder being divided between Alison and Yoakum.

Mr. Kyte charged that large profits were divided as follows: Allison and Yoakum got $475,000 out of a contract for two and a half million fuses given to the American Ammunition Co., and paid Lignanti $50,000; out of a contract to the Edwards Valve Co. for half a million cartridge cases it is charged Allison and Yoakum got $20,000, and gave Lignanti $2,500; out of a contract negotiated between the Providence Chemical Co. of St. Louis, and Yoakum and Allison, for the sale of 2,500 tons of picric acid, Yoakum and Allison, it is charged, got as their commission $260,000, less one-eighth paid to Lignanti.

SUDDEN DEATH OF MR. ED. FLAHERTY

Laid Down to Rest Yesterday Afternoon and at 6.30 Was Found Dead—Funeral on Saturday

There passed away very suddenly at his late residence, 115 Smith St., yesterday evening, Mr. Edward Flaherty. Going to call her father to supper, at half past six, Miss Minnie Flaherty was shocked to find he was dead. He had been down town during the forenoon, and following his noonday meal he went upstairs to lie down as was his custom in the afternoons. Thinking he was sleeping he was not disturbed until supper was ready. The late Mr. Flaherty only came home from the hospital on Saturday last where he had been confined for two weeks.

He was seventy-five years of age and was born in Enniskmore. He had lived in Peterborough for the past thirty-six years, where he was highly esteemed by his fellow citizens. His wife predeceased him four years ago. Four sons and two daughters are left to mourn his loss. The sons are Messrs. Jas. and Jerry of Chicago, Michael of Dakota and Edward of Toronto, and the daughters are Misses Winnie of Toronto and Minnie at home.

The funeral will take place on Saturday morning at 8.30 from the above residence to St. Peter's Cathedral and thence to St. Peter's Cemetery.

Trees In Little Lake Cemetry Steadily Being Removed

The trees in the Little Lake Cemetery are being gradually displaced by graves, and the condition is rapidly approaching when only a fringe or avenue of them remains along the roadways. Years ago families purchased lots that were more or less primed in the presence of a tree or two. But time has claimed its toll, and the lots have become occupied in many cases to the extent that the space taken up the the trees and their roots is now required. Hence their removal has become absolutely necessary. Even the big cluster of pines on the cemetery are being thinned out. Ultimately only avenues of them will be left along the new roads opened up in that section. These are lofty, gooky old trees that have nested many generations of crows, but their sacrifice is absolutely necessary. It must be understood that the cemetery trees are not being ruthlessly cut out. Their removal follows only upon the absolute necessity of utilising the space for graves.

THEY SAY

Don't believe it—give her the benefit of the doubt. The odds are already against her; besides, a tattler is apt to be a liar.

A lifted eyebrow, a wink, a leer, a shrugged shoulder are frail and contemptible testimonials by which to judge a woman's character. You have not heard her side of the story — gossip never does.

"They say" has snarled more lives, gutted more hopes, and done more to make this fair earth a first-class suburb of Hell than any other pairs of words in the vocabulary of meanness.

When you're right, you're wrong.

THERE WAS NO FULL MOON

Historical Painting of Night Before Discovery of America in Error.

Anybody who says there was a full moon the night before Columbus discovered America isn't automatically or historically accurate, says the Philadelphia North American. And anybody who prints a picture of the scene with a full moon in it is open to the criticism of folks who are finicky about details.

So it is that one of the pictures in the Ferris exhibition of historical American paintings at Philadelphia finds itself being talked about. The painting represents Columbus' caravel the night before the big find. There is a full moon just above the horizon, while the reflection of the setting sun is seen on the ship's sails.

A critic opened a controversy, and Dr. Eric Doolittle, professor of astronomy at the University of Pennsylvania, settled it. The critic said he didn't think there was a full moon that night. Dr Doolittle, consulting his charts, proved there wasn't.

Scrubbing As She Hears of $75,000 Gift

LEGACY FROM SISTER WHO HAD KEPT WARM SPOT IN HER HEART FOR GIRL WHOSE ROMANCE ENDED.

NEW YORK, April 27.—Mrs. Anna Brooks was scrubbing a floor when a lawyer came to tell her that she had inherited a fortune of about $75,000.

This was in a new hotel in Newark, N.J. Mrs. Brooks had been scrubbing floors for years although she was a member of a wealthy family in Roscommon, Ireland.

An ardent, romantic girl, she scandalised her relatives at the age of 18 by eloping with a stalwart red-cheeked young man-servant of her father's household. The runaway pair came to this country.

Her life was dreary after that. The man took to drink, left her and at length died. She married again and had children. Always she was poor, and overworked.

Although she never heard from the family at home and believed herself unforgiven it seems that a sister held a warm place in her heart for the estranged one. It was to announce a legacy from that sister, now dead, that a Brooklyn lawyer went in search of her and found her scrubbing a hotel floor.

He supplied her with funds to live upon until the complete returns arrive from Ireland in a few weeks. Meanwhile Mrs. Brooks will continue living with the humble friend whose home has sheltered her during the worst of her adversity.

A WEAK CHESTED BOY.

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyelids and eczema on her head," writes Mr. H. W. Loar, Port Pranford, Nfld. "The child was in a bad state and suffered greatly. The doctor failed to help her and on recommendation of a friend I used Dr. Chase's Ointment, which made a complete cure. With a grateful heart I write you this letter."

Toothbrushes should be dipped in boiling water occasionally to disinfect them.

PREPARE LIST OF BUILDINGS AND HOUSES ENCROACHING ON STREETS

Legal Committee Intends to Protect Public Interests By Putting Nominal Rentals.

Buildings that encroach on public property, streets, highways or lots, are to be listed by a special committee of the Legal committee, consisting of Ald. Duncan, Ald. Langford and City Engineer Parsons. Mr. Parsons prepared two years ago a partial list of these encroachments. It was disposed to the Board of Works file, where it remained for a year or more. Ald. McIntyre removed it this year because of its thumb-worn condition, it and a number of other heirlooms from previous Councils, but Ald. Dobbin's Legal committee is of the opinion that this is a work that claims its attention.

Ald Stratton moved, seconded by Ald. Edgar, that the City Engineer make out his former list, and that Ald. Duncan and Ald. Langford join with him in going over the entire city.

"That will be an act of real public service," remarked Ald. Dobbin.

It is likely that the Council will charge a small nominal rental of all pubic property that is occupied, partially or otherwise, by buildings, etc. It was stated that in the case of the McDonald Estate Lumber Co. they admit their encroachment on Rink and Parry streets The committee holds the opinion that the public's interests should be fully enacted.

City Solicitor Gordon was authorized to investigate the accident to Mrs. J. Trembley in which she sustained a broken hip and to report to the committee.

Philosophy From French Teachers

Henri Ravesu, a Paris business man, at present a Sergeant of Engineers at the front in France, sends a friend in the United States the following amusing litany, which he says is very popular in the trenches:

"You have two alternatives—either you are mobilised or you are not. If not, you have nothing to worry about. If you are, you have two alternatives—either you are in camp or at the front. If you are in camp you have nothing to worry about. If you are at the front, you have two alternatives—either you are in reserve or you are on the fighting line. If in reserve, you have nothing to worry about. If you are on the fighting line, you have two alternatives—either you scrap or you don't. If you don't you have nothing to worry about. If you do, you have two alternatives—either you get hurt or you don't. If you don't you have nothing to worry about. If you do, you have two alternatives—either you get slightly hurt or you get badly hurt. If slightly, you have nothing to worry about. If badly you have two alternatives—either you recover or you don't. If you recover you have nothing to worry about. If you don't, you have followed my advice clear through, you have done with worry forever."

Philadelphian—"I suppose everything is pretty dear in New York, isn't it? Nothing cheap there? New Yorker—"Nothing cheap, except life. Another Objection—She—"What is your principal objection to Suffragettes?" He "Well, they look as if they would make better fathers than mothers."

ST. GEORGE'S DAY CELEBRATION

Relation of Alcohol to Physical And Military Efficiency

Service will be held this evening at St. John's Church at 8 p.m. to commemorate the Patron Saint of England. The Colonel and officers of the 93rd Battalion, and the Mayor and city officials will attend in state. The sermon will be preached by the Rev. Canon Cornish; the first lesson will be read by Captain Rollins, and the second lesson by His Honour Judge Huycke. A new feautre in the celebration of St. George's Day will be the rendering of the Hallelujah Chorus (Handel) by the band of the 93rd Battalion. Thus it will be seen that this celebration of our Patron Saint's Day may be considered as national, Church and Army to say nothing of Law and State being represented.

The members of the following societies are cordially and earnestly invited to attend this great national service: "The Sons of England," the "St. George's Society" and the Daughters of the Empire."

BAD COMPLEXION

Its Cause Impure, Impoverished Blood

To have a soft smooth skin, free from eruptions and unsightly blemishes, the blood must be maintained in a healthy condition.

Face powders, lotions and other toilet preparations may for a short time cover up a multitude of wrongs in the blood, but they cannot remove these red disfiguring pimples that are the bane of so many young ladies' lives.

Why not use Ferrosone? It is an unfailing cure for the worst kind of skin disease, the most effective on all blood purifiers, and cures bad complexion by removing its cause.

Ferrosone invigorates and purifies enfeebled blood. Makes it strong, rich and red. Ferrosone puts power into the blood to nourish the body and all its organs. It is a regulator of acknowledged merit, and is quite unrivalled as a remedy for Female disorders.

Mrs. Shanly of Pittsburg, Ont., says: "For five years my face was disfigured by raw bleeding eruptions that resisted all treatment.

"Three Kingston doctors did their best for me and when they acknowledged themselves beaten, I tried Ferrosone. The first box helped me quite a little, and by the time I had used six boxes I was cured. Ferrosone is a fine remedy for womanly disorders or all kinds and I can highly recommend it." (Signed)). Mary Shanly.

Growing girls, women, men, in fact everybody can derive untold benefit from Ferrosone. It is a tonic for the blood, brain and nerves, and worth its price ten times over to everyone who uses it.

CASEMENT HATED BRITISH THOUGH IN THEIR EMPLOY

Captain of the "Appam" Has known Him Intimately For Many Years —Has Held Important Government Positions

NEW YORK, April 26.—Captain H. G. Harrison of the Elder Dempster liner Appam, which was brought into Hampton Roads on Feb. 1st, as a German prize, knows Sir Roger Casement better, perhaps, than any other man in New York. He dates his acquaintance back to when Sir Roger was purser of the British and African Steamship Company's steamer Bonny, which in the early eighties plied between Liverpool and the west coast of Africa. Captain Harrison was First Officer of the Bonny. Casement made about three round trips as purser and then retired from the sea service, but Captain Harrison met him many times afterward.

"This is good news, it makes me as happy as Punch," said Captain Harrison when told last night that Sir Roger was a British prisoner.

"It is about thirty years ago that I first met Casement," he added, "and even in those days he was always telling us how he hated everything English, while at the same time living on good English money He always was a queer sort of a chap and of all the Irishmen I have ever known, he had less reason than any in my opinion, to hate Britain.

"He was always a mighty smart fellow, clever as he could be. As a matter of fact, he was too clever for the job of purser, and that's one of the reasons he lost the place.

"Casement is from the north of Ireland, and I think that he is a Protestant. I remember that he told me his father had been an officer in the British army, and that the regiment he served in was the Royal Irish Rifflies. He is of a splendid, loyal family, another reason that makes it so hard for those who know him to figure out why he entertains such hatred for everything English.

"He is tall, blonde, and quiet. I have seen stories that would indicate him as a noisy, talkative agitator. He is anything but that, and no one who knows would ever call him a 'mouther.' We used to ask him why he hated us and the country so, but he never went into details, and would simply reply that he did and let it go at that.

"After he left the Bonny, I lost track of him for several years. The next I heard of him he was with Major Parmenter's expedition to the Congo. I next met him in Nigeria where he was recruiting carriers for the Congo expedition. I asked him if he had changed his opinion about England and things British, and he answered no.

"I next met him at Calabar in West Africa, acting as Government Commissioner and denouncing the Government for what, he said, was its harsh treatment of the natives—charges that, I assure you, were absolutely groundless.

"More years passed, and when next I heard of Casement he was in the Consular service at Lisbon and later in Brazil, and still hating the Government which paid him a salary The last time I saw him was several years ago when my ship touched at San Thome, off the west coast of Africa.

"We met and talked for a bit, and I asked him if he still hated the British. I remember his answer.

"They have a lot to be blamed for," he said.

"You ought to be well ashamed of yourself to talk like that and all the time keep on taking British money."

I answered, and with that I left him

"That was the last time I saw Casement. That he took the course he has in this war I am not surprised. I once told him during the Boer war that his place was with the Boers and not with us, but he had a good Government job and his dislike of all things British did not cause him to become a traitor at that time."

RETURNED HERO WAS GIVEN BIG RECEPTION

Asphodel People and Visitors From Far and Near Gather to Welcome Capt. F. E. Birdsall of the 2nd Battalion.

PRESENTATION MADE

CAPT. FRANCES EVERETT BIRDSALL

The people of Asphodel Township and district gave a warm welcome to Capt. Francis Everett Birdsall, of the 2nd Battalion last night, when a big reception was held in the town hall at Westwood. From far and near came people anxious to honour the heroic officer who is now home on furlough, after having been dangerously wounded by a bomb from a trench mortar, early in December of last year.. Visitors from Peterborough, Norwood, Keene, Hastings and other centres were on hand to take part in the proceedings and to assist in extending to Capt. Birdsall some indication of the esteem in which he is held by the districts generally. Peterborough was represented by Lt.-Col. Johnston, Major Watt, Major Lech, Capt. Munro, Capt. Neilson, Lieut. Stock, the band of the 93rd Battalion and by His Honour Judge Huycke and Mr. F. D Kerr, and by Master Percy Luther, the little Recruiting Sergeant of the 93rd Battalion.

The feature of the evening was the presntation to Capt. Birdsall of a most handsome gold watch and chain and a splendid travelling bag from the citizens of the district.

Rev. N. H. Noble of Christ Church, Norwood, read the address, while the presentation to Capt. Birdsall of a Janet Breckenridge. The address which commenced with a hearty expression of welcome to Capt. Birdsall, continued as follows: "Knowing your dislike of publicity, we refrain from specializing our many reasons for admiring your splendid services rendered to your King and country.

"Yet we should like you to know that in spite of a rigid censorship, we have gleaned several facts which proved that you have maintained the highest traditions of His Majesty's Army, and have proved yourself to be a true officer and a gentleman. Your kindness to, and consideration of, the men under your command at Valcartier, Salisbury, and the front; your bravery in leaving the trenches under fire to bring in some wounded who had been brutally malterated, night after night by the ruthless Huns.

"Your humane treatment of certain German prisoners whose lives were spared by your prompt intervention, your excellent work at Salisbury in appreciation of which you were offered the position of Assistant Provost, but which you declined in order to go to the firing line. These and other facts which have come to our knowledge, make us proud to be numbered among your many friends, while your dreadful experience of German gas and narrow escapes from death have evoked our deepest sympathy.

"We now ask you to accept the accompanying gifts as a slight token of our profound esteem and warm affection for Capt. Francis Everett Birdsall, a veteran of Langemarck, Givenchy, Ypres, etc., a Canadian hero who participated in that glorious feat which immortalized Canada and saved the day for Calais and for the British Empire."

At the same time Mrs. Birdsall, mother of the hero of the evening, was presented with a beautiful bouquet of flowers, the presentation being made by little Miss Myrtle Drummond.

A very enjoyable programme was given during the evening with Mr. Wm. Knox of South Dummer making an efficient chairman.

The 93rd Band took a prominent part in the programme and their playing on their first visit to Westwood, was thoroughly appreciated by the big audience present. The programme was as follows:

March—93rd Band.
Selection, "Oh Canada," 93rd Band
Chorus, "The Maple Leaf," by the audience.
Address—Reeve Squires of Norwood.
Selection, "Forest Scenes," 93rd Band.
Chorus, "Until the Boys Come Home."
Recitation, "Bravo," Master Percy Luther.
Duet, "My Little Girl," Miss Dickson and Mr. Warr.
Concertina duet — Bandsmen W. Loader and H. Loader.
Address—Rev. Mr. Glover, South Dummer.
Patrol, "Wee McGregor," 93rd Band.
Address—Major R. P. Watt.
Male Chorus, "Tommy Atkins."
Address Major K. G. Lech.
Solo, "Just for a Girl," Mr. Warr.
Address—Lt.-Col. Johnston.
Selection, "An Indian Ride," 93rd Band.
Chorus, "Good Luck to the Boys of the Allies."
Address—Mr. Fowlds, Hastings.
Address—Judge Huycke.
Address—Mr. F. D. Kerr.
March—93rd Band.
Presentation to Capt. Birdsall.

All the speakers united in extending a welcome to Capt. Birdsall and were loud in their praises of the work of that heroic officer at the front. The officers of the 93rd pointed out to the young men present the advisability of them going to the front to take Capt. Birdsall's place on the firing line.

Judge Huycke who, with Mr F. D. Kerr, arrived late in the evening, after a rough passage over bad roads, said that no difficulty would be too severe to overcome in coming to Westwood to assist in the welcome to Capt. Birdsall, for whose services no words of praise could be too strong. Judge Huycke asked if it was fair that men like Capt. Birdsall should have to go back and that the boys who are at the front should have to do ten men's work because the other men stayed at home.

Capt. Birdsall, in expressing his thanks for the presentation and the many kind words about him, which he said were very embarrassing, referred to the good work that had been done by the men from this district in the 2nd Battalion and now in the 21st Battalion. He would not say that the 2nd Battalion was the best there, but would say that it was beaten by none. Capt. Birdsall said that many men were being sent home because their nerves had become effected by the shell fire. These men were not wounded and from outside appearances were in good shape but were far from being such. He asked the audience to bear this fact in mind, and not be too quick to criticise. Men in such condition were entitled to the same welcome as the soldiers who had actually been wounded.

At the close of the programme refreshments were served by the ladies and a pleasant social hour followed.

Doctor Says Take Iron For Your Blood, Phosphorous For Your Nerves

People have been suffering untold agony for years doctoring for their nerves when there real trouble was, want of phosphorus in their system.

Doctors are surprised after many years of experience to find that they were unable to find that the real cause of nervous weak run down people was due directly to lack of phosphorus for the nervous system and iron for the blood circulation. The moment that phosphorus is given you can notice the nerves beginning to tighten and you begin to get control of your nerves once again. Without phosphorus the system becomes weaken, your stomach is unable to digest the little food that you eat, your liver becomes torpid, the kidneys start to pain you, the blood becomes clogged with impurities, the color of your face is muddy, then your hands, head and legs begin to shake through loss of control of your nerves. One is taking medicine for kidney trouble another is taking laxative every night, others taking poisonous spring tonics, some can't sleep for twitching nerves, and some give up all hopes thinking they are too old and there is no hope for them. You have almost ruined your system and vitality by taking all these medicines for something that never ailed you and you have no person to blame now but yourself if you do not start at once by going to your druggist and get a few cents worth of Bonized Phosphorus with iron and take one or two tablets after each good meal. Give yourself a good ice cold bath every morning, rubbing yourself well; eat plenty of good wholesome vegetables, fruit and drink plenty of water every time you think of it. Here is good advice which millionaires are paying specialists thousands of dollars for to look well, eat well, sleep well, work well digest well look well. As we are here only for a short stay so why not be healthy, strong, vigor and enjoy our short, sweet life. People can talk as they like about all the wonders, life and death, stories about medicines that have cured them, but when you come right down to scientific proofs, hard facts, there has been nothing in medical science to compare with just ordinary Bronzed Phosphorus with iron to restore wrecked systems, put vigorous life in old people, color in your cheeks, clear thinking, strong nerves and strength like a giant.

Bronzed Phosphorus with iron does not contain an atom of arsenic strychnine or any poison which has been found so harmful in almost every tonic. It is easy to take, does not upset the stomach and is taken up by the system immediately making you feel better at once. Is is dispensed in this city at either of F. C. Webber's stores at $5 a box.

ILLUMINATING DISCLOSURE IN CONNECTION WITH FUSE CONTRACTS

Evidence Shows That Government of Canada Was Recognized by Imperial Authorities as Agent in Letting Shell and Fuse Contracts—Prices Originally Asked Were Excessive—Some Details Given of Colonel Nicholls' Negotiations.

OTTAWA, April 27.—The initial sitting of the Royal Commission—Sir William R Meredith and Hon. Justice Duff—charged with the duty of investigating the Kyte disclosures regarding fuse contracts terminated with all the zest of a continued-in-our-next serial thriller. Honorary Colonel David Carnegie, representative of the Canadian Shell Committee, had been on the stand all day. He had reached an interesting part of his strange story. At the solicitation of General Sir Sam Hughes he said the Commission he hunted up Hon. Col. J. Wesley Allison in New York. The latter had placed him in touch with a coterie of Americans consisting of Yoakum, Bissick, Cravens, Cadwell, Baker, Gladdick and others whose names he did not recall. A meeting with these gentlemen was arranged to consider contracts. Col. Carnegie and General Bertram, Chairman of the Shell Committee Proceeded again to New York. They walked into the Manhattan Hotel in the morning to hear a stalwart baritone voice diligently "pazing" them. The message awaiting was from Sir Courtney W. Bennett, British Consul General in New York. It read: "Do not sign any contract for time fuses until you communicate with me. This is most important for Canada."

"Are we not to have the denouement before adjournment?" queried Sir William Meredith when Mr. I. F. Hellmuth, K.C., counsel for the government, at this point indicated his desire for adjournment. Mr. Hellmuth preferred adjournment. The time for rising had been reached. The Commissioners left the bench. Lawyers gathered together their papers. A disappointed and speculating audience departed.

Government Contention Goes.

But the sitting was not without its startling features. A series of decoded official cablegrams between Canada and Britain produced during the evidence of Col. Carnegie was the real surprise of the sitting. At their reading the contention that the defunct Shell Committee had been the trustee of the British Government faded. The cables established that the relation was contractural. They also demonstrated that the Canadian Government had been the direct agent of the British War Office throughout, acting, or presumed to be acting, for the Imperial authorities in a fiduciary capacity. This disclosure roused unusual interest by reason of the fact that it was in direct opposition to that statement made to Parliament on April 15, 1915, by Sir Robert Borden when the latter read the House of Commons a statement defining the position and the duties of the Shell Committee.

Prices Determined in Canada.

The same cable correspondence went to show that the prices were determined not in Britain, but in Canada. Britain's sole participation in this feature of the contracts was one of protest that the figures named were too high. In the case of two orders the British office was successful in securing a material reduction.

Orders and Price Reductions.

The first order from the British Government to the Canadian Government was consummated on Sept. 19, 1914, when the Imperial authorities cabled the Canadian Militia Department: "We accept your prices." This was in connection with the initial order for 160,000 fifteen-pounder shrapnel and for 100,000 eighteen-pounder shrapnel. The order upon which the British Government protested and secured a reduction in price was one for 400,000 fifteen and eighteen pounders, for which a price of $9.25 was quoted by the Militia Department, and for 200,000 complete eighteen pounders, without fuses, for which a price of $17.65 was asked. London finally cabled that the most the Imperial Government would pay was $6 in the one case and $15 in the other. On December 2nd Gen. Hughes accepted the reduced price, and cabled: "My committee proceeding with orders at fifteen and six dollars respectively."

Illuminating Disclosures.

The circumstances under which Canadian manufacturers were urged to participate in the manufacture of fuses as detailed by the witness were also illuminating. Col. Frederic Nicholls, head of the Canadian General Electric, was offered an "experimental order" for 20,000 fuses, the actual cost to be borne by the British War Office. No advance of money was offered, as in the case of United States contracts, and the purchase and installation of machinery necessary for manufacture was to be paid for by the company itself. A letter was read from Col. Nicholls suggesting that the department might pay "the actual cost of development for the first 20,000," and the answer from Col. Carnegie, who, while deploring Col. Nicholls' inability to close a contract, commented that "it might be advisable" for his company to "keep out of the manufacture," although it was hoped that Colonel Nicholls was not disposed ultimately to give up the idea. The cost of installing necessary machinery Colonel Carnegie told Mr. Justice Duff would be "easily $350,000," while to Mr. F. B. Carvell, M.P., the witness admitted that the proposal submitted to this Canadian manufacturer was "obviously a poor proposition."

A Big Attendance.

Long before the hour for opening the sitting of the Royal Commission this morning large crowds gathered at the entrance seeking admittance. Dominion policemen were on guard and only the limited number to fill the Railway Commission courtroom were admitted. Parliament was well represented, many Senators and members being present. A few ladies were also successful in securing an entrance.

Hon. Col. J. Wesley Allison was among the early arrivals. He entered quietly and almost unnoticed, and took a seat on one of the back benches. Despite stories to the contrary he looked well and cordially greeted those who spoke to him. Just at the hour for opening General Sir Sam Hughes arrived accompanied by Captain Harold Daly and General Bertram. These three were all in uniform. Sir Sam instantly spotted Allison, walked over and warmly greeted his "friend, philosopher and guide."

Noted Counsel There.

The moments which passed preceding the arrival of the Judges were crowded with interest and incidents. With Sir Sam Hughes and General Bertram at the table to the right of the bench sat Hon. Wallace Nesbitt, K. C., and N. K. Laflamme, K. C., representing the Shell Committee. By their side were: Mr. J. S. Ewart, K. C., hero of great legal battle at The Hague, and Mr. Eugene Lafleur, K. C., small in frame but massive in intellect, known in Montreal as the "Napoleon of the Canadian Bar," and Mr. George Foster, K. C., of Ottawa, representing General Hughes, and Mr. George F. Henderson, K. C., of Ottawa, representing Col. Allison.

Right across from these legal gladiators sat Mr. F. B. Carvell, M.P., with the scalps of various big antagonists on his belt, the "man behind" the Kyte disclosures. On his right was Mr. W. Jacobs, K.C., of Montreal, a leader of the Quebec Bar. On his left was Mr. F. S. Margey, K.C., partner of Mr. R. C. Smith, K.C., of Montreal, a noted Liberal and a counsel of eminence. He is going to take "fighting Frank's" place when the New Brunswick M.P. is away on Parliamentary duty.

Over at another table —right under the Commissioners— sits Mr. I. F. Hellmuth, K. C., counsel for the Government, with volumes of correspondence and sheafs of typewritten documents before him. Here, too, sat Mr. E. F. B. Johnston, K. C., counsel for the Opposition, with a piece of letter paper, diligently taking notes throughout, while behind both of them was stationed Hon. Albert William Atwater, K.C., veteran of many legal combats, and noted politician as well, representing the International Fuse Company.

After Crown Attorney Ritchie of Ottawa had read the terms of the Commission Sir William announced the Commission's readiness to sit late and long. He suggested Saturday sittings. Counsel unanimously demurred, and were successful in their protest.

Then came the allotting of counsel and the first interchange. Hon. Wallace Nesbitt insisted upon knowing just where Mr. E. F. B. Johnston stood. He "didn't care what the Solicitor-General said," it was unfair, utterly unfair, to "permit him to appear in the guise of an impartial examiner when he is really a concealed enemy." Mr. Johnston smiled but answered not.

The band of the 93rd Battalion had their first experience in what will be an every day occurrence for them later on. Yesterday at Westwood when they were billeted among different residences in the neighborhood for their supper and for the night. The people of Asphodel proved splendid hosts and did everything in their power to make the visit of the band an enjoyable one, as indeed it was. This morning the musicians were driven in from their billets to Birdsall station, a distance of three miles and the "lift" was appreciated by the boys. A detachment took possession of the Town Hall last night and elected to sleep there rather than go to their billets. The sleep did not amount to much as reveille was sounded at 4 o'clock on an emphatic but it was better than the trenches, especially as there was a plenty supply of eatables left over from the refreshments of the night befor eand this was supplemented at an early hour by several pails of hot tea hospitably provided by residents in the neighborhood. Some of the bandsmen spent the afternoon fishing for "suckers" while an other section spent a considerable portion of it in fishing for a khaki cap which drifted down the Ouse River.

The Kingston Standard Says:

Major Mundell, in command of the school of signalling, is making every effort to secure a wireless outfit for the use of the signallers in camp. If the outfit is secured, it will be used for instructional purposes, and a course will be given all signallers in wireless telegraphy. This is carrying the work of the signallers to the place where The Standard has long contended it should be. Visual signalling is now a matter of far less importance than the telegraph, the telephone and the wireless system. If Major Mundell succeeds, and it is hoped by all that he will, there will be a course in wireless telegraphy at Barriefield camp.

The Kingston Standard says—An order has been issued to every officer commanding an overseas battalion in the 3rd Military District to contribute 17 men to the 4th Pioneer Battalion, now in formation at Ottawa under Lt.-Col. Weatherbie. It is a real hardship for commanding officers to spend time and effort, and much money in securing recruits, and then have them taken in bunches by another battalion, that should recruit in the way others have been compelled to recruit.

KINGSTON, April 26.—To-day a portion of the Army Service Corps went into camp at Barriefield. Major Hamilton believes in early beginnings. This is the third corps to enter camp already, and it may be said that the camp has really began. The C.O.C., No. 5 F.C.C.E., and the A.S.C., are in camp, and soon the 12,000 or more allotted for the camp will all be under canvass, and the heights dotted with white tents.

attempt to speak was a gasped "get him." She was also able to say that Boik was in the water and Mr. Lytle returned to his grappling.

In the meantime a nearby resident had responded to Mr. Lytle's cries for help. Miss Anderson was removed to the police station and to Nicholls Hospital. P. C. Blade loosed a bicycle lamp from its socket, and flashing it into the water revealed the brass buttons of the soldier who was upright in the water, the top of his head just below the surface.

Boik Beyond Help.

The body was comparatively near the shore. On the first throw of his rope, Mr. Lytle caught its hook in Boik's belt and had him quickly ashore. Meanwhile the pulmotor had been brought from the fire hall. For nearly two hours every effort was made to restore life in the body but without the slightest success. P. C. Kidd applied artificial respiration, patiently and steadily, but to no avail. The body was taken to the Empress Hotel and placed in a warm bath, but life could not be brought back.

No Inquest.

Dr. Greer investiagted the circumstances of the fatality and interviewed Miss Anderson this morning, afterwards deciding that an inquest was unnecessary.

The Police Report.

Patrol Sergeants A. Kidd and James Reid, in company with P. C. Blade, were at the corner of Charlotte and Aylmer streets when the hose wagon pulled out of the Central Fire Station with the pulmotor. P. C. Blade was informed that an accident had occurred at the corner of George and Sherbrooke streets. Upon reaching the scene of the tragedy, the officers saw Mary Anderson standing by the hose wagon. The girl had just been pulled out of the river. She told the officers that there was a soldier with her and that he was still in the water. Thomas and Wnnam Lytle were dragging the water with a hook and rope. After casting a few times patrol Sergeant Kidd and P. C. Blade saw something come to the top of the water. William Lytle threw his line and caught the object, which turned out to be John Boik. The latter was dragged to the top of the bank and the pulmotor applied, also three methods of respiration. The victim showed no signs of life. Deceased was then removed to the Empress Hotel and at the sugestion of Dr. Eastwood given a couple of hot baths. After working for an hour and twenty minutes Dr. Eastwood pronounced life extinct. Mary Anderson, who is a waitress at the Snowden House, was removed to Nicholls Hospital suffering from shock. She was attended by Dr. Morgan.

Mr. Lytle's only expression when seen by the Examiner was one of regret that Boik was not rescued. "I could have got him, too," he said, "but from the very first there was not the slightest intimation that he was in the water. Afterwards I concluded that it was he who made the gurgling sound that I can still hear. At the time I thought it was the girl, but it must have been Boik drowning."

Mr. Lytle emphasized the steepness of the bank. "Once you get started down it," he said, "there is no stopping yourself. My father and I had a hard job getting back with the girl. Afterward we had to drag up the soldier's body."

Mr. Lytle admitted the reporter's suggestion that it was lucky that he and his father were so near when the accident occurred. Considerable time passed before any other assistance arrived, and valuable minutes, probably ten, slipped by while he was applying first aid to Miss Anderson before Mr. Lytle was made aware of Boik being in the water.

The body was afterwards removed to Comstock's undertaking rooms.

Private John Boik lived in the vicinity of Podosk, Russia. He came to Canada three or four years ago, and had spent most of that time in this vicinity as a farm labourer. He was befriended on several occasions by Mr. Hyman Abramson, George Street dry goods merchant. Boik was a quiet, inoffensive young man, had enlisted in the 83rd in February, and was a member of No. 1 Platoon, A Company. The arrangements for the funeral, which will be a military one, had not been decided upon this afternoon.

Private Boik has no relatives in Canada. He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Boik, and two brothers, one of them in the Russian Army.

He was a member of the Greek Orthodox Church.

Automobile prices are being raised—but the Ford price has been reduced $120 since war began

The immense Ford cash purchasing power has made it possible to overcome in many ways the serious obstacles met with by other car makers because of the scarcity and advance in prices of raw materials.

The high Ford quality is strictly maintained—and the most exacting government tests have shown that Ford constructive material even excels that used in most high grade cars.

This year the Ford car—always the most economical car to buy and to operate—beats all records for economy.

Catcher Hooper In Game Again

Former Ottawa Backstop Will Wear Windpad at Utica

Von. A. Hooper, who shared the backstopping of the first Ottawa Canadian League Club with Red Rowe in 1912, has signed to play with Amby McConnell's Utica team in the New York State League. Hooper belonged to Fort Wayne while here, and when recalled in 1913 had a dispute over salary, and jumped to the Indianapolis Federals. He was suspended by Fort Wayne, and, failing to hold a job with the Feds., has been out of the game ever since.

Archie Yelle, the sterling young catcher sent to London by Jersey City last year, is backstopping for Providence this spring. He still has Detroit strings attached to him. He was a good marksman, with a fine arm, but couldn't hit Canadian League pitchers a little bit.

Beaumont, Texas, gets Earl Ryerson the Detroit pitcher, who was with Ottawa for a couple of weeks, and finished with Brantford last season.

Ray Clemhits, formerly of St. Thomas and Hamilton, won 21 and lost 16 for Tulsa in the Western Association last season.

Things don't look any too bright for Petie Powers at Chattanooga. Manager Elberfeld has purchased Hammy Hyatt for his outfield. Hyatt for years was the best pinch hitter in the National League, occupying this role with Pittsburg.

NEW NAME, LOSES FORTUNE

Bergdoll Disinherited for Shifting to "Brawn."

Acquisition of a more euphonious name has cost Charles A. Bergdoll family ties, numerous friends, and such part of the Bergdoll millions as would have been his by the will of his mother, Mrs. Emma C. Bergdoll, widow of the late Louis Bergdoll, millionaire brewer, of Philadelphia.

It is possible that young Bergdoll did not know of this cost when he succeeded in persuading the Delaware County Court to change his name to Charles Brawn. But his mother is certain.

"I'm glad of it. There's just one less in the family now," said the mother. "He didn't tell me that he wanted to pack away the family name, but he didn't have to. He tried to get his brother, Grover, sent to an insane asylum, but Grover had more sense in a minute that he ever will have. Ach! Mr. Bergdoll! Mr. Brawn! I'm glad he's Charley Brawn and not my son. Only, he needn't come around here any more. I'm going to revise my will. He won't get a cent from me."

Success as a Salesman Brought A Big Reward

Assistant Salesmanger Got His Title Because of His Great Record in Establishing Studebaker

Though young in years W. G. Bell, assistant sales manager of the Studebaker Corporation at Walkerville, has had a career that is unique in the automobile industry in Canada.

It is certain that no one engaged in the selling of motor cars in this country has had longer and broader experience.

Born in London, Ont., Mr. Bell has been identified with the automobile industry since the days when it was in its infancy. He first became interested in the fortunes of the lectric pleasure car, joining the Woods Motor Vehicle Co., in 1903. Three years later he decided to take up the sales of gasoline cars as his life work, and went with the Reo car, first travelling the States. He was subsequently placed in charge of Reo sales in Canada.

In 1914 Mr. Bell joined the Studebaker Corporation in Walkerville as travelling representative. In so doing he renewed business connections with L. J. Ollier, vice-president and director of sales of the Studebaker Corporation. Mr. Ollier and Mr. Bell had been together in the earlier days and when the Canadian field opened up Mr. Ollier remembered the good work of Mr. Bell with the result that they quickly came to terms.

Mr. Bell, as travelling representative, proved that Mr. Ollier had made a wise selection, for his record from the start showed him to be a success in the selling end. His reward came several months ago when he was selected as assistant to J. E. Grady, Canadian sales manager of Studebaker.

It is said of Mr. Bell that he has a wider acquaintance and has covered more territory than any man in the automobile industry in Canada. There are few automobile men who do not know him. His work has taken him on coast to coast trips every single year for the past six years and he points with pride to his record of having traveled practically every square mile in Canada, and of having stopped over in practically every town in this country with a population of 1,000 or more.

Mr. Slicer—"I was reading the other day that there are eight hundred ways of cooking potatoes." Mrs. Slicer—"Yes?" Mr. Slicer—"Well, my dear, don't you think that if you tried hard you could learn one of them?"

DESCRIPTION

A real brown 16 hands high, weighs 1,200 lbs., bred by G. H. Rundle, Piqua, Ohio. This horse is one of the handsomest and most perfect-built, and has the best feet and legs of any horse in Canada; he has excellent breeding and disposition. He has not been raced since 1909 his record 2.09¾ is no measure of his speed. Can show 2.00 speed any time. Mr Rundle refused $4,000 for him as a three-year-old only on account of Mr. Rundle's health he would not be in Canada. His oldest foals are coming 3 years, 4 out of 5 are trotters—no horse gets better foals. Breeders looking for speed will do well to send 100 miles to this great horse He should be seen to be appreciated.

'NEAR-BEER' TOO NEAR FOR WELFARE OF 'DRY' GEORGIA

SAVANNAH, Ga., April 25.—"Near beer" dealers are making preparations to close their places of business on midnight of April 29, which means, so far as they are concerned, that Savannah will be absolutely "dry" on May 1, when the new prohibition law goes into effect.

A movement is on foot among the men engaged in the business to organize a league to assist in prosecuting persons caught violating the law after that date. The sentiment is strong among the dealers for such an organization, under the supposition that "boot-legging" will follow the closing of the bars.

There has been considerable discussion for several weeks regarding what the liquor dealers expect to do with their product left over after the end of April. The belief has gained circulation that a number of them have determined to keep their places open for the purpose of making a test of the law.

Information has been received in Savannah from Mobile that "near-beer" dealers there have obtained an injunction to prevent the enforcement of the prohibition law and have again opened their places of business. "Near-beer" dealers here do not look upon that proposition with favour, however.

Can't Ship Their Stock.

Clifford Walker, Attorney General, has rendered an opinion to the effect that under the law dealers will be forbidden to ship their stock remaining on hand after May 1. This will make it necessary for all stocks to be disposed of before midnight on April 29, except for the limited quantity that the law allows to an individual, but which is forbidden to be kept in a public place.

The law prohibits any one having in his possession more than one gallon of vinous liquor, or six gallons of beer, or one-half gallon of whiskey during any thirty day period after May 1, and this amount can only be kept in places used exclusively for residential purposes. Dealers having in their possession more than this amount after midnight on April 29 will, therefore, be guilty of a technical violation of the law. April 30 falls on Sunday.

The new law is one of the most stringent ever written in this State. Under its terms ther will be no well stocked wine cellars. One provision bars all saloons, locker clubs and breweries, and prohibits the sale, manufacture, barter or disposition otherwise of malt, vinous, spiritous or other intoxicating liquors. There are three other companion laws which become effective on the same date. One of these repeals "near beer" and locker club licenses. Another prohibits the publication of liquor advertisements and the third regulates the shipment of liquors into Georgia.

It is the shipping bill that prohibits the entrance of the "appetizers." A person may receive from non-prihibition territory a shipment within the regulations prescribed each thirty days, and the express companies are organizing specially equipped forces to handle their business. The consignee is required to make affidavit that the amount of the shipment and the date come within the provisions of the law, and a list of those receiving liquor shipments are to be posted with the Recorder daily.

Storage Is Prohibited.

Under the law a person is not permitted to stock up in anticipation of the drought, for it is made unlawful for any individual to have on hand at any time intoxicants greater in quantity than the amount designated as the limit for a thirty day period.

The record of intoxicants ordered will be open to public inspection. Railroads, express companies and other carriers are required to file a report of every shipment within three days after it has been recived. The carrier also is required to keep a record of all deliveries, with the date thereof and the name of the consignee, and this record will be open at all times to the inspection of officers of the law.

Banks and bankers will be affected by the law in that it is made a misdemeanor for a banking institution to handle in any manner a draft or other orders attached to a bill of lading or order for liquor.

The selling of intoxicants under the representation that it is merely a harmless and non-alcoholic imitation will be difficult, since in such instances the burden of proof is placed upon the defendant. If the substance in hand has the odour, taste, colour and general appearance of a prohibited beverage, it will be considered as sufficient evidence that it is the prohibited beverage unless the defendant can show to the contrary. The State will not be required to analyse the beverage in order to prove that it comes under the ban of the law, but the defendant must show the analysis to prove that it does not.

The "common nuisance" clause is another provision of the law. Under this section establishments keeping or disposing of intoxicating beverages may be abated as common nuisances. Other precautions have made the new measure about as solid as it can be made. Summarized, it closes every kind of liquor resort in the State and makes the two quarts a month at home a matter of public and legal record.

Georgia has been theoretically "dry" for nine years, but May 1 will be the first time in its history that any attempt has been made to close the saloons in Savannah. The transportation companies expect to reap a material advantage from the enforcement of the law, and will maintain a delivery department that will be known as Savannah's "liquor store."

Lone Detective in Ambush Captures Escaped Convict

NEW YORK, April 25.—John Leroy Gaskins, "the .44-calibre man," as the police know him because that is the size of the weapon he usually carries, and who has made daring escapes from many prisons, was caught in a spectacular manner last night and will be sent back to Auburn Prison to finish a sentence of thirty-one years.

Gaskins' latest escape was from Auburn on March 31, when he was locked in a freight car and rode out of the yard. The New York detectives had been notified, and particularly was Detective John Shaw, of the Central Office, on watch for him, as Gaskins once had escaped from him.

Shaw was in Centre street about nine o'clock last night, not far from Police Headquarters, when he saw Gaskins and followed him into a saloon at the corner of Hester street. Knowing Gaskins probably had his famous ".44-calibre gun" with him, Shaw concealed himself behind a door and waited.

As Gaskins was passing out Shaw leaped upon him from behind, seized his arms and twisted his right wrist until he sank to the sidewalk in pain. In the same operation Shaw had the big blue steel weapon out of the criminal's pocket and had slipped the "nippers" on him. These "nippers" enable a detective to hold a man's wrist so tightly that the least move on his part is fully controlled by the detective.

Armed For a Siege.

"It's good for you that you got me first," Gaskins said to Shaw while being marched to Headquarters. "If I had seen you first I would have bored a few holes through you." He had a pocketful of cartridges and explained he was prepared for a siege if necessary.

Although only twenty-five years old, Gaskins has had a busy career in crime. It is believed he was one of the original cigar store robbers. He was convicted of robbing shops of the United Cigar Stores Company as far back as 1911. He locked clerks in rear rooms, rifled cash registers and robbed safes.

After serving a two year term, Detective Shaw arrested him in 1913 for re-engaging in that particular business, catching him as he ran away from a cigar store in Chatham square. Shaw was taking Gaskins from the Tombs to the Criminal Courts Building for arraignment when Gaskins disappeared. For a long time no one knew how Gaskins could get away. He explained it the next time he was arrested by saying he pretended to be a detective to the court attendants and walked out.

He was not heard of for a long time, but in the summer of 1914 he and another man held up and robbed a jeweller in Flatbush avenue, Brooklyn. In getting away they shot and seriously wounded the jeweller. Gaskins was caught two days later through watching a woman, and the same day escaped from Raymond Street Jail in a bold manner.

Posed as Detective.

On that occasion Gaskins was handcuffed to another prisoner and they were in a long line of prisoners in pairs being placed in the jail. Gaskins pulled his companion out of the line, saluted the jail guards, pretended to be a detective and walked out of the jail, taking with him the prisoner on the other loop of the handcuffs. Gaskins bought a file, parted the handcuffs and the two men separated. The other was caught the following day, his steel bracelet revealing him. But Gaskins was not caught for a month, when there was another cigar store robbery.

Then he was quickly tried on the jewelry store robbery charge, convicted and sentenced by Judge Fawcett to thirty-one years in Auburn Prison.

Detectives never let their eyes get off him till he was safely in prison, but even then they said he would find some way to escape, and, sure enough, they were notified of his escape from Auburn less than a month ago.

Besides the ".44 calibre gun" and cartridges Gaskins last night had a badge of the United States Railway Mail Servce, No. 47, which is believed to have been stolen. This badge entitles employes of the service to ride in mail cars, and probably was used by Gaskins in his journeys. It also might aid one of his moral laxity in pilfering the mails in transit.

ROB PAY CLERK OF $368 IN FACTORY

Two Men Escape after Felling Youth in Dark Hallway of Building.

NEW YORK, April 27.—Hidden in a dark corner of the third floor hallway of Louis Amberg and Sons' doll factory, at No. 375 West Broadway, yesterday afternoon, two robbers awaited the approach of Marcus Weiss, a young clerk, who carried a satchel containing $450 of the payroll sealed in envelopes. As he entered the hallway he was felled by a blow on the head, but he kept a tight hold on the satchel.

Although stunned, Weiss put up a stiff fight. He was no match for the two men, however, and before help arrived the satchel had been torn from his hand. The robbers escaped with $368.65, some of the envelopes having fallen out of the satchel.

Several employees, attracted by the noise of the struggle, hurried into the hallway, but the robbers had vanished. It is believed they had an automobile waiting in the street.

Weiss was found to have several cuts about the head, but otherwise was unhurt.

Just before the attack Weiss had delivered $200 of the payroll of $50 to an office on the second floor of the factory.

J C. TATUM DIES WITH WIFE SUING

GREAT NECK, L.I., April 27.—While his wife was in Cleveland, O., where she began an action for divorce March 5th last, Mr. John C. Tatum, wealthy cotton goods broker, died this evening at his residence heer of pneumonia. He was 48 years old and had been ill a little more than a week. His favorite niece was with him at the end.

The marital troubles and the subsequent trial of the divorce action which was brought by Mr. Tatum against his wife, were the gossip of ubsiness and social circles on Long Island and New York city. The couple lived happily until the summer of 1913, when Mrs. Tatum met "Jack" Ottman, who afterwards figured in the divorce case.

This trial took place in Justice Crane's court in January, 1915, and Mrs. Tatum was exonerated by the jury. The evidence disclosed that Mrs. Tatum went to Nova Scotia in September, 1913. Mr. Ottman was aboard the same steamship. In the testimony it was brought out that he subsequently rented a place which he intended to use for card playing purposes but which later was taken off his hands by Mrs. Tatum.

It was only a day or so after the failure of her husband to obtain a divorce that Mrs. Tatum went to her home at Great Neck. She drove out her husband's servants and installed servants of her own and took possession of the estate. On April 6, 1915, Mrs. Tatum filed an action for separation and Mr. Tatum was ordered by the court to pay his wife $75 a week and counsel fees. On June 23rd, last year, Mrs. Tatum sold out her interest in the estate at Great Neck for $150,000. She then moved to New York city and filed an action for divorce in September.

—It was on July 10, 1913, that Mrs. Tatum figured in an action for assault brought against her by her sister, Miss Katheryn MacArthur. The suit was withdrawn and Mrs. Tatum was exonerated.

One of the sensational features which followed the divorce action was the battle for the possession of the Great Neck home between Mr. and Mrs. Tatum. Mrs. Tatum, however, held the house for five months after which she disappeared.

In her resent action Mrs. Tatum alleged that her husband contributed to the support of other women, and persecuted her. She asked for a divorce and restoration of her maiden name.

Mr. Tatum was the head of the firm of D. O. Tatum, No. 239 Church St., Manhattan.

DR. HAMMOND TESTIFIES THAT MRS. ROGERS WAS INSANE

Testimony in the Murder Case is Closed and Trial Will End To-day—Dr. Gregory Gives Opposing Opinion—Physician in Lebanon Hospital Declares Examination Showed That Mother Also Took Mercury

NEW YORK, April 27.—All the testimony in the case of Mrs. Ida S. Walters Rogers, on trial for poisoning her two children, was presented when Justice Tompkins adjourned the trial until to-day. Addresses to the jury will be made to-day by District Attorney Francis Martin, of Bronx county, and Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler, chief of counsel defending Mrs. Rogers. Justice Tompkins will then charge the jury. No one in attendance at the proceedings yesterday seemed to expect any long delay in the report of a verdict.

Dr. Graeme M. Hammond in reply to the hypothetical question of Mr. Chanler gave his opinion that Mrs. Rogers was suffering from a form of insanity combined of mania and melancholia when she killed her children. Dr. Menas S. Gregory, chief of the Bellevue Hospital psychopathic department, expressed the opinion that Mrs. Rogers was sane.

Dr. Hammond and Dr. Gregory agreed that the history of insanity does not exhibit any case where a sane woman has killed her illegitimate children because of their illegitimacy, except at their birth.

Physicians called by the defence replied to a hypothetical question framed by Mr. Chanler, Dr. Gregory and other physicians testifying for the prosecution, expressed their views in reply to a hypothetical question framed by District Attorney Martin. Mr. Chanler's question declared that Mrs. Rogers' act had been without motive. Mr. Martin's incorporated declarations that Mrs. Rogers had a motive in the prospect that Mr. Rogers had shown decreasing affection for her, increasing love for the children, that she was in financial straits and that she had been disappointed in her hopes that Rogers' wife would divorce her husband and permit the latter to wed the then Mrs. Walters, the defendant.

REGARDING POISON FOR THE MOTHER

Efforts to show that Mrs. Rogers had not herself taken any of the tablets which she prepared and gave to her children were made by Mr. Martin, largely on the history of the case of Mrs. Rogers as written in the records of Lebanon Hospital. This memoranda failed to show that Mrs. Rogers' mouth exhibited any of the corrosion that corrosive sublimate produces and did produce on her children and did not contain reports of other evidences of mercurial poison. The hospital physician who had written this case's history testifys that he had described Mrs. Rogers as he found her when she wrote the history two or three weeks after he admission to the hospital.

Mr. Martin pressed this point very hard and sought to show, that all the evidence indicate that Mrs. Rogers had only pretended to have taken poison after giving it to her children. He uttered a sharp objective but too late, when Dr. William Wovshin, formerly of the Lebanon staff, was questioned by Mr. Chanler. Dr. Wovshin had testified that his first analyses to discover if Mrs. Rogers' system contained mercury had given negative results and he had so written in his notes. After obtaining from Mount Sinai Hospital material for more delicate tests he said, he had found traces of mercury and had changed his notes.

BANKER BERNARDINI BLESSES RUNAWAY PAIR

New York, April 27.—When Miss Loretta Bernardini and Professor Stephen Acunto presented themselves at St. Patrick's Cathedral one morning last week, they were informed that no marriages could be performed during the Holy Week.

"Then we will get married by an alderman," said the blushing maiden.

And they did. It made the bride's papa very angry when he heard of it. He is Michael Bernardini, a banker, whose home is at Rosebank, S. I. But yesterday when the couple returned home after a brief honeymoon he gave them his blessing. The bridegroom is the president of a Manhattan music concern.

Man Having $3,540 Asks to Be Shot

New York, April 26.—"Have the kindness to shoot me, please!"

The request was made yesterday of Sergeant Thomas Ward, at the desk of the Fifty-first street station. At Bellevue the man gave his name as Baptiste Ebener, a chef, of No. 781 Third Avenue. In his pockets were $340 and a bankbook with deposits of $3,000.

It is said Ebener has been worrying over the fate of relatives in the war zones.

CLAIMS THAT FARM WAS MISREPRESENTED

Belgian Buys When Land is Snow-Covered.

CHATHAM, April 27.—The case of Louis Hennyck vs. Alex. Sova is up before the non-jury sittings of the supreme court before His Lordship Justice Kelly.

The action is the outcome of an alleged misrepresentation on the sale of a 100-acre farm. The plaintiff is a Belgian, and claims that he bought from the defendant on the understanding that the land was of black clay soil, which would produce eighteen tons of sugar beets to the acre. At the time of the purchase the farm was covered with snow and he was unable to examine the soil. After working the farm a year he claims that he was unable to grow sugar beets without the use of fertilizer, and then the crop was unsatisfactory.

"There's a Reason"

"PUT YOUR SURPLUS RAGS ASIDE"

Apropos of the coming collection of rags to be made, on behalf of the local Playgrounds' Association, the following poem, entitled "Rags," is of timely interest:

I'm a painter. If you love me, put your surplus rags aside.
I've a palette, easel, brushes; but I long to have supplied
Rags to daub with, paint with, burnish with; I'll conquer stubborn fate,
If you'll only think about me when the rags accumulate.

There are days when rags are dollars, when your painter on a spurt
Uses handkerchiefs or collars, or will sacrifice a shirt.
You may keep me from appearing in a bare Adamic state,
If you'll only think about me when the rags accumulate.

Oh, the early masters' story I have heard till fancy flags;
But they never rose to glory on a scant supply of rags.
Men like Raphael and Rubens couldn't help from being great
With such busts to think about them when the rags accumulate.

Drive me not to desperation, force me not to take a wife,
Just to put a termination to the ragglessness of life.
Then find her waste the precious scraps to polish up a grate,
Or stuff them in the furnace,—"lest the rags accumulate."

Tell me not of old affections while I'm tearing up a vest;
Oldtime songs or recollections (ragtime music suits me best.)
'Mind me not of sunny childhood when we swung upon the gate,
Then at womanhood forget me when the rags accumulate.

Oh, the sweetest of all melodies the art of music brags
Is the ragman in the alley singing, "r-a-g-s, Rags, RAGS!!"
How I envy his vocation, and I often cogitate
Plans to knock him down and rob him when his rags accumulate.

To extol the joys Elysian Milton's measure never drags;
But a painter's highest vision is a plentitude of rags,—
Snowy scrapheaps daily doubling, tother side the pearly gate,
Where the wicked cease from troubling and the rags accumulate

All garments will wash easier if they are soaked in cold water.

Bathe perspiring hands with alcohol, then dust with talcum powder.

EDISON'S New Invention is a Human Instrument

EDISON has made possible the absolute Re-Creation of Arthur Middleton's magnificent voice

SO faithful, so startlingly identical with the original is Edison's Re-Creation of the human voice that audiences of musicians and music-lovers in every corner of the United States have expressed their astonishment at the human qualities of Edison's new invention, the Diamond Disc Phonograph.

It is a wonderful thing to realize that you are listening to the actual Re-Creation of a voice instead of only an approximate reproduction as given by talking machines.

Hear Middleton's Great Voice

Arthur Middleton, basso, belongs to that group of peerless artists known to the world as the Metropolitan Opera Company. For more than two years his voice has won him distinction with this company. Middleton has freshness and youth. He imparts both of the qualities to his singing. For purposes of Re-Creation Edison has made it a point to seek "fresh" voices—voices still vibrant with youth.

The very humanness of Edison's invention has astounded thousands. It is a human instrument. It gives you the human tone, perfectly recorded, absolutely Re-Created. In Edison's Re-Creation of Middleton's voice every tone is intact.

Edison simply asks you to HEAR his Re-Creation of the Human Voice

So convinced is Edison himself of the truenss of his Re-Creation that he asks you simply to hear it. Words cannot convince you. Music's Re-Creation baffles description. Come in and hear it.

MOTHER OF FOUR CHILDREN

How Lydia E.Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Kept Her Well and Strong.

Lincoln, Illinois.—"I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for ten years with good results and I have four healthy children. This summer I was in a very run down condition and the very hot weather seemed more than I could stand, but I commenced taking your Compound in June and from then until September 29th, when my last baby was born, I got along much better than I had before. My baby was a girl and weighed 14 pounds at birth, and I recovered very rapidly which I am sure was due to your medicine. I am well and strong now, nurse my baby and do all my work. I had the same good results with your medicine when needed before my other children came and they are all healthy. My mother has taken your medicine with equal satisfaction. She had her last child when nearly 44 years old and feels confident she never would have carried him through without your help, as her health was very poor."—Mrs. T. F. CLOYD, 1256 North Gulick Ave, Decatur, Ill.

Expectant mothers should profit by Mrs. Cloyd's experience, and trust to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

HAVE RECAPTURED SEVERAL IMPORTANT CENTRES FROM THE REBELLIOUS FACTION

LONDON, April 27.—British regulars from Belfast and England are now in Dublin, and have recaptured from the rebellious faction several important centres where the members of the Sinn Fein party and their adherents had occupied. These include St. Stephen's Green and Liberty Hall.

As a measure of precaution martial law has been proclaimed in the city and county of Dublin and the official announcement is made that drastic steps are being taken to suppress the movement in Ireland and arrest all those responsible for it.

Martial Law Established.

That the Government intends to deal with the offenders with a heavy hand is indicated by the publication of a proclamation in the official Gazette to-night suspending in Ireland section 1 of the defence of the realm amendment act of 1915, which gives to a British subject charged with an offence under the act the right to be tried by a civil court.

The proclamation states that "the present state of affairs in Ireland is such as to constitute a special military emergency," as specified in subsection 7 of the act, which enacts that in the event of an invasion or other special military emergency arising out of the present war the operation of section 1 may be suspended either generally or in a specified area.

Nationalists Help Authorities.

Premier Asquith in the House of Commons and Lord Lansdowne in the House of Lords made reassuring statements this afternoon respecting the situation in Ireland.

Outside of Dublin, said the Premier, the country was tranquil.

It was the case that the rebels had machine guns.

Nationalist Volunteers, he said, had turned out to assist the authorities, while many local persons had offered their aid.

Dublin Castle Attacked.

Lord Lansdowne declared that there was now a complete cordon of troops around the centre of Dublin. He added the information that "a half-hearted attack" was made by the rebels on Dublin Castle Monday. The casualties at Dublin, according to his statement, were nineteen killed and 47 wounded.

Baron Wimborne, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, forwarded advices from Dublin to the effect that the situation was satisfactory, and that the news from the provinces was reassuring. He placed the number of insurrects killed at eleven.

A Sensational Arrest.

A despatch from Talee, county of Kerry, says that a sensation has been caused there by the arrest of a prominent member of the Tralee Irish Volunteers, Austin Stack. An accountant in the general postoffice at Dublin, Cornelius Collins, has also been taken into custody. Both are charged with conspiracy in aiding the importation of arms from an effemy."

Another man of unknown nationality has been arrested. His identity has not been disclosed, but he was conveyed to Dublin under a strong escort.

The men connected with the filibustering expedition now in the hands of the Government include Sir Roger Casement's party of three landed they twenty-two Germans comprising the crew. The chief importance of the capture lies in the revelations made of an extensive plot having ramifications in Germany, Ireland and America. Irish-Americans are said to have been largely instrumental in financing the revolutionary movement.

Navy's Good Work.

The capture of the expedition by the navy secret service is considered a remarkably clever piece of work. An automobile with Irish confederates awaited Sir Roger Casement ashore. The machine and its occupants were seized by secret service men. When Casement's party of three landed they walked into the arms of their enemies.

The expedition consisted merely of a submarine and an 1,100-ton steamer, which approached the coast at different points. Casement and his companions landed in a rowboat from the submarine.

When arrested Casement is reported to have maintained a good front and apparently was without hope of escaping death for treason. It is believed that his trial and condemnation will be speedy, although for the present it is not possible to say whether he will be executed.

Representatives of the American Embassy have been in conference with the officials in charge of the case, presumably regarding the American ramifications.

Sunk With Cargo.

The steamer was sunk with all her cargo, consisting of rifles, machine guns and ammunition.

It is stated semi-officially that all these went to the bottom of the sea with the ship. The auxiliary came directly to the Irish coast from either Kiel or Wilhelmshaven. The ship carried a crew of twenty-two, all of whom were mad prisoners. The vessel flew the Norwegian flag and carried Norwegian papers.

TIRED OUT KIDNEYS.

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses in eating and drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to renewed effort but by awakening the action of the liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

MISSING BROKER FOUND.

HEMPSTEAD, L.I., April 27th.—Tyrone Boyd, Manhattan Customs House broker, who mysteriously disappeared from his country place last Wednesday and regardless of search for a week remained out of the reach of his relatives and friends, was found this morning by Charles Middagh, of Hempstead, a neighbor of Mr. Boyd, who entered a cigar store near the Whitehall Building, and was surprised to find Mr. Boyd standing at the counter purchasing a cigar.

Mr. Boyd, who appeared somewhat dazed at first, did not recognize Mr. Middagh. The latter informed Mr. Boyd's office at No. 19 Whitehall St., and arrangements were made to bring Mr. Boyd to his country home here.

Mr. Boyd did not appear to remember where he had been for the past week. He said that he had spent much of his time riding back and forth in the subway trains. Mr. Boyd did not know that he was so near his office and appeared to be much surprised to know that his office was in the adjoining building.

Friends of Mr. Boyd say a complete rest will restore his health.

Nervous and Almost Crazy With Pains in the Head

Clergymen Certifies To This Cure of Nervous Prostration by Use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

No ailment is more discouraging than Nervous Prostration. You may feel better for a day or two, only to find the next day that you have lost ground and are worse than ever. The headaches are worse, languid feelings are terribly depressing. As you lose strength you lose hope and courage and look to the future with fear and trembling.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is the greatest blessing that has ever come to the suffering from nervous exhaustion. It is not narcotic in its influence. It does not deaden the trembling, irritated nerves, but through the medium of the blood nourishes them back to health as nothing else can.

Mrs. Alonzo B. Eisner, Billtown, King's County, N.S., writes: "I was very low with nervous prostration and was about discouraged, as I could not sleep nights and was almost crazy with pain in my head. I had tried many doctors, but seemed to get little benefit from their treatments.

"A friend handed me Dr Chase's Almanac, so that I might read about the Nerve Food. A single box of this treatment convinced me of its value for I was better. I cannot tell how many boxes I used, but the results were so highly satisfactory that I cannot praise it too much. My health and strength have been restored so that I can do all my own work, and I recommend the Nerve Food to all who suffer from nervous prostration.

"This is to certify that I am acquainted with Mrs. A. B. Eisner and believe her statement in regard to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to be true and correct."—Rev. Arthur A. Whitman.

Some patience is required in the treatment of nervous prostration, but you will not be using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food long before you begin to find your strength and good cheer returning. You will then be encouraged to continue the use of the food cure until cured. 50 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

PRESS ON LANDING OF RUSSIANS IN FRANCE

"Army is in France to Fight, Not to Lay Down Arms," Says Philadelphia Telegraph.

"The Last Struggle."

Pittsburg Dispatch:—"Reports of the landing of Russian reinforcements at Marseilles and simultaneously of the withdrawal of large bodies of German troops from the Balkan front to strengthen the attacks being made on the French lines look very much as though both sides regarded the last great struggle is at hand."

"The Deductions."

Springfield Republican: "If Russian troops are in any considerable force the common sense deduction is that the French have suffered such heavy losses that they need greater aid than the British are at this time able to give."

"The Paris Conference."

Bridgeport Post: "This is no doubt one of the first evidences of the result of that momentous military conference which was held in Paris some weeks ago. It is sensational in the highest degree."

"In France to Fight."

Philadelphia Telegraph: "The growing hope in many quarters that the great war might be nearing its end is not supported by this item of news. The Russian army is in France to fight, not to lay down its arms and return home."

"Good Fighters."

Syracuse Post Standard: "Under capable officers and with honest and intelligent management of their supplies the Russians are good fighters."

"Foreshadows Offensive."

Providence Journal: "Seemingly this new movement, the first of its kind during the war, foreshadows a vigorous offensive in the near future, for the French and British forces now holding this front are evidently sufficient for the purpose of resisting any potential German advance."

"Ill Portent for Germany."

New York Times: "It is an ill portent for Germany, since it shows that the advantage of shifting troops from one front to another, which thus far has been rather exclusively her own, is now shared by her enemies."

"Russia's Confidence."

New York World: "If Russia can move troops for its ally's sake to the western front it must be from supreme confidence in its own ability to hold Germany and Austria in check from the Baltic to the Balkans and drive home its campaign against the Turks in the Caucasus."

Would Gladly Assist Boy If His, Says Thaw

New York, April 27.—Harry K. Thaw has issued a signed statement, denying the legitimacy of Russell, the son born to his wife in 1910. Thaw who is visiting here, was commenting on the divorce trial which ended in his favor a few days ago. The case was tried in Pittsburgh.

Under the laws of Pennsylvania the testimony at the trial will not necessarily debar the boy as an heir to the Thaw estate now estimated at more than $40,000,000.

The law of that state presumes all children born in wedlock to be legitimate even though the husband and wife are living apart. The burden of proof is thrown upon those questioning the legitimacy of the child so born.

Thaw's statement follows:

"The publication of the evidence in my divorce case was unexpected and I regret that the court would not seal the papers. It seems hard upon Miss Nesbitt that this should come out, when one remembers that the names of over twenty men were successfully kept hushed up by Mr. Jerome at my first trials.

WISHED TO SHIELD WIFE.

"Since she put me aside in 1908, when I went to Matteawan, she has been unprotected, and I wish to shield her as much as possible.

"I had my attorneys move to have all the papers sealed but the court refused to grant the motion upon the ground that the testimony was not injurious to public morales. It was a plain case of infidelity and a spurious child, but with nothing the court thought unfit for publication.

"We did our best to suppress it. However, now that it has been published I feel that I should point out that the proceedings prove irrefutably the statement made by me four years ago that the child was not mine. The child was born in October, 1910.

"It will be recalled that Miss Nesbitt turned against me in the open court before Judge Mills in White Plains in June, 1909. At this time, she openly arrayed herself against me as her public testimony will show. This was eighteen months before the child was born.

"Naturally after her testimony against me, even our business relations were strained and formal.

FIRST HINT IN PAPER.

"The first I ever heard of an alleged child was in the spring of 1912, when it was almost two years old, and then my first hint came from a newspaper story. Until this story appeared I knew nothing any more than did the general public.

"No man wilfully would deny his own offspring, irrespective of any acts of its mother, and were there the slightest doubt in the matter as to whether I was the father, I wish to state emphatically that I would protect the child, support it, and do willingly and gladly. Were there the slightest doubt I would be the last person in the world to shirk the responsibility.

"I believe that divorces are injurious and am against them, but the testimony that was produced in my suit bears out the fact that I found conditions which left only one course open to me. Up to the time of the filing of the papers I would willingly have condoned any offenses were it not for the fact that this child belongs to another man.

"Were the child mine I would have have taken not only it into my home but for its sake Miss Nesbitt. However she did not wish to return as it was she who insisted upon separation two years after my arrest while I was in prison for killing the man who had ruined her life."

No one ever lost money, temper, character or the esteem of others, by being truly polite at home, in public gatherings, in business, on the street, in school or church.

Man can build the house and roof it in, a resistance against the storms and elements; but the man with all his genius and artisan science cannot make the home; that ever has and ever will be the task of woman. It is she alone that can bring to it warmth and beauty. Here she reigns supreme.

Afflicted with Lame Back

THREE YEARS AGO

COULD NOT SWEEP THE FLOOR.

Women are coming to understand that weak, lame and aching backs from which they suffer so much excruciating pain and agony are due to wrong action of the kidneys.

The kidneys are overtaxed—given more work than they can do, and when the back aches and pains it is hard for a woman to look after her household duties, for no woman can be strong and well when the kidneys are out of order.

On the first sign of any weakness in the back Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken. They go right to the seat of the trouble, cure the weak, aching back, and prevent any serious kidney trouble liable to follow.

Mrs. L. Goodhew, 683 Manning Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes: "I take great pleasure in writing you, stating the benefit I have received by using Doan's Kidney Pills. About three years ago I was terribly afflicted with lame back, and was so bad I could not even sweep the floor. I was advised to use Doan's Kidney Pills, and before I had used one box there was a great improvement, and my back was completely cured. I highly recommend 'Doan's' for lame back."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Bianca

A Story of Medieval Art

By ETHEL HOLMES

Satan, while always sowing, reaps by periods. Every now and again the world is astonished at some new outbreak of evil—not the ordinary criminality that is always with us, confined largely to those who are born to crime, but a harvest of villainy among those who are supposed to stand for morality.

An epidemic of crime settled upon Italy during the middle ages which pertained more especially to the very highest classes. It became the custom to eliminate one's enemy or such as stood in one's way by poison. Scientists instead of devoting themselves to interpreting the secrets of nature with a view to preserving life used their talents to discover means of producing death. Persons in authority instead of trying to benefit those under their sway sought the means of secretly putting out of the way those who opposed them.

The city of Florence, then in the province of Tuscany, has always been the home of art. A young man in Pisa, Giovanni Tolci, having shown marvelous artistic talents, removed to Florence to get the benefit of the masters and the works of art to be found in that city. So rapid was his progress and so great became his fame that he received a commission from the pope to paint an altar piece.

During Giovanni Tolci's stay in Florence, while loitering one evening on the banks of the Arno, he saw a girl on one of the bridges looking down into the river. Going on to the bridge, Giovanni stood near her and saw that she was looking at the mild Italian heavens reflected in the water. From her rapt appearance he surmised that she possessed that artistic temperament which was in himself. He was seized with a desire to know her and, inquiring who she was, secured an introduction.

Bianca Cellini was not an artist herself, but art was so natural to her that she was of inestimable benefit to Giovanni. She was able to warn him when he was entering upon false ground and to encourage him when he struck that which promised well. So keen was her artistic sense that he came to rely upon her entirely and would not trust his work until she had criticised it.

Bianca came to love the man in whose career she was interested. As for Giovanni, he was absorbed in his work. If he loved Bianca he was not aware of it, though there was a vague feeling within him that she was necessary to him as a companion as well as a critic.

When his altar piece was finished he left Florence with it to take it to Rome. On parting with Bianca he said to her:

"Whatever success I have made in this picture I owe to you. If it brings me fame you are entitled to share it with me. There is no way by which you can do that so well as becoming my wife. That you shall be whenever you choose."

"You owe me nothing, Giovanni," was the reply. "If I have guided you on right artistic paths it has been with the greatest ease. I have had simply to see with my eyes and speak with my voice."

Giovanni, not considering that his cold offer was unlikely to draw any different reply, was much disappointed in it. It is possible that it revealed to him that his heart was in Bianca's possession. At any rate, he went to Rome wishing that she had accepted his offer.

His altar piece was accepted by the pope and when set up in the church for which it had been created was much admired. The new artistic star that had arisen was much courted. At times when he was surrounded by flatterers Bianca was forgotten, but as soon as he was alone she resumed her accustomed place in his mind, and he remembered that it was largely due to her he was enjoying this triumph.

At this time the Borgias were prominent in Rome. Signora Beatrici Borgia, who had married in the celebrated Borgia family, hearing of the fame of the Florentine artist, expressed a desire to see him. She was a very ambitious woman, one who possessed great power over men and who achieved her ends by bringing them under her sway. It occurred to her to make a conquest of this shining light. Why she desired to do so is not clear; but, judging from her character, it is probable that it was simply the eclat the domination of a famous man would give her.

Signora Borgia sent for Giovanni Tolci and commissioned him to paint her portrait. During the sittings she was dressed in the most becoming costumes that could be devised. She was as beautiful as she was unscrupulous and strove to dominate the artist through his senses. While he was at work he kept her talking in order to bring out an animated expression. She contrived to turn the conversation upon what interested him, for she was desirous to learn if his heart was preoccupied.

It was not long before she got the story of Bianca. Giovanni, who was not yet conscious of the fact that Bianca possessed his whole heart, spoke only of what he owed her as a counselor, but the wily signora knew more about what he really felt than he did himself. Since he dwelt continually on the little Florentine girl and would talk of no one else Signora Borgia was not long in inferring that he loved her.

All the arts the temptress possessed, all the flattery, the appeals to the senses, seemed to elicit but little response from the artist. The last named appeal was the strongest, but its effect was only temporary. She prolonged the sittings by requiring him to do over certain features, but even with this advantage she knew before the picture was finished that the Florentine girl was keeping from her the man she wished to conquer.

When nothing more seemed to be done to the portrait Signora Borgia said to the artist:

"This girl to whom you owe so much should share the triumph you are sure to make in this portrait. I am going to send for her to come to Rome to visit me, that she may enjoy your success."

Giovanni, who had arranged with the pope for a mural decoration that would take him at least a year to finish, eager to see again the girl who by this time he realized was necessary to him, gladly fell in with the plan. He sent a letter to Bianca with the one dispatched by the signora, assuring her of the change there was in him since he had left her and begging her to accept the invitation. Indeed, he wrote a genuine love letter.

Bianca, who was desirous to learn more of the woman whose portrait her lover was painting, wrote that she would come to Rome, but would feel bound to visit an aunt living there who had long ago given her a standing invitation. Signora Borgia insisted that when Bianca came she must stop at her palazzo with her and Giovanni.

Bianca went to Rome and a few days after her arrival went with Giovanni in the evening to the palazzo of Signora Beatrici to supper. If the artist had given away his feelings for Bianca in her absence he certainly confirmed the matter in her presence. His love was apparent as the sun in heaven.

There seems to be a sixth sense in women that enables them to discern antagonism from members of their own sex. Signora Borgia made a great ado over Bianca, expressing herself as delighted with her and folding her in an embrace. Giovanni, however, noticed a tremor pass over his beloved, and when released from her hostess' arms she was deadly pale. But she soon recovered herself and seemed to be trying to show her appreciation of her reception. When her wraps had been laid aside supper was announced and the three went into the room where it was laid.

For an hour they continued to partake of a sumptuous repast. The signora pressed her guest to partake of her wines, of which there was a great variety, saying: "Try this; it comes from Sorrento and is considered very fine. Here is some from Frascati. Perhaps you will prefer it to the other. This muscatel is delicious." In this way she endeavored to persuade her guests to drink. Bianca sipped the first glass handed her, and nothing could induce her to touch another. She also gave an appealing glance to her lover, which served its purpose, for when the signora placed a glass before him he simply wet his lips with the wine.

Toward the end of the meal the hostess reached for a dish of figs on the center of the table and handed one to each of her guests. Bianca noticed that when the signora handed her a fig she selected it carefully from the dish. Bianca took it and noticed a tiny mark on it so near the color of the fig as scarcely to be distinguished. She left the fruit on her plate without touching it.

"Do you not like figs?" asked the signora.

"I do not care especially for them," was the reply.

Giovanni had broken his fig open and handed it to his sweetheart, saying:

"Try mine, and I will eat yours."

Bianca clapped her hand on the fig on her plate, uttering at the same time a cry. The hostess looked at her as if in astonishment and said:

"Give it to me. I will eat it."

Bianca held it in her clinched hand. "No," she said; "I will take it home and eat it there."

The signora changed from imperious to fun.

"Give it to me!" she cried imploringly.

Bianca clutched it all the tighter. The signora strove to take it from her. Bianca begged Giovanni to take and keep it. He did so, and the three stood surveying one another with blanched faces and flaming eyes.

The signora ran into another room. Bianca made for an exit, followed by her lover, and when their hostess returned to the supper room with a stiletto they had vanished.

"What does it all mean?" asked Giovanni of Bianca.

"The fig is poisoned."

And so it proved on applying a test. Signora Borgia was too powerful to warrant an accusation. Giovanni and Bianca returned at once to Florence. He claimed that a swollen wrist would prevent his doing the mural work ordered by the pope and refused to return to Rome.

Of course this refusal was not to be maintained if the pope chose to enforce the order. The holy father would not have done so had not Signora Borgia circulated a report that the swollen wrist was a mere pretext to avoid returning to Rome. This report coming to the pope's ears, he ordered Giovanni to return on pain of incurring the displeasure of the head of the church. In Rome he would be examined by a physician and if his wrist was in a condition to prevent his using a brush he would be excused.

When Giovanni received this new order he bethought himself how to evade it. Signora Borgia's attempt to poison his sweetheart would not be accepted as a reason for defying the head of the church. He purposely wrenched his wrist so that it would require months to heal. Then he went to Rome, was examined and excused.

SMOOTH TO GET BUTTER.

Problem Was One of Hardest for Kaiser's Subjects in Berlin.

How to get a quarter of a pound of butter is a problem which every Berliner has had to study. Lack of butter has been one of the most difficult of the many problems with which the Berliners have been confronted, says a despatch from The Hague.

A young lady who served in a butter shop was a power to be reckoned with. A customer would approach here with an ingratiating smile and greet her as "My dear Fraulein," or yet more softly as 'Fraulein chen," and then speak sweetly about the purchase of many things which were hardly wanted, then disappear, only to return the next day with a little present and more smiles and then at the critical moment:

"Can you please reserve for me a quarter of a pound of butter, my dear Fraulein?"

Young men declared that the only way to get butter was to be the sweetheart of a butter-Fraulein. It is even said that married women urged their husbands to the same plan for the same end.

Butter scarcity reigned in the German capital for three months. Lines of people stood for hours, often only to find the supply exhausted before their turn came. Confectioners who also dealt in butter would only sell to their regular clients.

But now the reign of terror is to end. Butter cards have come. The authorities are to try and provide a weekly ration for each person, which the public will be able to get without the sugar-sweet smiles and expensive tricks of the past.

A cloth wrung out in very hot water and applied, very often will remove discoloration from bruised flesh.

A raw potato cut in half and rubbed on the fingers stained with vegetable parings, will remove the discolorations.

A cup of cold, boiled rice makes the griddle cakes or muffins lighter and more easily digested.

The HOME CIRCLE COLUMN

WANTED.

As good health on Sunday as during the rest of the week; the same ability to attend religious services as to engage in the usual active duties of life.

As great care in listening to religious instructions as is given to scrutinizing each new dress, cloak, bonnet, etc., worn by those in attendance.

As great ability in learning our own faults as those of our neighbors. With the supply of this want the world will soon be renovated, society much improved, and all made happier.

Weather to suit all, or better still, people who are disposed to be suited by the weather.

* * *

Young man, there is one thing you cannot do. You cannot make a success in life unless you work. Older men than you have tried it and have failed. You cannot loaf around the street corner, smoke, tell stories and sponge on someone else without making a failure of life. You must learn a trade or get into some honest business. If you don't you will become a chronic loafer, and there is no place in the world for loafers. The ripe fruit is at the top of the tree and you must climb if you get it or some smart man will pluck it from you. Do something no matter how small or how low the wages, it will be a starter. Help yourself and others will help you. There is no royal road to success; will, grit and endurance are the qualities that lead to it.

* * *

This is our recipe for home happiness. Who will give us a better one? Love, peppered with patience, salted with suavity, dampened with discretion, crowded with cheerfulness, showered with sunshine, tinctured with trust, flavoured with forgiveness, freighted with frankness, charged with confidence, complete with contentment, heroic and hopeful.

* * *

The person who wantonly puts a thorn in the loving heart of a little child will feel the rankling of that thorn in his or her own heart some day, in a wound no later repentance can ever heal.

* * *

Love is the great homemaker, that makes even the drudgery of housekeeping a pleasure, and home life a foretaste of the bliss of heaven. One cannot get too much love into one's homemaking, but easily too little.

* * *

There are many so-called homes that do not deserve the name at all. Home means comfort but when we have it fixed up so elaborately that we must sit in the garret or the back yard to genuinely enjoy ourselves then it is high time we made a change and turned out the too-good-to-use articles and substitute for them the real homely things that we could enjoy every day of the year and every moment of the day.

* * *

Though you may be cut off from your early associates, and though you may be separated from all your kindred, young man, is there not a room somewhere that you can call your own? Though it be the fourth story of a third class boarding house, into that room gather books, pictures and a harp. Hang your mother's portrait over the mantle. Bid unholy mirth stand back from that threshold. Consecrate some spot in that room with the knee of prayer. By the memory of other days, a father's counsel, a mother's love and a sister's confidence call it home.

* * *

The over-dressed child is always the unhappy child. She is a pert Miss who has learned early to regard overmuch the pomps and vanities of life, or she is a poor little discontented victim, who has never had a chance for childish play, and looks with envy at the ragged, little tumbling urchins who make mud pies on the roadside.

* * *

Let us all remember that the higher and happier our home life, the more wisely and better we may hope to do the work that lies waiting for us beyond it. A pleasant place to come home to is the greatest energizer a man can have. Then let us strive with an earnest and constant purpose to make and keep the home cheerful, inviting and pleasant.

* * *

Home is a magic word, and we seldom try to analyse it. A little Polish girl in a public school was asked recently to write a definition of home. She wrote, "A home is where people live, and where a man or somebody comes home and finds people there, and then eats!" And then eats! To how many thousands of men that is the end and aim of coming home! To how many thousands of women the preparation of the food to be eaten is the chief business of home making.

Unsightly Pimples Covered His Face.

All diseases and blemishes of the skin are caused by the blood being in an impure condition.

You cannot make a good complexion from the outside; you must get to the root of the trouble. You must make the blood pure and rich by taking a medicine that will drive out all the impurities and poisons from the blood; one that drives out everything from the system that is the cause of these unsightly skin eruptions.

The best blood cleansing medicine on the market to-day is Burdock Blood Bitters; a medicine that has been used with the greatest success for the past forty years; a medicine you don't experiment with when you buy it.

Mr. Lennox D. Cooke, Indian Path, N.S., writes: "I am writing you a few lines to tell you what Burdock Blood Bitters has done for me. Last winter my face was covered with pimples. I tried different kinds of medicine, and all seemed to fail. I was one day to a friend's house, and there they advised me to use B.B.B., so I purchased two bottles, and before I had them taken I found I was getting better. I got two more, and when they were finished I was completely cured. I find it is a great blood purifier, and I recommend it to all."

B.B.B. is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

YOU CAN

cure that old sore or ulcer from which you have been suffering for so long, if you will only use an ointment that is capable of reaching the seat of the trouble. Zam-Buk can do this because of its unusual penetrating power. Also, Zam-Buk is a strong germicide—germs cannot live where Zam-Buk is applied, so that the germs are destroyed not only on the surface, but in all the diseased underlying tissue. Then healing commences; new tissue replacing the old and diseased, until the sore is thoroughly and permanently cured.

The case of Miss Frances Daudin, of Somerset, Man., verifies the above statement. She writes: "I suffered for over twenty years with an ulcer on my leg, and all the remedies tried during that time proved ineffective. Several doctors treated me, but I got no benefit. Finally I tried Zam-Buk, and I am thankful to say that after perseverance with this ointment I am now completely cured."

Zam-Buk is also splendid for eczema, abscesses, boils, pimples, ringworm, piles, blood-poisoning, cuts, burns, and all skin injuries and diseases. Best balm for baby's sores. All druggists, 50c. box. 3 for $1.25, or from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

GIRL'S COAT.

By Anabel Worthington.

This captivating model shows that the schoolgirl may have her coat made with the military note or tone that is now growing to be popular in garments for the grown-ups. However, we may omit the cape in this design and have a decidedly jaunty looking coat, as the small picture above the large one shows. When the cape is used for this model the fronts roll back at the neck to form revers that are faced with contrasting goods and which take line with the collar. An embroidered design in the lower corner of each pointed front of the cape enriches it. At a raised waist line a stitched fab braid ornamented mounts an inset in each front of the coat that closely hides in under box plait. A graceful fulness is necessary and beautifying and is greatly aided by these features. When the cape is not employed in making this coat the collar buttons in the style of the "Dutch standing" with a small turnover. In either style a box plait is introduced to each side of the back from the neck to hem and the stitched tabs ornamenting the cuffs are also used at the back. The sleeves have a long cuff of contrasting goods and are finished at the wrist.

This pattern, No. 7,078, is cut in sizes 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. To make the cape coat for a girl of 10 years will require 2¾ yards of material 36 inches wide, ¾ yard of 44 inch material, ¾ yard of contrasting goods. Without the cape 2¼ yards of material will be sufficient.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Conditions in The Tea Market

Tea is the Cheapest Hot Drink Available When You Consider The Number of Cups a Pound Will Make

Conditions in the tea markets of the world have changed considerably since the war. On account of Russia prohibiting the sale of vodka and France putting the ban on absinthe, these countries have become larger consumers of tea. In fact, France and other countries have followed the English custom of serving tea to the troops instead of coffee, and this takes an enormous supply of tea.

These largely increased demands for tea would be sufficient in themselves to have caused a rise in tea values. But, in addition, ocean freight rates are three times normal and insurance rates are very high, and over eighteen million pounds of tea has been lost on vessels which were sunk by the German cruisers and submarines since the war began.

The foregoing facts explain why tea is higher in price than before the war. If you are still paying the same price for tea as you were eight months or so ago you are getting a lower grade than the tea you formerly used. For example, if you are paying 40 cents a pound you are getting the quality that sold at 30 cents a year ago. The old 40-cent quality is now selling at 50 cents—in fact has been selling at this price for months. If anyone has not been enjoying their tea lately they will no doubt find that they have not been getting the same grade or label, consequently it has not tasted so good. The flavor was not so full or so rich.

But at 50, 60, 70 a pound is not dear. In fact it is the cheapest hot drink obtainable when you consider the great number of cups a pound will make. At 50 cents a pound the cost per cup is only 1-5 of a cent, so small that it is hardly worth considering.

There are more people enjoying tea to-day than ever before, as what other beverages will give so much real enjoyment at so small a cost. And while tea sells at anywhere near its present moderate prices there is no reason for not enjoying our due share of this delightful beverage.

WHY PEOPLE FEEL DEPRESSED IN THE COLD WEATHER

Why is tiredness and langour so prevalent just now? A physician explained that the cold of winter drives blood from the surface of the body to the liver. Normally one-fourth of the whole blood supply is in the liver, and when more blood is accumulated in that organ everything goes wrong.

No better remedy exists than Dr. Hamilton's Pills which are composed of such vegetable extracts as Mandrake and Butternut, and possess wonderful liver stimulating powers. It's a marvel the way Hamilton's Pills clear the blood of the poisonous humours. They put new life into worn out bodies, build up the appetite, bring back a reserve of nerve energy, tide folks over the cold days of winter and the depressing days of spring. For your health and body comfort get a 25c. box of Dr. Hamilton's Pills to-day.

HAVE DARK HAIR AND LOOK YOUNG

Nobody Can Tell When You Darken Gray, Faded Hair with SAGE TEA.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural colour and beauty to the hair.

A well-known down-town druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural colour and looks glossy, soft and beautiful. This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure mitigation or prevention of disease.

WIPED OUT IN A FAMOUS RUSH

Of all the tales of gallantry told, and yet to be told, of the desperate fighting in Gallipoli, none perhaps will surpass the heroism of the Norfolk territorials, with whom the King's Sandringham servants went to fight. Of them Sir Ian Hamilton wrote in his now historic despatch:—"Among these ardent souls was part of a fine company enlisted from the King's Sandringham estates. Nothing more was ever seen or heard of any of them. They charged into the forest and were lost to sight or sound."

Writing of this magnificent charge into the "misty unknown" a correspondent from King's Lynn says:—"It is a story of the men who never came back: of Colonel Beauchamp and sixteen officers who led 250 men across ploughed open fields, thinking of nothing but the order, 'Anafarta must be taken by dusk.' To-day only a dozen, it would seem, are alive as wounded prisoners in Turkish hands, some day to tell a tale, perhaps that will add a silver lining to one of the most glorious but saddest records of the British army.

THE GRIM ORDER

"It is a breathless story. Think of every eligible man from the King's Sandringham estates enlisting in a body and forming a section of Company, men whose wildest "thrills" had been talk of a recalcitrant bull on the royal estate. Others from office stools and counter. Twelve months of skilled training in which Colonel Beauchamp was a past master. A pleasant cruise across open blue seas abroad the Aquitania, and a midnight landing on an enemy's unknown and unmapped coast.

"'Anafarta must be taken by dusk.' That was the responsibility intrusted to them. For more than two and a half miles, across open country which would not shelter a field mouse, these Norfolk neophytes to gunfire charge. Maybe it was the very gallantry of these super-heroes that was their undoing. The Turks could not face that thin line of glittering Norfolk steel. They broke and fled.

"Bold and confident, Colonel Beauchamp, waving a simple Nilgherri cane, outpaced his men. 'On, the Norfolks, on!' 'Come on, the Holy Boys!' and 'Forward, the Hungry Ninth!' came the resounding echo from these ardent souls close upon their leader's heels.

AND THEN—WHO KNOWS?

"The fighting grew hotter: the Norfolks came into a terrible enfilading fire on both sides. Shrapnel and machine guns swept the earth bare of those men whom the Turkish infantry could not face. Exhausted by thirst and decimated by the fire, into the woods they continued. And then—who knows? Only twelve survive, and they are wounded prisoners.

"So to-day the little village of West Newton and Sedbingham and the cottages on the King's estates are all in mourning. Gardener's keepers and woodmen have paid the great sacrifice. Aching hearts are scarcely less heavy because the King himself has tried again and again to secure a release from suspense. These women, materially, want for nothing. Every family receives from the King the same pay as if the man was at home."

Hippodrome Dark, Makes Audience Feel Blindness

NEW YORK, April 24.— Unusual things have happened at Sunday night concerts at the Hippodrome, but nothing more startling than a little illustration of how it feels to be blind, which was staged there last night, has been seen there in a long time.

Yesterday was devoted to the Permanent Blind Relief War Fund, so far as the Hippodrome was concerned. Instead of one, there were two concerts, one in the afternoon and the other in the evening. At both $20,000 was made for soldiers and sailors who have been deprived of their sight when fighting for the Allies.

In the course of the evening performance, at which more celebrities of the theatrical world appeared than on any recent similar occasion, an appeal was made for money to be added to the receipts to the concerts. Miss Billie Burke was called upon to help the appeal. Before the glaring footlights she stood, gowned in white, a vision of loveliness. Then she recited:

"I am going to ask a simple thing of you,
Something that may cause you all to smile.
Watch me and do exactly as I do
For just a very, very little while;
Hold out your hands, palms up.
That's right
Now place them firmly on your eyes.
You must not peep until I say, 'Time's up,'
For that would spoil our little enterprise."

Experiment in Blindness.

Following her, the audience put its hands up to its eyes, and at the word "enterprise" every light in the house went out. When Miss Burke said the words, "Time's up," for a second time the house was in perfect darkness. The vision in white on the stage had vanished. It was as if the whole audience had suddenly become blind.

When the lights were turned on again it was time to pass little promissory notes through the audience. Some were for $20, some for $10 and some for $1. Every person in the audience received one from the hands of the young women of the society who had been selling programmes earlier in the evening.

"TIZ" GLADDENS SORE, TIRED FEET

No Puffed-up, Burning, Tender, Aching Feet—No Corns or Callouses.

"Tiz" makes sore, burning, tired feet fairly dance with delight. Away go the aches and pains, the corns, callouses, blisters, bunions and chilblains.

"Tiz" draws out the acids and poisons that puff up your feet. No matter how hard you work, how long you dance, how far you walk, or you remain on your feet, "Tiz" brings restful foot comfort. "Tiz" is magical, grand, wonderful for tired, aching, swollen, smarting feet. Ah! how comfortable, how happy you feel. Your feet just tingle for joy; shoes never hurt or seem tight.

Get a 25 cent box of "Tiz" now from any druggist or departmental store. End foot torture forever—wear smaller shoes, keep your feet fresh, sweet and happy. Just think! a whole year's foot comfort for only 25 cents.

SAYS WE BECOME CRANKS ON HOT WATER DRINKING

Hopes every man and woman adopts this splendid morning habit.

Why is man and woman, half the time, feeling nervous, despondent, worried; some days headachy, dull and unstrung; some days really incapacitated by illness.

If we all would practice inside-bathing, what a gratifying change would take place. Instead of thousands of half-sick, anaemic-looking souls with pasty, muddy complexions we should see crowds of happy, healthy, rosy-cheeked people everywhere. The reason is that the human system does not rid itself each day of all the waste which it accumulates under our present mode of living. For every ounce of food and drink taken into the system nearly an ounce of waste material must be carried out, else it ferments and forms ptomaine-like poisons which are absorbed into the blood.

Just as necessary as it is to clean the ashes from the furnace each day, before the fire will burn bright and hot, so we must each morning clear the inside organs of the previous day's accumulation of indigestible waste and body toxins. Men and women, whether sick or well, are advised to drink each morning, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, as a harmless means of washing out of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the indigestible material, waste, sour bile and toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Millions of people who had their turn at constipation, bilious attacks, acid stomach, nervous days and sleepless nights have become real cranks about the morning inside-bath. A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will not cost much at the drug store, but is sufficient to demonstrate to anyone, its cleansing, sweetening and freshening effect upon the system.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

Peter Delivered from Prison. Acts 12:1-19.

Golden Text: The angel of Jehovah encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them. Psalm 34:7.

1. Verses 1,2. Who was this Herod and what is he noted for in New Testament history?

2. Who was the James whom this Herod had slain with the sword?

3. How can you explain that the religious element of the Jews could be pleased because Herod had slain James?

4. Peter at this time was devoting all his energies to doing good both to the bodies and the souls of men, and preaching the most exalted gospel of brotherhood, why therefore should his death be desired by the Jews?

5. Verse 4. What is the compensation for good and true men who deliberately risk their lives for the sake of helping their fellows to nobler living?

6. Verse 5. When Peter was in prison, what kind of prayer did the church make on his behalf?

7. What reason is there to think that they expected Peter to be released from prison in answer to their prayers?

8. Is it right or wrong, and why to make a definite request for a thing, without the faith that our prayers will be answered?

9. Verse 6-10. Would you say, or not and why, that a miraculous deliverance such as Peter's is possible now?

10. Is it wise, or otherwise, and why, for us to pray for the apparently impossible?

11. Did this angel have a material body or was he a spirit only? Why?

12. If the soldiers had been awake, is it probable, or not, and why? that they would have seen and heard the angel, as Peter did?

13. Is there any reason to think that the human spirit has a body other than the physical? Why? (See 1 Cor. 15 40,41.)

14. Verse 11. Can you give any reason for beliving as some day that God has delegated an angel to care for every individual?

15. Verses 12-16. Can you give any description of this Mary, at whose home this historic prayer meeting was being held?

16. What explanation can you give of Rhoda not opening the gate to Peter for gladness?

17. How much real faith did these Christians have that their prayers for Peter would be answered when they thought the girl was "mad" that is beside herself, for saying Peter was at the gate?

18. What is the degree of probability that persons with spiritual bodies are all around us and we cannot see them?

19. Verse 17. What effect would Peter's personal experience be likely to have upon this company, as to its credibility, and what effect ought it to have upon us?

20. Verses 18,19. If Herod had been a spiritual man, or even fair minded, could he have found out how Peter had made his escape and not have put Paul's keeper to death?

Lesson for Sunday, May 7, 1916. The Missionaries of Antioch. Acts 11 19-30; 12. 25—13,12.

LUCKY AND UNLUCKY THING.

Mole on Your Back, You'll Have Money by Sack, One of Omens.

"Lucky" and "unlucky" have come to be applied to gathering blossoms, to horse shoes, to the colour of hair, to your manner of "saying things"—in a word, to every possible event in life, says Answers, London. It is unlucky to "have a dead blossom"; it is unlucky to go out with your "shoelaces untied"—the latter we naturally believe; it is unlucky to bring "hawthorn blossoms within the house"; it is lucky to hear the cricket."

The latter is, of course, supposed to bring luck into the house.

Very lucky it is to find a spider on your clothes; it is called a money spider in many parts of the country.

Feather beds should not be turned on a Sunday. If your teeth grow widely apart you will be a traveller. If you have a mole on your back you will have money by the sack. On the other hand, a mole at the base of the neck shows that "you will be hanged."

Caesar, Napoleon, Bismarck, and others were not above the superstition of "lucky" and "unlucky" days. Henry VIII., of his son Edward, and of his daughters Mary and Elizabeth. Isn't it strange that they all should have died upon this day? But it is a fact.

Anyhow, what is luck?

To remove shoe blacking that has been spilled on clothing use vinegar.

Most Eminent Medical Authorities Endorse It.

Dr. Eberle and Dr. Braithwaite as well as Dr. Simon—all distinguished authors—agree that whatever may be the disease, the urine seldom fails in furnishing us with a clue to the principles upon which it is to be treated, and accurate knowledge concerning the nature of disease can thus be obtained. If backache, scalding urine or frequent urination bother or distress you, or if uric acid in the blood has caused rheumatism, gout or sciatica or you suspect kidney or bladder trouble just write Dr. Pierce at the Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N.Y.; send a sample of urine and describe symptoms. You will receive free medical advice after Dr. Pierce's chemist has examined the urine—this will be carefully done without charge, and you will be under no obligation. Dr. Pierce during many years of experimentation has discovered a new remedy which he finds is thirty-seven times more powerful than lithia in removing uric acid from the system. If you are suffering from backache or the pains of rheumatism, go to your best druggist and ask for a 50-cent box of "Anuric" put up by Dr. Pierce. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for weak women and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for the blood have been favorably known for the past forty years and more. They are standard remedies to-day—as well as Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets for the liver and bowels. You can get a large trial package for 10c. of any one of these remedies by writing Dr. Pierce.

Doctor Pierce's Pellets are unequaled as a Liver Pill. One tiny, Sugar-coated Pellet a Dose. Cure Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

MAXWELL HAS LANDED IN IRELAND

BRITISH BATTLESHIP RUSSELL IS SUNK

Hero Of Egyptian War Has Taken Charge of the Situation

General Sir John Maxwell in Command of The Troops Which Are Expected to Quickly Suppress The Irish Rebellion---His Point of Landing and Details Concerning the Progress of Revolt Are Kept Secret---A Rigid Censorship Being in Force---French Score Heavily in Air Battles.

NO IMPORTANT ACTIVITY IN THE WEST

LONDON, April 28. — General Sir John Maxwell, hero of the Egyptian war of 1882, arrived in Ireland to-day and assumed immediate command of the troops, which will quickly suppress the rebellion. His point of landing is a secret, as are all other details concerning the progress of the rebellion in the past twenty-four hours. The public has no knowledge as to the extent to which the revolt has spread, beyond Premier Asquith's statement, mentioning the western counties in particular. A limited passenger service to Ireland was restored to-day. Rigid censorship on all despatches from Irish cities continues. The public is demanding the early execution of Sir Roger Casement, who is described in the newspapers as "Strutting about his cell in the Tower of London, boasting of his success in starting the Dublin revolts." Statements that Sir Roger's life would be spared because he is mentally unbalanced, have aroused intense indignation.

French Score in Many Air Raids

Special to the Examiner.

PARIS, April 28.—(French Official).—Numerous air raids along the Western front, in which several German planes, including a Fokker, were brought down, were reported by the War Office to-day. There were no important activities on the whole front, excepting an intermittent bombardment north-west of Verdun.

A French air squadron dropped eighteen bombs on La Marche station in the Woevre. One German plane was attacked by the French and dropped near Douaumont, badly damaged, and another fell near Montfaucon. A French aviator, piloting a Nieuport monoplane, defeated a Fokker, which fell behind the German lines. The Germans dropped shells at infrequent intervals during the night in the region of Avocourt, Esnes and Fromezy.

German Submarine Sunk Off East Coast

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 28.—A German submarine was sunk off the east coast of England yesterday, the Admiralty announced this afternoon. The crew of eighteen surrendered.

British Steamer Is Sunk By a Sub.

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, April 28.—The British steamer Industry was sunk by a submarine in the Atlantic, the Admiralty announced this afternoon.

The steamer Industry was 4,000 tons and unarmed. She was bound for the United States.

Will Huns Accede To U. S. Demands

Special to The Examiner:

THE HAGUE, April 28.—Positive assurances have reached the American Embassy in Berlin that there will be no diplomatic rupture between Germany and the United States, growing out of the present crisis, it was learned here to-day from reliable sources. It is believed Germany will accede to most of the United States demands.

German Machine Gun a Deserter

PETROGRAD, April 28.—How a machine gun was forced to desert the German Army is recounted in the story of the heroism of a sixteen-year-old Italian volunteer in the Russian Army. Constantine Zepolli whose part as the leading figure in the episode earned one of the two St. George's crosses he has won.

Overbearing his commander expressing a wish that some one 'would silence or capture" a gun which was stationed at troublesome proximity to the Russian trenches, Zepolli, on his own initiative, crawled on his stomach for a hundred yards, located the position of the, returned from the danger zone and conferred with his trench fellows, and crept forth once more, this time dragging a coil of stout rope. Reaching the gun, he tied one end around it without being discovered, and again reached his own lines, with the free end of the rope in his clutch.

Presently the Germans were astonished to observe the gun disappearing toward the Russian trenches. It was successfully dragged from their possession, a number of Germans being killed in an effort to prevent its capture.

NINE DIE IN AIR RAID ON TRIESTE MONASTERY

VIENNA, April 28.—Nine persons were killed, five of them children; five wounded and a monastery destroyed in an air raid on Trieste by Italian aviators, the Austrian War Office announced in an official statement dated April 21. The statement adds:

"The Silesian Monastery, in the chapel of which 400 children were attending divine service, was destroyed. By this attack the Italians forfeited every right to have their towns spared."

"RUSSELL" SUNK IN MEDITERRANEAN SAYS ADMIRALTY

British Battleship With Tonnage of 14000 Pounds Has Gone Down According to Official Announcement This Afternoon.

WAS AN OLD SHIP

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 28.—The British battleship Russell has been sunk in the Mediterranean, the Admiralty announced this afternoon. The Russell was one of the older British battleships, having been constructed in 1900-01. She displaced 14,000 tons, and was 405 feet long with a beam of 75 feet. She was built at a cost of about five million dollars. The Russell normally carried a crew of 750 men.

It is assumed that H.M.S. Russell was sunk by a German submarine or an Austrian submarine, while protecting transports with Russian troops bound for Marseilles. A Paris despatch to-day says another large convoy of Russian troops arrived there to-day.

About 125 officers and men of the Russell are missing and believed lost.

Admiral Freemantle, Capt. W. B. Smith, 22 officers and 676 men of the Russell's crew were saved.

Magistrate's Dog Was Poisoned

Dr. Fortune Was Called in and The Dog Saved From The Higher Dog Life

The dog which William Bailey committed to the tender mercies of Police Magistrate Dumble before leaving the city and which a couple of evenings ago, had a narrow escape from being poisoned, was able to attend police court this morning. The man who saved the animal from passing into the higher dog life, was Dr. Fortune, the well-known local veterinary surgeon. He applied restoratives and brought the canine around.

News in Advertising

Some advertising is educational. It gives the reader real information that will prove useful and profitable. It gives a new point of view and often upsets old ideas and prejudices. To make advertising valuable because it gives real news is the best kind of publicity, and that kind of advertising is always welcome to the columns of The Examiner.

There is a good example of this in a series of ads of Oak Hall now appearing in our columns. The W. E. Sanford Company has the largest plant in Canada for the manufacture of ready-to-wear clothes, and has a reputation for sterling integrity that was founded by the late Senator Sanford and maintained by his successors. This company, which owns and operates the Oak Hall store, is making a brand of ready-to-wear clothes that is in a class by itself and in its advertisements is demonstrating why such garments are superior. Large capital, enormous output and efficient methods enable them to apply labour saving and money saving principles that would be impossible for smaller concerns. As the clothes are sold direct from manufacturer to consumer, the advantage of the buyer is obvious. The advertisements are well worth following. The first of the series appears to-day.

136TH TO MOBILIZE.

Cobourg, April 28.—It is expected that the 136th Battalion will mobilize in Cobourg about Monday next. This will mean finding accommodation for three hundred men who are stationed at different county recruiting centres. It is expected that a couple of the summer hotels will be utilized.

Don't Miss Opening of "The Harbour of Doubt"

Don't fail to read the Examiner's new serial story, "The Harbour of Doubt," by Frank Williams, which will be commenced in the Examiner to-morrow. You will meet some interesting characters and read of interesting adventure in a new field. "The Harbour of Doubt" measures up well to the high standard of the serial stories published by the Examiner in the past, and no reader who likes an exciting tale, well told, can afford to miss this story. Watch for it to-morrow.

VICTIM OF WEDNESDAY'S ACCIDENT IS BURIED WITH MILITARY HONOURS

Funeral of Pte. John Boik, Young Russian Member of 93rd Battalion Who Was Drowned In The Otonabee, Was Impressive Affair---Service at the Armouries---To-day's Orders and General Military News.

Pte. John Boik, the young Russian member of No. 1 Platoon, "A" Company of the 93rd Battalion, who was drowned in the Otonabee River on Wednesday night, was buried in Little Lake Cemetery this afternoon, with full military honours, the 93rd Battalion following the hearse to the grave. Major Davidson, Chaplain of the 93rd, conducted service at the Armouries, after which the impressive cortege was formed, headed by the firing party, composed of members of the Machine Gun Section, in charge of Sergt. J. Hawthorne and Lance Corp. H. Norman. The band of the 93rd, playing the Dead March in "Saul," followed the firing party, and then came the hearse, with the coffin draped in the Union Jack.

At the cemetery the impressive burial service was conducted by Major Davidson, after which the firing squad fired three volleys over the grave and the bugler sounded the "Last Post."

The following men, having enlisted are taken on the strength of the 93rd Overseas Battalion, C.E.F., and posted to the companies placed opposite their name from the date mentioned:

No. 195948, Pte. E. Dowling, 'A' Co., April 26th.

No. 195943, Pte. L. Hele, 'D' Co., April 27.

Transfers.

No. 219829 Pte. W. Tillcock having been transferred from the 80th Overseas Battalion, C.E.F., is taken on the strength of the 93rd Overseas Battalion, C.E.F., and posted to 'C' Co.

J. E. R. MUNRO,
Captain.
Adjutant, 93rd Overseas Battalion C.E.F.

Pte. John Wood of the 86th Machine Gun Battalion, Hamilton, is visiting his home here. There are a number of Peterborough men in the crack Hamilton Battalion, including Lieut. M. M. Robinson.

The Examiner will publish another list to-morrow of Peterborough men who have enlisted outside of the city. Since the first list was published, the Examiner has received a large number of additional names, but there are many more whose friends have not registered them. Will they please see that the necessary information reaches the Examiner so that these names may be incorporated in the third list, which will be published next week.

The death of Pte. John Boik, on Wednesday night, is the third death in the 93rd Battalion since it was organized. Pte. Boik, although unable to speak English very fluently, was a smart soldier and was popular with the men of his platoon.

Toronto Star: When an employee of the City Towel and Apron Supply Co. opened up the premises at 496 King street west on Wednesday he was startled to find William Hyland, a soldier from the 109th Battalion, Lindsay, sleeping in the office. So Hyland faced a charge of shopbreaking. "I was drunk and don't know a thing about it. I broke in the place and fell asleep." But the police know Hyland well, and he was remanded to have his record looked up. The office was ransacked and papers were strewn all over the floor.

Sergt. Ecobichon and the Signallers of the 93rd Battalion who have been attending the School of Signallers at Kingston, have completed their course of training and returned to Peterborough.

Lieut.-Col. F. J. Hamilton, the officer commanding the 126th Overseas (Peel) Battalion, C.E.F., has authorized the following statement of expenditures made by him for recruiting the 126th (Peel) Battalion, and for material which was not included in the regular Government issue to all overseas battalions. Recruiting "B," "C" and "D" Companies, $1,503.61; recruiting "A" Company $421, expenditures for bands, $2,206.15, other expenses, $1,100. Total, $4,230.76.

Simcoe, April 27.—Franis Gratton, who arrived here on Monday as Sergt.-Major to the 153rd, had just finished his second day's work when trouble overtook him. He was arrested by Chief Canning on receipt of advice from Regina which stated that he was wanted in Regina on a charge of bigamy. The offence was alleged to have been committed in August, 1914. Gratton was well known by Staff-Capt. Wake, Q.M., of the 153rd. These men both served in the Princess Pats. Gratton, on arrest, said he could set matters right. He is the third prisoner here charged with bigamy. The other two also are soldiers.

Kingston, April 27.—In St. Paul's Chuch this morning Capt. the Rev. W. F. Fitzgerald united in marriage Freda Wilhelmina, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. W. H. Gimblett, Queen Street, to Lieut. James Leckey, 109th Battalion, Lindsay. The wedding was a military one. At the wedding breakfast the bride cut the cake with the sword of her father, who is overseas.

The 93rd draft for the Canadian Pioneer Battalion has been selected and the men are relieved from further duties with the Battalion and are awaiting orders to report at the headquarters of the Pioneers. Some of the boys are not anxious to leave the 93rd, but are taking the matter philosophically as soldiers.

The 93rd Band were hard at work this morning on stretcher drill. This is the work the bandsmen will do at

BIG CONTRACT SIGNED AT THE LAST MOMENT

Shell Committee Executed a Contract For 1,666,666 Shells on The Day After They Were Advised That D. A. Thomas Was on His Way to Canada to Re-organize The Committee.

CARNEGIE ON STAND

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, April 28—Col. David Carnegie was still on the stand when the Royal Commission investigating the Kyte charges started out on its third day's work to-day.

The examination in chief of the witness by Mr. Hellmuth, K.C., will last all day to-day, and there is every possibility that Mr. Carnegie will have spent four days on the stand, before counsel are through with him. Mr. Hellmuth obtained an admission that members on the committee had money in hand which represented the difference between the price which the manufacturer was to get and that which the British government was to pay. Details of this were not elucidated.

On July 1st last year the committee signed a contract with Sir Sam Hughes to sell him millions of shells with their fuses at prices about which there was some uncertainty before the Commission to-day. A schedule produced by Mr. Hellmuth gave the price of 1,666,666 shells at $17.50, but owing to some error, according to Carnegie, the real price was $16.50. The significance of this contract is that it was signed the day after the Shell committee was advised that Mr. D. A. Thomas, special agent of the British Minister of Munitions, was on his way to Canada to reorganize the Shell committee. It was on June 30 that this information arrived. On July 1st, notwithstanding the fact that it was a Dominion holiday, Sir Sam Hughes and four members of the Shell committee executed the contract in which four members were given the work of supplying all munition orders from the War Office and fixing them at their own prices.

BIG CONCERT IN VICTORIA HALL ON MONDAY EVENING

Band of the 93rd Battalion Assisted By Mr. Asa Buycke Will Give One of The Best Programmes of The Season.

FOR THE MUSIC FUND

The time is drawing near when the 93rd Battalion will be leaving Peterborough, and therefore there will not be many opportunities for the music-lovers of the city to hear the splendid band of the battalion. Realizing this, a big popular-priced concert has been arranged for Monday night in Victoria Hall, and a crowded house should greet Bandmaster Hughes and his khaki clad musicions. The proceeds will be devoted to the music fund of the band. The musical library has constantly to be renewed, and good music costs money, therefore a good attendance on Monday be of the greatest assistance to the band.

The band has arranged a choice programme. Their three big numbers will be of the greatest assistance to "William Tell," the selection from Gounod's "Faust," and the grand selection of master pieces from the works of Verdi, the latter a selection to test the abilities of any band. Two charming descripture numbers "Forest Scenes" and "An Indian Ride," will also be played by the band.

An interesting feature will be the rendition of two local compositions. Mr. Asa Huycke's new march "Irresistible," dedicated to the 93rd, will be played as the band's opening number, while later on in the evening Mr. Huycke will sing a new patriotic song, "Sons of the Empire," for the words and music of which Bandmaster Hughes is responsible. Mr. Huycke will also contribute a piano specialty, Bandsman Gilbert a trombone solo, and the Loader Brothers, of the 93rd Band, a concertina duet. The programme is one of the best of the season, and with the prices only 10c and 15c, there should not be a vacant seat in Victoria Hall on Monday night.

BOARD OF WORKS INSPECTION TRIP

Ald. McIntyre and His Colleagues Visited Each of the Five Wards To-day

The annual inspection trip of the Board of Works was accounted for to-day. This morning Ald. McIntyre chairman of the Board, and his colleagues, foregathered at the city hall where, after a brief conference, it was decided to utilize automobiles for the trip. In former years a 'bus was used, for the reason that stops are frequent and it was more adapted for the purpose required. Each year sees an increase in the work of the Board which means that speedier methods of performing its functions must be adopted.

The Board will visit each of the five wards of the city, and will report on various improvements and alterations that have been asked for. If this does nothing more than stem the tide of deputations that wait upon the Council during the year a good work will have been achieved. It is well to remember that the Board of Works, as well as all other municipal bodies, are restricted to the limits of their appropriations and, therefore it is impracticable to assume extra responsibilities during the year.

CONSERVATIVES HOLD CAUCUS

Railway Situation Considered at a Meeting This Morning

Special to the Examiner:

OTTAWA, April 28.—The Conservatives were in caucus this morning to consider the railway situation. There was no official announcement subsequent to the caucus, but it is learned that Sir Robert Borden and his colleagues laid before their supporters all facts relating to requests of the C. N. R and G. T. P. for assistance. It is stated that there was opposition on the part of some members to any additional assistance in the form of cash being given to railways. There will be another caucus next week.

Nine Double Header Freight Trains To-day

Nine double-header trains of grain from Midland were expected through the city to-day. Up to three o'clock five of them were accounted for, and the others were coming. The grain shipments these days apparently depend solely upon the speed with which the cars can be loaded and got under way. Several of the big lake fleet have docked at Midland recently, and are being unloaded as rapidly as possible. The difficulty of obtaining men is going to interfere to a considerable extent with the moving of this grain, and already this trouble has been experienced.

UNITED STATES RACIAL ELEMENTS.

The Chicago British-American gives some census figures that explain, in part, the undoubted and overwhelming sympathy of the people of the United States with Britain and her allies in this war. The census of 1910 shows that 62 per cent. of the population of the United States is of British stock; 11.7 per cent. of German origin or birth; 11.1 per cent. coloured, and the remainder, 26.6 per cent., of other nationalities. And not all of the German element is Prussianized in its attitude to the great fight for liberty. In case of war with Germany the United States can count upon the loyal support of a vast majority of her population. The German element may be hostile; it is only eleven per cent. of the total population, and less than that if we take out the considerable proportion of civilized Germans who are loyal to the land of their adoption and to the principles upon which its government is founded. By the help of the renegade Americans, Germany has, by her intrigue and plotting, been making a tool and a "holy show" of the United States government; but if the Government decides to defer to the sentiments of the great mass of the people it will make little mistake in ranking itself with Britain and her allies in the fight for what makes the United States the free country she is.

OUTSIDE PLAY GROUNDS.

The beautiful sight of a fair and fresh-faced young lady, walking down Gilmour street on her return from a spring flower expedition to Wallis' Grove—her arms laden with wild flowers no more charming or appealing than herself—is a sight we shall not see for many more spring seasons. We complain with good reason of the lack of foresight of our past civic rulers in neglecting to secure sites for play grounds when they were cheap and plentiful, and well distributed throughout the city; but there are other things to deplore, and one of them is the disappearance of outside playgrounds for elders, represented by the lessening area of wooded country near the city. "Wallis' Grove," west of Peterborough, is the only considerative piece of forest standing within easy reach—ten-minutes' walk—of the centre.. And unfortunately that is apparently doomed. It is every winter the site of lumbering operations, which have robbed it of a great part of its sylvan charm. We can't blame the present proprietors for realizing upon the investment represented in its purchase. It was bought for the lumber it contained, and it is a legitimate thing to convert the standing timber into lumber. But sentimentally and in consideration of the woodland delights its existence makes possible, it is a tremendous pity that these beautiful woods parted by a running stream of spring water, cannot be secured and saved for the enjoyment of the people of the city, to which it has the same relation as High Park in Toronto, which was outside the city when the late Mr. Howard presented it to the public. We need not expect the acquisition of Wallis' Grove for public purposes. We can only deplore the impossibility of getting it, or of its preservation; and deplore its rapid disappearance. We have also to deplore in other ways the destruction of the natural scenic beauty of the city. Commercialism in its strong and ruthless march, has trodden out the beauty of the river banks.. What that beauty would have been if it had been spared, is seen in the short stretch still in its natural state, bar the destruction of tree growth, from the Smith Street Bridge to Water street. All the rest of our magnificent water front in the city has been destroyed to give place to power houses, factories, railway sidings, etc., etc. Of course we could not be the city we are without these things; but if the earlier residents had taken a look forward, they could have provided for the factory buildings and kept the natural beauties too. If the early rulers of Peterborough's destinies had been able to foresee and had reserved sixty or seventy feet on each side of the creek that flows through the town, for drives, we could have had ample space for houses and other buildings, and had winding through the city, the most beautiful drives, flanking the stream, to be found in any city in Canada. We can now only lament these lost opportunities for civic beauty, and, except for action that may yet be taken to preserve and get more open spaces, can adopt to the full, the words of the Quaker poet:

For all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these "it might have been."

PROHIBITION PROOF.

As supporting the arguments for the theoretical benefits of prohibition of drink, the experience of Russia is worth quoting. The remarkable national benefits of Russia's prohibition of vodka (whisky) are set forth in a Petrograd report, which gives a combined official and unofficial statement of the extent of the benefits. They are summarized as follows:

Crime (all kinds) has decreased 62 per cent.
Absenteeism in factories has fallen 50 per cent.
Suicide rate has dropped enormously.
Hospitals formerly overcrowded are not filled.
Efficiency in factories increased 10 to 15 per cent.
Practically every inhabitant is at work.
Savings deposits have increased 8 per cent.
Fire damage has fallen off 38 per cent.
Wages in some districts raised 500 per cent. (This applies to peasants working as day-labourers)
People are eating better and costlier food.
Better clothing is worn by the poorer classes.
Agricultural implement sales 60 per cent. larger.
Imprisonment decreased 72 per cent.

If we even liberally discount these results we shall see that it is probable that if a referendum is ever held in Russia there will be no return to the "open bar." Here we have proof that under much more unfavourable conditions than those that obtain in Ontario, prohibition in Russia is proving that it is well worth while. We have, somewhat superciliously, perhaps, been accustomed to speak of Russia as a semi-barbarous country, under autocratic and, therefroe, oppressive rule. But in what represents the essence of democracy, care for the welfare of the people, and, incidentally, the welfare of the state, Russia's autocracy is, in respect of prohibition of vodka, a good thing. Before any other of what are called self-governing countries took steps to remove the national disability of strong drink, Russia acted with the strong hand, and prohibition became effective by prompt decree. She acted before England or France acted, and has set an example to even enlightened and highly civilized Canada. Our Dominion Government, while professedly anxious for creating conditions to increase our efficiency in sharing the responsibility of helping wage this war, balked at, perhaps, the best means, prohibition of strong drink, and took no action; would not even prohibit the manufacture in provinces where prohibition had been enacted. In Ontario the Government did not spontaneously adopt the important war aid measure of prohibition—the government was driven to it by the force of public opinion. If the prohibition of strong drink in Ontario proves as successful at it seems to have done in Russia, the government will have to bear the blame of neglecting the welfare of the people and the province by neglecting to adopt it sooner. If the success of prohibition in Ontario for the next three years proves as great as that of Russia's shorter experience, one can have little doubt of the result of the referendum vote to be taken in 1919. In providing for a reference of the retention of prohibition the Ontario Government has shown not so much a regard for the people's rights of decision as they have shown weakness, in refusing to make the measure absolute. Considering the force of public opinion that compelled the action of the government, the latter should have had no doubt that, in making prohibition as permanent a measure as any other statutory enactment, it would be expressing the wishes of the great mass of the people of the province, and only anticipating their verdict in case of a referendum.

THE DANCE OF DEATH.

The population of the world is about 1,628,300,000 persons.

—Total of 57,372,737 persons die annually

Total of 903,516 persons die weekly.

Total of 3,306 persons die hourly.

Nearly 90 persons die every minute.

About three persons die every two seconds.

This remarkable death rate would completely depopulate the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec in less than a month.

Sixty persons have died while you were reading this item.—Sunshine.

Advertising and System as Elements in Recruiting

The Ottawa Journal, the organ of the Dominion government at the capital, after pointing out that conscription is impossible in Canada in view of the attitude of Quebec, blames the government for not conducting a systematic advertising campaign for recruits, as the Imperial government has done. Some weeks ago, it states, a delegation from the Canadian Press Association waited on the minister of militia to suggest the desirability of such a campaign. It also outlined a comprehensive plan, and pointed to the fact that a government advertising campaign to stimulate apple production and greater agricultural production had borne excellent results. The proposal seemed to be favourably received, but no action followed.

Great Britain raised her armies of millions principally through the power of newspaper advertising. A recent number of The American Magazine tells the story of how advertising assisted in these great accomplishments. The story is included in a sketch of Hedley Francis Le Bas, who was employed by the Imperial government to advertise for an army of 3,000,000. His connection with the recruiting campaign came about through his acquaintance with Col. Seeley, former secretary of state for war.

"Some time in 1913 the British army neded 7000 men for its regular regiments. Seeley mentioned to Le Bas during a game of golf that it was a difficult matter to secure the number of men required.

"Easiest thing in the world," said Mr. Le Bas.

"Well, I like that!" said Col. Seeley. "What's your remedy?"

"Advertising."

"Bah! We do advertise, and a precious lot of good it does," retorted the colonel.

"Do you call what you do advertising?" queried Le Bas. "You print a government proclamation on a sheet about the size of an ordinary letter-head. You stick it up in cow sheds and police stations, alongside reward notices for murderers, and you expect prospective soldiers to be interested in your six-point announcements. I don't call that advertising."

"Then what do you call advertising, may I ask?" said the colonel, by now very interested.

"I'd advertise for men in just the same way that I'd advertise for purchasers of tea, soap and tobacco. I'd make my ads interesting. I'd make my readers want to enlist. I'd 'sell' them the army. I'd take full pages in the leading papers. I'd point out every good feature that the army possessed. I'd dwell on the sentimental side a good deal, and play up the patriotic service of the act. Then I'd have the readers send in for a free booklet giving a detailed account of every interesting feature of army life, foreign service, for instance, and so on. That's what I call advertising."

The war office agreed to the proposal of the advertising expert. The soldiers were secured in a very short time, at only 57 per cent. of the former cost of raising recruits.

After the present war broke out, in August, 1914, the war department in London sent for Le Bas. Millions of men were wanted, not thousands. He formed a strong committee of the leading ad-writers of England, and these men produced all the advertising that aided to a great degree in raising the British force to an army of 3,000,000 men.

So far as Ontario is concerned, it cannot be said that newspaper advertising for recruits has been neglected. For this no thanks is due the Dominion government, which has not borne one cent of the cost, and what is true of Brantford is true of Hamilton and Toronto, and many other Canadian cities. It is, however, not true of the country as a whole. In those places where the newspaper campaign has been the most vigorous the best results have been achieved. Advertising, then, is one thing the Dominion authorities can do to help recruiting, and it is not right that having adopted a $50,000 policy it should abandon it like a foundling in the hope that some patriotic organization or individuals would take pity on it and take it in.—Brantford Expositor.

WAR SCHOOLS NEAR FRONT.

Soldiers Are Instructed in Sniping, Trench Digging, and Bombing.

On the British Front, Flanders, April 27.—The spectacle of officers and soldiers playing at war within gunshot of operations which form a part of the greatest conflict in history might seem to be an unusual sight, and yet this is actually taking place daily back of the British lines. One of these schools was for the training of snipers. At one point a line of trenches was laid out just as though ready for battle. At this school any new ideas pertaining to this method of warfare are experimented with, and each man learns numerous ways of protecting himself from the German fire. At another point a group of men were firing from behind sandbags at imaginary German loopholes a considerable distance away. When a man has perfected himself in the art of sniping he is sent along to the front line trenches, or wherever needed.

The second school was one for experimenting in the building of trenches. Trenches of all descriptions are carefully laid out, dugouts are built, and machine gun positions are constructed. Wire entanglements of different varieties also are experimented with..

To many Americans of Irish antecedents it is a very satisfying piece of news that Sir Roger Casement has been captured while trying to run German rifles and munitions into Ireland. According to the report the German auxiliary cruiser which carried the arms was sunk. While 300,000 Irishmen are fighting for their country, and the clergy and men of any standing in the island are with their great leader, John Redmond, heart and soul, this traitorous agitator was trying to bring about a reign of anarchy and bloodshed in which many of his ignorant and misled countrymen and women would lose their lives. Sir Roger has been in Germany since the war broke out with a price upon his head; but it is probable that he will now pass permanently from the public mind and eye.—Rochester Post.

"Empty Cradle" Laid to Women

LONDON, April 26—Apropos of the widespread alarm caused by the revelation that England's birth rate is the lowest in its history, Father Bernard Vaughan, a noted Jesuit and pastor of one of the most fashionable parishes in London, delivered recently a stirring sermon.

"I see everywhere," he said, "on the arteries of our mammoth metropolis women befurred and bejewelled, in the daintiest of footwear—which you can see as far as ever it reaches—and the most perfect hats. In fact, you would think that there certainly was money to throw away, and if you look a little longer you will find that there is a pet dog which could easily be replaced by two men in khaki as far as money goes.

"I do not complain about these things, but my country comes before the dainty wants of a frivolous class.

"The cradle is empty and the church bench is empty. The church bench is empty because the cradle is empty. When I was a lad the birth rate was 37/40; to-day we have dropped to 19.5 a thousand. We are a nation travelling to the cemetery. Never was the marriage rate so high, never the birth rate so low, and that at a time when the cry is to replace the men we are losing.

"It is the mother we need to-day, and shall need more and more, and we want mothers in those wives whom God wants to become mothers."

"ROLLING STONES"

Is is said that rolling stones gather no moss but it is certain that "Rolling Stones" the comedy presented at the Grand Opera House last night gathered plenty of laughs. Full of novel situations and unexpected twists and turns "Rolling Stones" was a most enjoyable production and last night's audience was highly pleased. The company was a well balanced one and the leading roles were all cleverly portrayed. Altogether "Rolling Stones" was the cause of a very pleasant evening.

Ford

Automobile prices are being raised--but the Ford price has been reduced $120 since war began

The immense Ford cash purchasing power has made it possible to overcome in many ways the serious obstacles met with by other car makers because of the scarcity and advance in prices of raw materials.

The high Ford quality is strictly maintained—and the most exacting government tests have shown that Ford constructive material even excels that used in most high grade cars.

This year the Ford car—always the most economical car to buy and to operate—beats all records for economy.

National Service Held In St. John's Church

St. George's Day Transfered to April 27th—Stirring Message By The Rev. Canon Cornish—Gathering Was Representative—Special Music By The Choir

Owing to the fact that St. George's Day—April the 23nd—this year fell on Easter Day, naturally the minor ecclesiastical festival was eclipsed by the greater one—the Queen of Festivals. As a result the day dedicated to the Patron Saint of England was, in this city, transferred, as regards its observance, to yesterday, the twenty-seventh of April.

A Festal Evensong.

The occasion was marked by a Festal evensong which was held in St. John's Anglican church at 8 p.m. last night. In this service of praise and thanksgiving, the combined choirs of St. John's and St. George's Anglican churches took part. The result was a good, hearty cathedral type of service rendered by a considerable choir.

The Rev. Jas. Price, Rector of St. George's church, South Peterborough, was responsible for the service. St. John's church having been lent by the Rector, the Hon. Major J. C. Davidson and the church wardens for the purpose.

The Rev. Jas. Price intoned the service, the first and second lessons according to the Anglican liturgy were read by Captain Rollins and his Honour Judge Huycke, respectively, and the sermon was preached by Canon Cornish. Mr. R. J. Dovey, with his accustomed ability, presided at the organ manuals and, prior to the commencement of the service, played as a voluntary, "Lest We Forget" in a very sympathetic manner.

The following is

The Order of Service.

Processional, 390, "Who is on the Lord's Side?"

Responses to Tallis' setting.

Proper Psalms, 115, 150, to the Chants, Tonus Peregrinus and Humphrey's.

Magnificat—Winchester.

Nunc Dimittis—Winchester.

Office hymn—568, "O God our Help in Ages Past."

Before sermon—355, "Lord of Heaven and Earth and Ocean."

During offertory— The Hallelujah chorus—all standing.

Alm's presentation— "Praise God, etc."

National Anthem— "God Save the King."

Recessional—343, "Now Thank We All Our God."

We were sorry not to hear the harmonized Confession as in former years. The Oxford setting to this is very grand and stately, and appeared to have been much appreciated by the worshippers on previous occasions. It is in use in St. George's church every Sunday night, when there is a full choral evensong presented.

The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, sung to the Winchester setting of the stately Gregorian tones went well, as did, indeed, the whole service, the congregation joining heartily in the music, thus showing their appreciation of a sung service as contrasted with the usual "said" service in vogue in the mornings.

At the conclusion of the service, while the offertory was being collected, the Hallelujah chorus (Handel) was played, the congregation meanwhile standing.

A Good Congregation.

The church was very well filled by an attentive congregation, although one missed the familiar faces of some of the regular attendants, who although, perhaps, not born themselves in the Old Country, are from parents who belonged there. Possibly "Rolling Stones" at another place, was a counter attraction. The writer of this could have taken a very pleasant lady himself to the Opera House, but 'duty' is one of the keynotes of an Englishman.

Canon Cornish's Sermon.

The Canon chose as his text the 6th chapter of the Epistle of St. Paul to the Galatians, verse 9:

"Let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

In effect the Canon said that during the present time he thought it would be wrong to confine one's remarks to any one particular part of the British Empire. The time had arrived when we must stand or fall together. He would prefer to speak of the general character of the British, hence the reason for his selection of his text. He drew the picture of the bull-dog and the British flag and the motto, "What we have we'll hold." That is surely the character of the British Empire. There is a feeling within us which makes us fight a fair fight, fight an honest fight, for a fair cause and an honest cause; and a fight that we fight to a finish.

This is not the first time that have fought together for a similar reason. Like fights at school and at college—where one fights for principles—the British always fight above the belt and so we hope to continue to fight as Old England and her daughters have fought from time immemorial.

The Canon then went on to remark on conditions in the Northwest a few years back prior to the war, where there were terrific anxious times from sowing to reaping. It was the time of booms, everything seemed to go to pieces, all hopes were dashed to the ground. Then came the declaration of war. Every one must make a sacrifice. Out of our pockets we had to help the Red Cross and kindred societies and the soldiers in the trenches. God knew it and came to their rescue in a way never known out in the west before. An abundant harvest, so great that all the machines and men available were not sufficient to harvest the crop. Those who had not seen it, could have no conception of what it was like. But the people of the west felt it and acted accordingly, and have put their hands deep down into their pockets and hail thus returned thanks to Almighty God. For two or three years before there had been quite short crops and every one was in debt. God, in his mercy, came to their rescue, and indirectly blessed the British Empire and blessed our Allies; for tons and tons of good produce had been sent to help the great cause so near our hearts to-day.

The Individual Life.

God is not mocked. Do not let us deceive ourselves. Whatsoever a man sows that shall he reap. There must be an individual life before the national life.

Before we can approach God properly there must be a spirit of gratitude to make us worthy of victory. Victory may come from the bended knees of those who remain at home.

We are face to face to-day with the biggest crisis. Many times has the question been asked,

"Why Does God Allow Such a Terrible War?"

The answer to this is—"Why are not we the Christians we profess to be." Why is it that people will not carry out their baptismal vows until God brings some great scourge upon us? It is for our good, and we must have experienced that already. It has made good Christians out of agnostics. Something has been found in the trenches, and that something

Is God.

It has brought home to all not only the stern realities of life, but of death. To how many of these brave men has not the religion of their parents brought home to them the peace of God which passeth all understanding, and so to-night we think of

Our Patron Saint.

Whether we be English or Irish, Scotch or Welsh, Canadian or Australian, Indian or African. Remember that God alone can give the victory and we must appeal to Him and give our lives into His hands. We must obey Him with all our mind, with all our soul, with all our strength. If we do so we become at once a stronger nation, come under the influence of those Almighty arms, who alone can give us victory over a common enemy.

If anything has given us optimism it is

The Conduct of Our Troops.

How we love to read their letters! How can it be that these young men write as if no danger threatened them; they appear to be enjoying the experience? We know they have gone through terrible scenes. There is but one answer to all this! They are bearing it for us. They are carrying out and fighting for great principles. They have heard of Belgium and Servia. What is more natural than to think of their own homes? It is not for us to give up, because we believe that in due season, if we faint not, victory will be ours. These men have great traditions behind them; the troops of the British Empire before have done brave deeds. Their determination is unquenchable, and this is the basis of their conduct to-day.

What is Deep Down in Their Hearts?

It is the religon of Jesus Christ. It is the story of the Cross! God, who has created this beautiful world can and will create a better and happier world for the heroes who gave their lives in the battle front.

Let their lives be an example to us. When we think or act, we put into motion a great power which must influence others. We are individuals, we make up the nation. We who are left behind at home cannot tell what example we may be setting by prayer and by our own good conduct.

History Repeats Itself.

We talk about history repeating itself. Why it is only about a hundred years ago since England did the same kind of thing as what she is doing to-day. We have not forgotten Waterloo! There we had but an insignificant army, smaller than that which has crossed the seas from Canada to-day. It was for the same reason then as now. It was to put an end to military despotism. Then we were fighting in deadly earnest against the French. Now we are bound by the feelings of the deepest affection, the result being that to-day we are fighting shoulder to shoulder as comrades. We are fighting to-day, not for territory, but for lasting peace. The Allies and the British are welded together in the determinaton that militarism shall be destroyed and peace and good will shall henceforth reign on earth..

The sermon was virile, strong, forceful, as might have been expected from such a fine speciman of English manhood as Canon Cornish. It was listened to with the most profound attention by the appreciative congregation.

At the conclusion of the service Mr. Price announced that a similar service will be held at St. George's church next Sunday evening at 7 p.m. On this occasion the lessons will be read by Lieut. Might and Police Magistrate Langley. The sermon will be preached, most probably, by Major J. C. Davidson, Chaplain of the 93rd Batt.

Mr. Price also regretted the absence of the Band of the 93rd Battalion, which had arranged to be present. He told the congregation that the band had been ordered to Lakefield on the previous day, where they had to remain all night with nothing to eat or drink and nowhere to sleep. Consequently on their return to this city they were unable to fulfil their engagement. He further stated that Bandmaster Hughes had promised, subject to the consent of the officers, to give a concert on behalf of St. George's church at an early date.

F. RUSSELL.

PELL IN A PAINT.

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Ayer's Cliff, Que., writes: "Before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was in a terrible condition. Dizzy spells would come over me and I would fall on the floor. I could not creep without fainting. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has so built up my system that I can work and do my housework. Your medicine saved me when doctors had failed."

COL. NICHOLLS MADE OFFER TO MANUFACTURE FUSES AT THE C. G. E.

OTTAWA, April 26.—Colonel David Carnegie was still on the witness stand when the inquiry into the Kyte charges were resumed this afternoon. Mr. Hellmuth read the letter submitted to him by Col. Carnegie, which the latter received from Col. Frederick Nicholls. In the letter Col. Carnegie stated that he regretted to learn that Col. Nicholls declined to take over the manufacture of the 20,000 fuses as an experiment. He appreciated, he said, the difficulties under which Col. Nicholls would operate, and suggested that he would encourage the manufacture of fuses at the Dominion arsenal.

A letter from Mr. Nicholls, dated February 22, noted that Col. Carnegie and the Minister of Militia were anxious for the manufacture of fuses to be taken up at Peterborough. The writer agreed that the old lamp factory could be adopted for that purpose. At the same time he was of the opinion that it would be unfair to the company to commence the manufacture unless there was a definite understanding as to how the initial cost of installing the manufactory would be absorbed. He pointed out that it would be an expensive matter and if by any good chance the war were to end in the near future there would be no longer any extraordinary demand for fuses, and the company would be left with the equipment on its hands. Mr. Nicholls said that if the department was anxious for his company to manufacture the fuses, he would repeat his previous offer, namely, that the company would provide the facilities and engage in the manufacture of fuses if the company was paid the actual cost of the first 20,000. By this time these had been turned out, the manufactures would be established and they could negotiate contracts for larger numbers.

Mr. Hellmuth, addressing Col Carnegie, said that he understood the witness to say that the Imperial Government would pay for the manufacture of the first 20,000 fuses.

'Did Nicholls say he would build a plant if the cost of those first 20,000 fuses were met?

"I understood that the Imperial Government would pay the actual cost of manufacture. I knew nothing of the plant."

Mr Hellmuth then read a letter from Mr. Nicholls to Col Carnegie, in which Mr. Nicholls said that he deemed it advisable to keep out of the manufacture of fuses until more definite plans had been formed.

On March 16 a cable was sent to the War Office saying that the Shell Committee was prepared to arrange the manufacture of fuses at the rate of 5,000 a day, delivery to commence in four months. A reply came on March 20 saying that the War Office was prepared to consider the offer, but would like to know the likelihood of the company being able to meet the specifications.

Says Mere Remnants of Humanity Are Held in Reserve by Austria

Just back from Vienna, Austria Leroy McCollum of the J. C. Lucey Manufacturing Company, New York who arrived here aboard the steamship Dante Alighieri of the Navigation Generale Italiona, gave a graphic description of the extremeties, to which he says Austria has been reduced by the war.

"For instance," he said, "in the Bristol Hotel, in Vienna, I was waited on by a man who had one eye, a crippled arm and a wooden leg. He had fought in Russia. He showed me a blue card containing an order to present himself again for service at the front if the war does not end by July. Imagine the straits the country must be in to require a mere remnant of humanity like this waiter to go to war!"

Mr. McCollum passed three years in Roumania. "That country is heart and soul for the allies, he said. "No matter how their king may feel about it, the people of Roumania will never fight on the side of the Central Powers. They have it in for the Teutons on account of the treatment Austria has been according to their brethren in Transylvania. The reason Roumania is sending grain to Austria is because Roumania is in absolute need of some necessaries which she can obtain only from Austria in exchange for the grain. Ammunition is sadly lacking in Roumania. Unless Russia supplies her with arms she will be wholly unprepared to enter the war on either side.

Lieutenant Carlo Baron, of the cavalry corps of Volunteer Guides in the Italian army, and his wife, Mrs. Virgilia Bogue Baron, daughter of V. G. Bogue of No. 15 William street, also were aboard the Dante Alighieri. Their son, Giorgio Bogue Baron, three years old, has been living with his grandfather at New Rochelle while his parents were aboard.

Mrs. Baron is an ardent horsewoman. She is interested in the Italian Blue Cross and will seek to interest American friends in it, too.

Lieutenant Baron's work at the front has been to carry despatches from the infantry to the artillery to enable the latter to direct their fire. "My nerves have gone all to pieces," he said, "for in addition to the dangers of the work the liability to make mistakes is so great that it kept constantly preying on my mind. The difference of a single number may result in the artillery fire being directed against our own troops instead of those of the enemy."

In one battle while he was fighting side by side with an uncle the lieutenant was stuck violently in the side. When he turned to look he discovered that the missle was his uncle's head.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Sinn Fein Was Organized 1905

Primary Object Was Boycott of All Things English in Ireland

Sinn Fein, pronounced 'Shin Fane' means Ourselves Alone. This name, so prominent in despatches since the trouble began in Ireland, is applied to a band of people there who in 1905 commenced a crusade against everything English. Their power has sometimes been called Hungarian because it has been supposed to resemble that of Hungary towards Austria. The purpose has been to make the speech, thought, and action of the Irish nation gradually more Irish and less English, especially by extending the use of the Irish language and trying to oust English goods from Irish markets. Among English things to be boycotted have been the toast to the King's health and the playing of the National Anthem.

Some confusion is caused in the minds of readers unfamiliar with Ireland by references to the Irish Volunteers. There have been, as a Irish Parliamentary party, 3 Irish matter of fact, three bodies of volunteers in Ireland: 1. Ulster volunteers, of whom Sir Edward Carson is the head: 2. National Volunteers, controlled by Mr. Redmond and the Volunteers, who have for their president Professor MacNeill, who is now rumored shot. The Irish Voulnteers are recruited from those who dream of sovereign independence for Ireland, and they, and not the Redmond Volunteers, were those who clashed with the militia in Dublin over the landing of a cargo of rifles just before the great war began.

Telephone Girls Ignore Flames

Three Hundred Operators Remain at Switchboard While Fire Rages in Adjoining Building.

NEW YORK, April 28. — Three hundred girls in the Franklin and Worth telephone exchanges remained at their switchboards while fire did $75,000 damage to a biulding next to them. They were inconvenienced by smoke, but remained at their work, and the telephone service was not interrupted.

The fire started on the third floor of the five-storey "T" shape building at No. 358 Broadway and running back to Nos. 59 to 65 Franklin street. The first floor is occupied by the Manhattan Desk Company, the second by Ferguson and McKinney, knit goods, and the third, fourth and fifth, by I. Goldberg, leather goods. The flames were confined to the Goldberg quarters, but water damaged the lower floors.

Because the fire spread quickly two alarms were sent in. After a great quantity of water had been poured into the structure the fire was controlled.

Merchant's Wife Leaps to Death

Mrs. Henry Kauffman, of Pittsburg, Jumps From Seventh Floor of the Ritz-Carlton.

NEW YORK, April 28.—While her nurse was absent from the room, Mrs. Theresa Kaufman, until recently head of a large Pittsburg department store, leaped from a window in her room on the seventh floor of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel at four o'clock yesterday morning and was instantly killed.

Mrs. Kauffman had been ill from neurasthenia for many months and, in the hope that a change might benefit her, her husband sold his interest in the department store and came to New York. Mrs. Kauffman was under the care of Dr. I. Straus, of No. 116 West Fifty-ninth street, and two nurses were always in the apartment.

Despite daily automobile rides and every form of scientific treatment known, Mrs. Kauffman failed to respond to treatment and yesterday, at a consultation of physicians, it was decided to send her to the Mount Sinai Hospital. It is believed now that she may have overheard the arrangements and determined to kill herself.

Mrs. Kauffman will be buried in Pittsburg. The couple have no children, their only child, a daughter, having died.

Kansas Mob After Prisoner

FIRST ATTEMPT TO LYNCH MAN ACCUSED OF CHILD'S MURDER PREVENTED BY SPIRITING HIM AWAY.

TOPEKA, Kan., April 28.—After a mob had attempted to break into the county jail here for the purpose of lynching Fred Bissel, accused of murdering a little girl, several automobiles filled with determined men left for Lawrence, having been informed that Bissel had been smuggled out of the jail and sent to that city.

When the officials learned that the lynching party had started for Lawrence they sent a telegram to Sheriff Kiene there, informing him of the development, and advising him to get Bissel away from Lawrence.

The body of Edna Dinsmore, nine years old, had been found in a burning house here yesterday and, according to the Coroner, the child had been attacked and then killed and the house set on fire. Bissel, who is twenty-seven and a baker, is said to have admitted buying candy for the child, but denied the attack and murder.

SHERIFF LEAVES LAWRENCE IN AUTO WITH PRISONER

LAWRENCE, Kan., April 28.—Upon receipt of information that a mob was on the way here from Topeka with the intention of lynching Fred Bissel, Sheriff L. L. Kiene removed Bissel from the jail at half-past nine o'clock accompanied by a force of Deputies. The destination of the Sheriff with his prisoner was not known.

BERLIN, ON EDGE FEARING POLICE AND SOLDIERS WILL CLASH

BERLIN, Ont., April 27.—P. C. James Blevins, who had his jawbones broken by Pte. Meinsinger while serving a summons on the soldier last Monday afternoon, is in a serious condition. He finds much difficulty in breathing, and is suffering much pain.

The report of the serious illness of the officer led to an ugly rumor that an attempt would be made to-night to get Meinsinger out of the county jail by force.

Police headquarters were also informed that Police Sergt. H. Grasmer was due for a beating-up. The situation has caused a tense feeling lest there be a clash between the soldiery and police.

Lusitania Loss Was Worth Dozen Ships and 100 Regiments to England

President of Brown University at U. S. Clergy Peace Conference Wants The War to Continue Until Peace Can be Established On Basis of Justice.

Asserts Sinking of Lusitania Was Worth a Dozen New Ships and 100 Regiments to England.

GARDEN CITY, N.Y., April 27.—German methods of warfare received striking comment from President W. H. P. Faunce of Brown University in an address delivered by him to-night at the Garden City Hotel at the opening session of the First National Conference of the American Council of the World Alliance of Churches for the Promotion of International Friendship.

More than 150 clergymen from all parts of the United States, many of them former delegates to the World Alliance of Clergymen at Constance, Germany, on Aug. 1, 1914, and many prominent workers in societies to promote peace, attended the meeting, which will last three days, and was called to extend the membership of the American Council of the World Alliance, so that the United States can be more effectively represented in the movement to promote international understanding and prevent future wars.

President Faunce's speech, which was anything but a plea for immediate peace or unpreparedness, was more vigorous than many of those in attendance had expected, and gave the Congress a dramatic opening. He said in part:

"All around us men are believing that the law of the jungle is the foundation of national life, and that might is the only final sanction of right. They offer us the gospel of Treitschke and the code of Bernhardi as the last word of modern wisdom, and optimism that military force is the ultimate and only reliance of the nations. But the danger of our time is that we of the churches shall lose faith in the moral forces and are far more powerful than any physical forces ever can be. The sinking of the Lusitania weakened England by the loss of one ship and 1,500 lives, it strengthened England as much as the building of a dozen ships and the arming of a hundred English regiments.

How to stop the war we do not at present inquire. We do not want the war stopped until peace can be established on the basis of justice. For myself I believe it must be fought out. Our task is rather to understand the war, and to work for the prevention of such folly and stupidity in the future. When the typhoid fever is raging in a patient's blood, the doctor may recognize that it must run its course with whatever alleviations he may suggest. Not the cure, but the prevention of war, is the task that summons to-day the Christian forces of the world. We do not need to come together merely to describe the beauty and desirability of peace. In fact, peace as sometimes pictured, as the mere negation of strife, is not in itself desirable.

"One of the curious psychological facts of our time is the popular revolt against mere peace. It might be well to drop the word peace from our further discussions provided we could find some positive and constructive word to replace it. Peace that is a mere vacuum no man desires. Nature itself abhors a vacuum. I, myself, believe in adequate defense of the nation, even though I may not be able to define the word adequate in a rapidly changing environment. I believe as the nation grows its police power must grow, that its increasing numbers and wealth demand increase of protection against burglary. I cannot for a moment accept the doctrine of Tolstoy so long as I follow a Christ whose whole life was a resistless resistance to evil."

The Congress in Garden City is part of a world-wide campaign of churches now actively under way in nine European countries for the establishment of an international league of peace and the creation of a world supreme court.

Sherman's 'Hell' Not Profanity

So Decides Telegraph Company and German-Americans' Message Goes to Washington.

RICHMOND, Ind., April 28.—Whether the word "hell" is profanity when direct application is meant to the classic of General Sherman, as relating to the war, was a moot question to-day when thirty or more messages containing the word were filed at the Western Union Telegraph Company for transmission to Washington by way of Cincinnati. The messages were from German-American citizens of Richmond and were directed to Representative Gray. They read:

"Do all you can to prevent a break with Germany. War is hell."

When the first message filed was sent the operator at Cincinnati objected on the theory that the word "hell" was profane and that the Western Union rules forbade the transmission of such language. The local office insisted that the word "hell" as used had direct reference to Sherman's famous declaration, and therefore was not profane in the usual acceptance of the term. There was much argument over the wire. The chief operator of the Cincinnati office was appealed to and finally ruled that the Richmond office's interpretation of the word would stand. All the individual messages were then received and sent on their way to Representative Gray.

Roman Meal a Cooling Food.

Because Roman Meal cannot ferment and become acid it cannot "heat the blood" or "irritate the skin." On the other hand, on account of the tasteless and odorless flax seed it contains, it is the very best natural aid to a soft, clear, unblemished skin. There is nothing that will give a gloss to the skin or sparkle to the eye of a horse or other domestic animal like flax seed. It will do the same for the human. In Roman Meal it has been rendered tasteless by Dr. Robt. G. Jackson. Roman Meal can be baked into everything but pastry. It makes the most delightful pancakes and gems known. It is positively the most healthful summer food sold.

FIFTY THOUSAND BAIL REQUIRED OF SIMPSON

Winnipeg, April 28.—Lieut.-Col. R. M. Simpson, M.D., who returned to Canada to face charges arising from his alleged connection with the Manitoba Parliament Buildings scandal, arrived in Winnipeg last night unaccompanied. Yesterday morning he was granted bail at $50,000 to appear for a preliminary hearing at a date not named. His own surety for $25,000, and two other sureties for $12,500 each were taken. Dr. Simpson did not appear in the police court, the bail bonds being arranged at the police station.

MUNICIPAL SCANDAL CAUSES KILLING

Taxpayers' Counsel in Nashville Shot to Death by Lawyer on Opposing Side.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., April 28. — Harry S. Stokes, chief counsel for the taxpayers in the inquiry into Nashville City Hall affairs, was shot and instantly killed here this morning by Charles C. Trabue, a lawyer on the other side. One shot took effect in the neck, and as Mr. Stokes fell a second shot entered the top of the head. Mr. Stokes was active in the effort to rid the city of the influence of the machine and about a year ago applied for a receiver for the city, the upshot of which was the inquiry going on. Mr. Stokes succeeded in having Mayor Howse ousted from office, but the old influence still dominates the City Hall.

Friends of Mr. Stokes have been expecting that some one would attempt to kill him ever since the taxpayers' action started. Mr. Stokes was hardly more than thirty-nine years old and occupied a high place in his profession as did Mr. Trabue also.

Mr. Trabue is now out on bond, his release being made possible by the new law abolishing capital punishment, under which murder in any degree is bailable for no more than $25,000. Mr. Stokes was shot just as he opened his office door to admit his slayer, who after the shooting calmly walked out and told Mr. Stokes' secretary of his act. He made no attempt to escape.

YOUTH IN OLD AGE

How to Live to be One Hundred Years Old.

With proper attention to diet, prevention of colds, exercise, plenty of sleep, proper care of the skin and the use of a strengthening tonic like Vinol, years may be added to one's life.

A Civil War Veteran, Mr. W. H. Bowers, of Steubenville, Ohio, says: "I am 77 years of age. I suffered from general weakness, nervous breakdown and dizziness. An old doctor recommended Vinol. It built me up so that I was able to go to work as strong and well as ever."

The reason Vinol is so beneficial to old people is because it contains the very elements needed to replace declining strength with renewed vigor, namely, peptonate of iron, beef peptone and a mild tonic wine.

If Vinol fails to build up the feeble weakened system of old people, we will return the amount of money paid us for it.

WILL BUILD A $25,000 ADDITION

Warehouse of the Quaker Oats Company's Plant Will Be Enlarged by Two Storeys

A building permit authorizing the construction of an additional two storeys to the warehouse of the Quaker Oats Company's plant on Hunter street, has been granted by the Engineering Department of the city. The cost of the new structure is estimated at twenty-five thousand dollars. It will take about three months to build and will mean employment of from twenty-five to fifty men. Work on the new structure has commenced.

Meat 60 Cents a Pound in Berlin

Steadily Growing Scarcer and House wives Embarrassed for the Holiday Supply.

LONDON, April 28—The Vorwaerts of Berlin is quoted in a Reuter despatch from Amsterdam as saying that the most significant development of the Easter holidays for the people of Berlin was the steadily growing scarcity of meat. Housewives rushed from shop to shop, the Vorwaerts says, in order to obtain at least a piece of meat.

Those who were able to buy pork, which is sold by the municipality at a relatively cheap price, went home happy, but there was dissatisfaction on the part of those who were compelled to buy the meat which sells for three marks (sixty cents) a pound and also among those who went home empty handed.

Two Shot in Riot of Negro Strikers

Attacks on Foreman of "Sand Hogs" Brings Out Reserves in Harlem.

NEW YORK, April 28.—An attack upon a foreman by negro striking "sand hogs" led to a riot in Harlem last night, in which two negroes were shot. Police reserves were called to restore order.

Henry Huston, negro foreman, was first attacked in Fifth avenue and then ran to the doorway of his home at No. 56 East 123d street. As the strikers came up he is said to have opened fire, shooting George Coles in the left hip and Irving McIntosh in the face.

Policeman Dunn ran into the hallway and overpowered Huston, disarming him. As he led the man out both were attacked by several hundred negroes and Dunn had to back his prisoner against a wall and hold the mob off by flourishing his revolver until their reserves arrived. The two wounded negroes were sent to Harlem Hospital.

The strikers were employed by the Flinn-O'Rourke Construction Company in putting the tube under the East River from Old Slip.

E. C. McLeod Got Judgment In Full From Mr. W. A. McIlmoyle

Result of Real Estate Deal Effected In The Boom Days When Real Estaste Was Sky High—Guarantee Given for Repurchase of The Lots.

Sir Glenholme Falconbridge's decision in the McLeod-McIlmoyle case, the evidence of which was heard at the adjourned Assizes this week, was announced yesterday entirely supporting the claim of the plaintiff, Mr. E. C. McLeod, formerly manager of the local branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia, and now in charge of the branch in Kingston, Jamaica. He came all the way from the West Indies for this action, and returns with the Chief Justice's decision.

He claimed $4,655 due under an agreement in writing dated Peterborough, Sept. 16, 1912, whereby the defendant promised to pay to the plaintiff on demand the sum of $3,800 and interest thereon, at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, demand having been duly made and payment having been refused. The interest amounted to $855.00.

The action concerned a real estate deal in which Mr. McIlmoyne sold to Mr. McLeod two Edmonton lots for $3,800. Mr. McLeod claimed that Mr. McIlmoyle gave him a written guarantee indemnifying him against loss agreeing to repurchase the property at any time for the $3,800 and interest at 8 per cent. On July 17th, 1915, Mr. McLeod asked for the execution of this agreement, but Mr. McIlmoyle refused.

In the hearing of the case Mr. McIlmoyle denied the agreement and any indebtedness. If there was an agreement for repurchase it was for only one year. He did offer to purchase the lots but Mr. McLeod refused to sell. It was not until the price of the land had greatly depreciated that he sought to dispose of them.

In court Mr. McLeod told of Mr. Chas. R. Nixon's $2,400, half interest in the lots. Before Mr. McLeod tendered a transfer of the property to Mr. McIlmoyle he had bought Mr. Nixon's interest for $2,000, and in court offered to pay him the difference of $400.

In his judgment Sir Glenholme Falconbridge declared: "The attempt by the defendant to make out a case for reformation fails. I accept the testimony of plaintiff where their stories conflict. But in any case there was neither mutual mistake nor fraud on plaintiff's part.

The Moratorium Act does not apply. Judgment for plaintiy for $3,825 with costs. He submits to deduction of $400, and I further deduct the $75 received by him from defendant. Interest at 8 per cent on $1,925 from Sept. 16, 1912; interest at 8 per cent. on $1,400 from Feb. 10, 1913.

Bennett & Goodwill conducted Mr. McLeod's case, and Mr. G. N. Gordon represented Mr. McIlmoyle.

Girl "Runaway" Escapes Spanking--For a Time

New York, April 27.—Curious to hear a teddy bear howl in anguish, Pauline Poole, six years old, barely touched a match to her favorite animal's brown furry hide and it went up in a column of smoke that attracted the attention of her mother, Mrs. Mollie Poole, a singer, in her room in a boarding house, at No. 242 West Forty-third street, yesterday afternoon.

It so happened that Mrs. Poole was in a hurry just then to leave the to go to a booking agent's office to obtain an engagement for last night, and she said to Pauline:

"I haven't time to spank you now, but when I return I'll tan you good with a slipper, young lady."

When Mrs. Poole returned at six o'clock Pauline was not to be seen but on a table was this note:

"Dear Mamma—You said you wanted to spank poor Pauline when you came back, so I have taken my clothes and have gone away. I am sorry I did this, but I don't want to be spanked. I love you and here is a million kisses."

"Pauline."—

That was the first Mrs. Poole knew her young daughter could write. She hurried to the west Forty-seventh st. station, and Lieut. Burns sent policemen to investigate. They and Mrs. Poole and her husband searched the house and then the neighborhood. Mrs Poole had to hurry to Newark to keep the singing engagement she had obtained in the afternoon, and her husband, Paul Poole, continued the search with the policemen.

It was after ten o'clock when the policemen and the father "knocked off" the pursuit for the night, and Mr Poole returned to the room. He was addressing letters to relatives of his about the runaway when he heard a noise behind the bureau, and investigated. There was Pauline, and with her was her chum, Anna Dombiats, 9 years old, of No. 262 West Forty-third street.

The mystery of the note soon was unravelled. Anna had written it for Pauline. After Anna had been sent to her home Pauline asked her father:

"You won't let mamma spank me?"

"I am quite certain that your mother will insist on exercising the slipper," was all the encouragement she had before crawling into bed.

THE RUSSIAN EMBRACE

As to the qualities and characteristics of the various non-Teutonic soldiers of Europe, German army officers speak interestingly and not without generosity. The French soldier is gallant, nervous, and very brave, only it is difficult to make him return a second or third time into the same fire. The English fighter is dogged and individually resourceful. The Italian, though ferocious in assault, is discouraged by failure. He goes on one impulse and hates to repass his own dead for a second charge. That is how a German sees three of his adversaries. As to a fourth, he volunteers nothing, but if he is pressed, he will add: "The Russian is terrible."

The meaning of that assertion develops slowly, with many hesitations. It is not that the individual Russian soldier is particularly terrible. No, that is not what he means to say. The Russian cannot be singularized. You have to think of Russians, infinite in plurality, a slow-moving, ominous, imposing mass. They come in lines ten and twelve deep, heedless and heavy, so controlled by their own momentum that they cannot stop. They will go anywhere, into anything, again and again, as if they did not know how to be afraid. "The only thing you can do," says the German officer, "is to slaughter them and pray that you will have ammunition enough to keep it up."

The sense of Russia's overwhelming man power fills the German mind with a sort of superstitious terror. It is like a nightmare. There is a belief that if the Russian Army had been well supplied with efficient officers, nothing—not even Von Hindenburg—could have stopped the Russian invasion of Prussia at the beginning of the war. The present eastern front, running from the Gulf of Riga south to the Roumanian frontier, has been thought of from the German side as a mighty dam to be held against a Russian flood which, if it knew its own power and could but utilize it, would overcome even a Prussian barrier. Instead of breaking the dam, the Russians have gone around it at both ends. They descended first through the Caucasus into Asia Minor, where they are violently beating the Turk. Now, unexpectedly, they appear in France. Germany, therefore, faces Russia on three sides. Besides, there are more than a million Russian prisoners in Germany. Of what avail to slaughter or capture Russians? Their number is unlimited.

The man power of Russia in Europe, calculated at only 8 per cent. of her population, is greater than that of Austria-Hungary and Germany combined, calculated at 19 and 12 per cent., respectively, of their population. It is greater than that of France, England, and Italy combined. This is nothing new. It has been statistically apparent from the beginning. The new fact is that it is becoming increasingly available against Germany. That was inevitable with the lapse of time. Germany hoped to win the war before the power of Russia could be made effective. The longer the war lasts, the more effective it will be.

The enlarged participation of Russia in the war is a matter of vast physical and political significance. Russian soldiers are now holding more of the iron ring around Germany than all the rest of the Entente together, nearly two miles for one. They are holding one front of 700 miles in the east. That is their own. They are driving a wedge through the Turkish Empire, and may even penetrate Mesopotamia from the north and reach Kut-El-Amara before the English succeed in relieving their own besieged force at that place. And now they will take part in the great decision on the western front, if the war at last shall be decided there, as many hold must be the case.

The number of Russian troops landed in France is unknown. Naturally, for military reasons, no definite information on that point should be allowed to pass the censor. There was a "large flotilla." That might mean 40,000 men, or twice that number. But once the thing has been done it may be done again, and there is no present limit to the number of Russian troops that could be delivered in France. The questions are those of transportation, maintenance, and service equipment. The supply itself is enormous. Of men alone Russia could send several millions and still have all that she could employ herself on the eastern front. And, whereas at one stage of this war's experience the importance of man semed diminished and that of means increased, recent events, especially at Verdun, have restored the relation to almost what it was before. Rifles and machine guns are ultimately the effective weapons, and it becomes again a question of men. Obviously, by virtue of her ability to supply men in great numbers, Russia will more affect the outcome than she was at first expected to do, and her influence in the peace councils will be correspondingly greater. There goes another German assumption which was that in the terms of peace helpless Russia could be made to pay more than her share.

ONTARIO AMUSEMENT TAX IS EFFECTIVE MAY 15TH

TORONTO, April 28.—The Provincial Treasurer's amusement tax will come into effect on May 15, and it was stated yesterday that the tariff will be fixed by May 10. Though official information is not yet available, it is regarded as likely from the information which Hon. Mr. McGarry is obtaining on the subject that the tax will be a graded one right from the commencement, which will mean more revenue than a flat tax of one cent for the first month or two and a rise afterwards.

TANK EXPLODES KILLING WOMAN

Overcharge of Carbonic Acid Gas Also Injures Her Husband and Brother.

NEW YORK, April 28.—The explosion of a metal tank, being overcharged with carbonic acid gas by inexperienced persons, blew off the arm of a woman last night in a little shop in East new York, killing her and severely injuring two men. It also wrecked the shop and caused great excitement in that crowded section.

Harry Feinerman and his wife's brother, William Berlind, were charging the tank with the gas to be used in the soda fountain of the candy store and lunch room Feinerman owns at No. 1629 St. Mark's avenue when the accident happened.

As Mrs. Feinerman entered the room the tank exploded. Her arm was torn off and she son died of loss of blood, a policeman being unable to adjust a tourniquet. Her husband's left arm was broken in several places and he was cut and bruised. Berlind's right leg was broken and he also suffered internal injuries. They probably will recover.

FRENCH AT FORT DOUAUMONT FOUGHT TO THE LAST MAN

PARIS, April 28.—The occupation of Fort Douaumont by the Germans in March, which has been one of their most important successes during the long battle of Verdun, is described to the Associated Press by a French infantry officer in the following words:

"We had to combat detachments of the enemy that had slipped inside the fort with machine guns and a revolving canon. At the same time we had to watch over a winding ravine opening near the church of Douaumont through which the Germans might get through. We thus had to look two ways while we were nearly blinded with smoke and with dust raised by shells that furrowed the ground all about. Orders could be heard only a step away in the deafening crashes that were almost continuous. The ground quaked under the concussions. All our defence works were obliterated between two o'clock in the morning and one o'clock in the afternoon, when the Germans increased the range of their artillery fire and their infantry attacked the village. We were cut off from all communications, front and rear, for every man sent out with information was a dead man.

"The Germans came out of the fort and from concealed positions we had not been able to reconnoitre, and advanced through the ravine simultaneously. The men debouching from the fort were seen first. We hesitated because they wore the new helmets of our infantry. Our commandant ordered 'Don't fire. They are French!' Then he fell with a bullet in his throat fired by the men wearing the French helmets. 'Fire! Fire!' ordered the adjutant of the battalion. 'They are Germans'.

"The loss of our commandant through this ruse excited the fury of our men, already decided to make the supreme sacrifice.

FIGHT WITH RIFLE BUTTS

"The battalion had had the mission of defending the village at no matter what cost. They were doubly bent upon it now, as the Germans learned when, with several of its machine guns out of action, the ——th Company fell upon masses which were menacing the left side of Douaumont. With bayonet and rifle butt our boys opened breaches in the thick ranks before them and strewed the ground with German dead. Resisting to the last man, the French stabbed and clubbed until overwhelmed by the weight of numbers.

"A hundred Germans advanced in the direction of a farm on the summit of a hill 800 yards south of the village. Eighty of them fell on the field under the fire of a single machine gun. The rest fled. That gun continued firing until dark at the western skirts of the village, decimating numerous groups.

"During the night we re-established our position facing east, and the Germans fortified themselves in the village. Every attempt they made to debouch during the morning of March 3 ended in more slaughter. At four o'clock in the afternoon our own heavy artillery took Douaumont for target, and the damage it worked there, plainly visible to our men, compensated our reverse of the preceding day. At nightfall two battalions of neighboring regiments lined up for the counter attack and opened a violent fusillade. Cheers rang through the air from all sides in answer to the order:—'Forward with fixed bayonets' More cheers and choruses of the 'Marseillaise' greeted the news that soon came back that the two battalions had thrown the Germans out of the village and carried our line somewhat beyond the town.

"Again and again the Germans came back in the dense masses, but the line held good beyond the town. In the morning 800 German dead lay in front of our trenches.

GERMAN SHIPPINK.

LONDON, April 28.—The Copenhagen correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Company forwards the following:

"A semi-official telegram from Berlin indicates that shipping shares have dropped to figures hitherto unknown as a result of the crisis with America which is regarded as of the utmost gravity, though official circles continue to hope for an adjustment of the differences.

"Responsible German statesmen are continuing the negotiations, a large number of telegrams being sent to and received from Washington daily."

Flag of Distress Calls Her Spouse

New York, April 27.—One of the ways to tame a husband is to decorate a flag with mourning and hang it out in front of the window upside down, even if it does cause trouble, according to Mrs. Charles Loeffler, of No. 140 Jamaica avenue, East New York. She tried it, and her husband, George Loeffler, an employee of the Department of Health, responded to comfort her while she was being arraigned on a charge of desecrating the flag.

"It was merely a signal of my distress," Mrs. Loeffler explained in the New Jersey Avenue Court yesterday. "He left the house on Saturday and when he had not returned on Monday I went to the Department of Health but could get no satisfaction."

"I had heard that the American flag displayed upside down was a distress signal, and certainly my distress was sufficient to warrant the adding of mourning. I knew that if George saw that distress signal he would come to my aid."

Patriotic neighbors saw the distress signal first, however, and believing this was a Teutonic outrage because a family named Loeffler lived there, caused Mrs. Loeffler to be summoned to court. Then Mr. Loeffler heard of the distress signal and he was in court with her. The magistrate paroled Mrs. Loeffler until to-day so that he could investigate the case. She said she meant no offence to the flag.

A LONG MARCH.

The Apsley boys of the 93rd Battalion take the cake for marching. After three or four days in Lakefield they had a route march back to Apsley on Tuesday last, leaving Lakefield at 6.30 a.m. they arrived in Apsley at 6.30 p.m. on the same day, a distance of 32 miles, taking barely 12 hours, including 2 1-2 hours for dinner etc. On arriving at the village they were marched to D. Brown's, where Pte's. Jas. Downing and John Gifford had provided a bountiful supply of lemonade to treat the boys. These were none of them so tired but thought they could have done another ten miles after supper. As it was a number were out playing baseball and football. A few whose homes were near the Village, walked home; others, who lived farther out, drove. It is understood they will return to Lakefield in a few days.

Pte's. Downing and Gifford, who had been left to secure more recruits, got three, and all will likely go down with the Company.

MRS. HETTY GREEN BETTER.

Family Announces That Her Illness Is Not Serious—"Attending to Business," It Is Said.

NEW YORK, April 28. — Efforts having failed to keep from the public the fact that Mrs. Hetty Green was ill in the home of her son, Edward H. R. Green, No. 5 West Ninetieth street, the family announced last night that the illness was not serious.

A servant at the door said Mr. Green had left word to say that his mother was suffering with a slight cold, but was attending to "her heavy press of business matters."

Mrs. Green's secretary said that she was able to give directions in business matters "from her bed" and that it was believed she would recover. Mr. Green insisted his mother had not suffered a severe attack of illness on Sunday, but that when she went for a ride on that day she "caught a slight cold, which was relieved by a glass of toddy, and if the toddy had been a little larger, we would not have had to call in a physician."

Mrs. Green, who is in her eighty-first year, continued to be under the care of nurses and one or two physicians last night. None of them would make any statement.

TELLS GRAPHIC STORY OF NAVAL RAID ON LOWESTOFT

LONDON, April 28. — The Lowestoft correspondent of The Daily Mail telegraphing under date of April 26, says:

"The scream of shells and their detonation as they burst inland was the first intimation the people of Lowestoft had that for the second time German Dreadnoughts were off their shores. The people sprang from their beds, peering toward the sea, where, looming through the mist, could be seen great gray shapes here and there picked out with flashes of flame as another shell came inshore.

"The inhabitants scrambled into their clothes and, catching hold of their little ones, hurried out not in panic, but of of curosity, to the shore to watch and count the German shells.

SEAPLANE CHASED BACK.

"The enemy did not have his own way for long. The watchers saw German seaplanes, which a few minutes before had left the vessel, come hurrying back. The reason was soon apparent. From the south came little clouds of smoke, drawing nearer every moment. A rousing cheer was given as it was seen that the smoke was coming from British cruisers and destroyers.

"The big German ship loosed a stream of shells at the approaching ships and then swung to the east, but the German Admiralty again changed his course when he found that the British force was not nearly equal to his five great cruisers and many destroyers.

"Every moment we expected to see our ships blown out of the water, said one of our watchers. 'Our comparatively small vessels were seeking to get at close quarters to the German giants and a perfect storm of shell screamed across the water to ward them, but whoever commanded our ships had great courage.'

RAIDERS HIT FREQUENTLY

"The German shells were falling all round our craft but they did not reply until well within range. Then time and again they hit the German monsters. Once we saw a volume of flame leap from a funnel of one of the great warships. Another suddenly staggered but in a second righted itself, though we could see steam and smoke coming from unusual places.

"Our ships were hit— they could hardly escape, so thickly did the Germans plaster the water with shells. The sea was so churned by the fast moving ships and the exploding shells that it looked like foam. Suddenly we saw an aeroplane coming from the north at a terrific rate. Whatever message it brought the Germans turned tail and made off at high speed to the northeast. As they fled one of the giants seemed in trouble. Our destroyers shot after them and worried them as they disappeared, the sound of the firing growing fainter and fainter."

Casement Left To His Fate When Boat Was Held Up

Submarine Commander Was Under Orders Not to Return Him to Germany—Admits Uprising Has Failed

LONDON, April 27.—Sir Roger Casement, it is reported, has expressed belief that the uprising in Ireland would be a failure on account of his capture. His leadership, he said was necessary to the success of the movement. Several newspapers support the theory advanced by A. Conan Doyle a year ago that Sir Roger is insane. The Westminster Gazette advocates that he be disposed of by placing him in a lunatic asylum.

Sir Roger at present is occupying the cell in which Carl Hans Lody was held as a prisoner before his execution as a spy in the Tower of London in November, 1914. Lody was arrested in Killarney, near where Sir Roger was captured.

EMBARKED AT KIEL.

It is learned that Casement went on board the German submarine in Kiel harbor, about April 14, which is near the date on which a report was circulated that he had been arrested in Germany. The submarine was accompanied by a tramp steamer manned by twenty picked men from the German navy and carrying a cargo of twenty thousand rifles, machine guns and ammunition bound for Ireland.

The steamer, flying the Dutch flag and with the submarine preceding awash in close attendance, crept through the Cattegat, across Bohus Bay, up the coast of Norway and thence north and west, leaving the Orkney, Shetland and Faroe Islands far to the south.

FOOLED PATROL BOAT.

Just as the German captain was congratulating himself upon eluding the British, a patrol boat, surprised at seeing a Dutch trader so far from the North Sea, intercepted the tramp, but found her papers regular. Even her crew spoke English, expressed sympathy for the allies and the hope that the patrol boat would not encounter a submarine. All this time the German submarine accompanying the steamer remained submerged.

SUNK BY CREW.

After re-shaping the course of the expedition and while creeping along the north coats of Ireland, another British patrol boat was sighted. The patrol fired a shot across the bow of the tramp and signalled to the effect that they were about to board her. The tramp steamer was then ordered to accompany the patrol boat.

After steamer for some distance the tramp vessel hoisted the German flag and was sunk by her own crew in accordance with instructions giver before leaving Germany. The patrol boat sent an armed crew to rescue the Germans, who then confessed their mission.

CASEMENT ABANDONED.

the patrol also found a collapsible boat in which were Sir Roger Casement and another man. It is said that the submarine commander before leaving Kiel received orders that, whatever befell the expedition, the presence of Casement was no longer desired in Germany and that when the plans miscarried Casement was placed in the boat and left to his fate.

The scene of the capture of Sir Roger Casement was near Tralee, which is 59 miles west northwest of Cork.

To The Made To Measure or Custom-Tailored Man

SOVEREIGN BRAND REASON No. 1

Will you apply the same common sense to the purchase of your clothes that you use when buying hats and shoes.

Are your hats and shoes Custom Made? If not, why?

No individual maker could buy the quantities of material or the costly machinery that are used in making Sovereign Brand Clothes, nor could he work on the same narrow margin of profit.

It is not that Sovereign Brand Clothes will cost you much less than custom made. They will cost you nearly, if not quite as much; because:—

The great economies in Sovereign Brand Manufacture go into the materials, both those that are seen and those that are hidden.

That is why Sovereign Brand Clothes keep their shape, last longer and look better.

There is a Sovereign Brand Suit to fit every normal man

J. J. Banks Manager

Your Opportunity!

WE HAVE received about thirty sample suit ends of what we can positively guarantee imported Tweeds and Worsteds. We have had them made up into Men's Suits in styles and sizes best fitted to each pattern, sizes 36 to 44. YESTERDAY'S SCORES IN THE BALL LEAGUES

YESTERDAY'S SCORES.

AMERICAN.

WASHINGTON, April 27.—Pitcher Myers' wildness in the eighth inning gave Washington two runs and enabled them to beat the Athletics 4 to 2 here this afternoon. Bressler, who started for the visitors, was taken out in the seventh inning with the bases full. Myers, who relieved Bressler, retired the side runless. Harper, the Washington southpaw, allowed but five hits. Washington won in the eighth when a pass, two singles, a hit batsman, and a sacrifice fly accounted for two runs. Score:—

	R.	H.	E.
Philadelphia	0	0	2
Washington	2	6	0

Batteries—Bressler, Myers and Meyer; Harper and Williams.

At St. Louis—Detroit early routed Weilman, and Davenport, who replaced him in the fourth with two on bases, was hit for a double and Detroit won to-day's game 7 to 2. Six errors by the locals figured in the scoring. Score:—

	R.	H.	E.
Detroit	7	11	2
St. Louis	2	7	5

Batteries—Cunningham, Dauss and Stanage; Weilman, Davenport, Groom Park and Severoid.

At Cleveland—Chicago bunched its hits off Mitchell to-day and won 5 to 3. Faber was hit hard, but his support saved him from being scored on until the sixth, when Cleveland made its three runs on a hit, two passes, an error and sacrifice fly. Faber again wavered in the eighth but Russell came to the rescue and stopped a rally. Score:—

	R.	H.	E.
Chicago	5	11	1
Cleveland	3	9	1

Batteries—Faber, Russell and Schalk; Mitchell, Klepfer and O'Neil and Billings.

NATIONAL

BOSTON, April 27.—Tyler held the Giants to five hits to-day, Boston winning 3 to 2. The Braves pitcher retired the side on strikes, beginning with Kauff in the second inning, and fanned the first man up in the next. Boston went after Tesreau in the first inning, getting two runs on three singles and an error by McKechnie. Gowdy's single and Tyler's double added another run in the fourth. Umpire Klem sent most of the visitors who were not playing from the bubl in the fourth inning because of their loud talk over a decision at the plate when Collins threw out Burns. After the game Klem and McGraw of the Giants, nearly came to blows as a result of remarks by the latter. Umpire Emslie stepped between them and averted a conflict. Score. R.H.E.

New York	0	6	2
Boston	3	7	1

Batteries—Tesreau and Raridon, Tyler and Gowdy.

At Chicago—Chicago won its sixth straight game to-day, when they defeated St. Louis 9 to 5 in the first game of the series. The locals bunched hits off Jasper and forced his retirement in the fourth, and then continued their attack against R. Williams, a recruit obtained from the American Association. Score:—R.H.E.

St. Louis	5	9	1
Chicago	9	12	2

Batteries—Jasper, R. Williams, Snyder and Brottom; Vaughn and Fischer.

INTERNATIONAL

PROVIDENCE, April 27.—The International League season was opened in this city to-day, the Grays scoring an 8 to 1 victory over the Rochester Hustlers. A crowd of 5,000 fans attended. The usual opening day festivities prevailed, Mayor Gainer pitching the first ball and Lieut-Governor Gouci making an attempt to hit the sphere. The game went along even for five innings, but in the sixth the Grays mixed hits with errors and scored five runs, putting the game on ice. Score:—

	R.	H.	E.
Rochester	1	6	5
Providence	8	8	0

Batteries—Huencke, Kramer, and Casey; Schultz Billiard and Yelle.

RICHMOND, April 27.—With the score 2 to 2 when Richmond went to bat in the ninth inning to-day, Hendrix singled to centre, went to third on an error by Kopp and scored when Clemens, a pinch-hitter, sent a sacrifice fly to Jackson in left, giving Richmond a 3 to 2 victory over Buffalo. Verbout held the visitors to five scattered hits. Score:—

	R.	H.	E.
Buffalo	2	5	1
Richmond	3	8	2

Batteries—Gaspar and Haley; Verbout and Reynolds.

"CANADIENS" WON OTTAWAS LOST TWO THOUSAND

OTTAWA, April 26.—The Ottawa Hockey Club dropped nearly two thousand dollars on the past season's operations, according to a statement made last evening by one of the directors. The attendance at the games fell somewhat lower than that of last season, and though they had two extra games, they failed to bring it up to the 1915 mark. Under the circumstances the crowds were suprisingly good and the Ottawas certainly had no kick coming to their patrons, but they paid such high salaries and their travelling expenses came so heavy that they were unable to make both ends meet. Hockey proved immensely popular and on several occasions the Laurier avenue rink was completely sold out, but the war between the two leagues, which gave the players an opportunity of sticking the clubs up, proved an expensive one for all the N.H.A. clubs, the Ottawas carrying a salary list twice as large as that of the Wanderers, and much heavier than that of the Canadiens, who landed the championship, and then captured the Stanley Cup.

"It will be impossible to continue hockey next year unless the players accept a 50 per cent. cut in their salaries" said one of the Ottawa officers. "It was a shame what we paid out this year. I would not tackle it under the same circumstances again for anythings. Hockey must be brought down to a reasonable basis, and the players must be brought to realise that the magnates are not philanthropists; otherwise we shall throw up the sponge."

In view of the fact that the Ottawas had such large crowds, the prediction some time ago that they would show a deficit caused some doubt, but to those who know how handsomely their players were paid and how well they were treated, it is not surprising.

NEW AEROS WORSE THAN THOSE SCRAPPED

El Paso, April 27.—Four new Curtiss aeroplanes, rated at 100 horsepower, have reached Columbus, but they are said to be less satisfactory than the old machines, which have been scrapped. The increase in wing spread is so much greater than the increase of horsepower that they are not able to get the altitude or even cover the distance that the old "nineties" could attain.

When Lieutenants Dargue and Gorrell requested new planes they begged for a maximum horsepower of 140. They asked for Sturtevants of 140-horsepower. Four Sturtevants have been ordered, but are not yet in sight.

The airmen admit they are afraid to attempt to negotiate the middle Mexican mountains in the new flyers.

Major Davidson Attended Banquet

Replied to a Toast That Was Proposed by Dean Owen, a Former Resident of Peterboro

Rev. Major Davidson attended a banquet given yesterday in Toronto to a large number of graduates of Trinity University.

Among the distinguished guests present was Dean Owen of Hamilton. The latter formerly resided in Peterborough and at one time was a member of No. 6 Company, 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers. Dean Owen proposed a toast to "Graduates on Overseas Service," which was replied to by Rev. Major Starr of Kingston, and Rev. Major J. C. Davidson.

The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred on Dean Owen during the afternoon.

Posed as Officer in Army, is Charge

"Lieutenant" Simon B. Buckner, Indicted, Accused of Imposing on Army and Navy Club.

NEW YORK, April 28.—Instead of being Lieutenant Simon B. Buckner, U.S.A., son of the noted confederate, General Simon Bolivar Buckner, the young man who made his headquarters at the Army and Navy Club, in this city, turns out to be William O. Buckner, a private until he was sent to prison for shooting a man and banished from the service.

This was the information United States Attorney Marshall laid before the Federal Grand Jury yesterday and upon which an indictment was found accusing Buckner of impersonating an army officer.

Wearing the uniform of a first lieutenant of the United States Army, Buckner is said to have appeared at the Army and Navy Club and registered as Lieutenant Simon B. Buckner. The courtesies of the club were extended to him immediately and the indictment states he made free use of such courtesies. His bar check was only $1.60, but he showed his "guest's card" to many merchants and started to purchase goods on credit and to obtain cash, according to the charge.

Manufacturing Chemist Dies in 87th Year

Wm. Edmanson Well-Known in Toronto(Bradford and Barrie.

TORONTO, April 28.—The death of William Edmanson, Sr., of 31 Gwynne avenue, took place suddenly on Wednesday. Mr. Edmanson was eighty-six years of age, having been born in Wetwang, Yorkshire, England, April 21st, 1830. He arrived in this country after a sailing vessel voyage of over six weeks. He settled in Woodstock and moved from there to Bradford where he engaged in the bakery business, remaining there until the great fire which wiped out the town. From there he went to Barrie, following the same business for nine years.

Mr. Edmanson was the first biscuit manufacturer north of Toronto and when he came to Toronto to associate himself with his son, W. J. Edmanson of Edmanson, Bates & Company, as manufacturing chemists, he sold his machinery to the Telfer Bros. of Collingwood.

He was active up to the day of his death and was engaged in his business responsibilities up to his 86th year. In Barrie he was a member of the Independent Order of Oddfellows, and in Toronto a prominent member of Parkdale Methodist Church.

He is survived by a daughter, Annie, James of Brantford, and William J. of Toronto.

ANOTHER "SUB" ATROCITY.

LONDON, April 27.—The Government Press Bureau says:—"The captain of the Clan McLeod, which was sunk by a submarine in the Mediterranean on December 1, reports that twelve members of the crew were killed and himself and three others wounded by shell fire after surrendering, and while geting into lifeboats and leaving the ship. The submarine flew a German flag."

WEDDING BELLS

ACTON—COLLINS

Palms and white roses decked the home of the bride's mother when at half-past eight Wednesday evening, Vera, Irene, daughter of the late G. M. Collins and of Mrs. Collins became the bride of Mr. James Clark Acton, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Acton, Rev. Dr. Hazelwod officiated. The bride who was given away by her brother Mr. Stanley Collins wore a graceful gown of cream Georgette crepe and taffeta with tulle veil, wreathed with sweetheart roses. Her bouquet was of lilies-of-the-valley and bridal roses. Miss Eva Spence, who acted as her bridesmaid, was in pale blue taffeta and Georgette crepe and carried pink roses. The best man was Mr. Harold Fry and Miss Edna Mortimer played the wedding march. Mrs. Collins who held a reception after the ceremony, was wearing black silk crepe de chine with nosegay of orchids and lilies, and Mrs. Acton was wearing grey crepe de chine. For her wedding trip to the West the bride wore a travelling costume of grey and gold check with grey hat and shoes. Upon their return Mr. and Mrs. Acton will reside at Parkdale Mansions.—Toronto Star.

OBITUARY

MR. ALEX. FRASER.

The death occurred last night of Mr. Alex Fraser at his late residence, in Smith, just west of Jackson Park. The deceased was seventy-one years of age and was born in the Township of Smith, where he resided all his life. He was unmarried and leaves to mourn his loss five brothers and one sister. The brothers are Messrs. John, Michael, Benjamin, at home, Joseph in Michigan and Henry in Trout Creek. The sister is Miss Jane Fraser, at home.

The funeral will take place on Sunday afternoon at 2.30, from the family residence, to St. Peter's Cathedral and thence to St. Peter's cemetery.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Adams were in Toronto yesterday.

Mr. John Fraser of New York is staying at the Oriental.

Lieut. Archie Laing, of Peterborough, left on Tuesday for Halifax. He is going overseas at once with the Army Service Corps.

Mrs. Chas. Noyes, East City, is able to be around again, having recovered from a recent accident which confined her to bed for several weeks.

THEIR DUTY TO KEEP HENS.

Britain's Housewives Should Also Have Gardens.

LONDON, April 27.—A women's section of the National Poultry Society has recently been formed to carry out propaganda work throughout the country with the object of encouraging a most important and practical form of economy. It is reckoned that more than nine millions yearly is spent on eggs brought from abroad, and there is no reason why this large sum of money should not be kept in the country.

Women can do this themselves by a thorough organization of home resources. In the first place, every woman who has a yard or garden can keep at least six hens at a very small expense, as they can be easily fed by household scraps that would otherwise be wasted. Hens of a good laying strain that are properly looked after and housed on up-to-date lines—which only take up a small amount of space—should produce nearly 900 eggs a year. These can either be sold by the owner or utilized by her own household, thereby overcoming the necessity for purchasing them from abroad.

Special leaflets with reference to poultry keeping and advice as to the best strains to buy, etc. can be obtained from the women's section of the National Poultry Society. Mrs. Lionel Guest is among the leaders in the new campaign.

Cheerful one (to newcomer, on being asked what the treaches are like) —"if yer stands up yer get sniped; if yer keeps down yer gets drowned; if yer moves about yer gets shelled, and if yer stands still yer gets court-martialed or frost-bite."—Punch.

Fraternal Association In Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the Canadian Fraternal Association opened in the Temple Building yesterday afternoon, the delegates of the different fraternal organizations being welcomed by Mayor Church, Mr. W. C. Mikel, K.C., of Belleville, Past Grand Master of the A.O.U.W., replied.

Dr. W. S. Harrison, President of the association, and Head Counsellor of the Canadian Order of the Woodmen of the World, in presenting the President's report, made reference to what had been accomplished by the association since its last annual meeting, and dealt with legislation, and other issues affecting the different societies.

Following the presentation of the reports of the officers, eloquent addresses were delivered by Hon. Geo W. Miller of Chicago, President of the National Fraternal Congress of America, and by Mr. A. Landis, Actuary, of Nashville, Tenn. Mr. Landis' subject was "Actuarial Solvency."

The societies represented are: Ancient Order of United Workmen, Canadian Order of Chosen Friends, Catholic Mutual Ben. Association, Catholic Order of Foresters, Canadian Order of the Woodmen of the World, Canadian Order of Foresters, Independent Order of Foresters, Knights of the Maccabees, Oddfellows' Relief Association, Order of Canadian Home Circles, Royal Arcanum, Royal Templars of Temperance, Societe des Artisans Canadien-Francais, Sons of England, Sons of Scotland, Alliance National, Orange Mutual Benefit, L'Union St. Joseph du Canada.

The election of officers takes place to-day.

Love, peace, charity, self-denial, kindness, consideration of each other's feelings, religion, truth the priceless jewel, and economy, are the first things to acquire to make the ideal home, and then all things shall be added thereto.

AIR RAIDS DON'T TERRIFY.

English Girl Writes of Effect on the People There.

A niece of Mr. F. Goodwin, of this city, writing from the English east coast of a German air raid, says:

"As it has been in all the newspapers, it cannot matter my telling you that we had a daylight raid here a little while ago. Really it was a most delightfully feeble affair. Two enemy aeroplanes came over one afternoon about 3:30, and being wonderfully courageous they only flew at the height of about two miles. The bombs were only small affairs of about 2½ lbs. weight each, and all fell in fields or gardens, where they made silly litle holes, except one, which dropped on the roof of a girls' school and went through to an upper room where about 14 small children were having a class. Nobody was hurt beyond a few slight cuts from falling glass. To show how frightfully scared everyone was, hundreds of people rushed to the spot where a bomb fell to pick up souvenirs. The marauders were driven off before they had a chance to do any real damage."

Verdun a Mute Monument To War's Havoc

City Likened to Tomb, by Correspondent Who Says only Fearful Explosions Break Unbearable Silence

PARIS, April 29.—The extent of the havo wrought in Berdun during the fighting of the last few weeks, is pictured by Mr. Gaston Deschamps, a war correspondent of the Temps, in the current issue of that newspaper.

"As our automobile drew up before the cathedral," he says, "a terrific explosion of a mortar shell caused serious damage near by. Entering the remnants of the famous old cathedral one was fairly confounded by the enormous havoc wrought by the bombardment. Even the huge mosaic paving stones are wrenched into masses of debris. Columns and pillars are broken into fragments, rich candelabras and lustres reduced to bits and the carved pulpit and sculptured railing around the chancel are lying in shapeless piles.

"Near the cathedral is the monastery, whose sculptured walls were famous as a fifteenth century masterpiece. All these have now been reduced to masses of rubbish. Even the cloistered garden disappeared under the avalanche of debris from falling walls.

"The Bishop's palace also is in ruins. One of its chief beauties consisted of the sculptured mural decorations representing in symbolic manner the river Meuse. These decorations have been literally hashed to pieces by violent shelling as though some burlesque Hercules had used a giant hammer to crush these exquisitely delicate bits of sculpture.

"Verdun itself remains completely deserted. From Porte Neuve to Porte St. Victor, in the lower city, and also in the upper city, in the once busy Rue Mazel and Place d'Armes, there is a condition of absolute abandonment and silence, broken only at intervals by the fearful explosions from big guns."

THE RED MAN IN PETERBORO AND VICTORIA COUNTIES

Interesting Myths Related by The Indians Find a Place in The Archaeological Report—The Tailless Sturgeon and the Social Problem

The following Ojibwa myths and tales, compiled by Col. G. E. Laidlaw of Victoria Road, are found in the twenty-seventh annual archaeological report forwarded by Rowland B. Orr, director of Provincial Museum, Toronto. Mr. Laidlaw's series was obtained by Peter York, in the summer of 1915. Peter belongs to the Rama reserve, and the tales told by John York were told in Ojibwa to Peter York and written down in English by that Indian. John York is an old man of 96 years and his Indian name is 'Kitche Penaseie,' or 'Big Thunder.' The tales reproduced have for a setting Sturgeon Balsam, and Mud (Carden Township) lakes, and are, therefore, of local interest.

THE TAILLESS STURGEON.

(Told by John York)

One time there was a family camping at Sturgeon Lake (Victoria County.) One day the old man went out to fish through the ice, and while fishing he saw a queer-looking fish. He speared it and killed it. Then tok it home and cooked it; all the family ate of it, and in a very short time they all took sick and died. These sturgeon from Sturgeon Lake are decended from a serpent which was cut in two a long time ago, but lived and bred young ones with no tails.

Note.—John York said he used to camp at Sturgeon Lake years ago. Had heard these sturgeon jumping at night, but had never caught any.

Sturgeon Lake has no sturgeon. The name may be given to it from its shape. There are no sturgeon in this chain of lakes, now known as the Kawartha Lakes.

The Social Problem.

(Told by John York.)

Once a small party left the Rama Reserve for the purpose of going on a hunt up the Gull River waters. Amongst the party was a bad man who had left his wife on the Reserve and had taken another woman with him, which was a very bad thing to do. After being on the hunt for some time the man died and was prepared for burial, and a grave dug. He was left in a place just outside the camp for three days before burial. One of the children of the camp who happened to go and look at the body, came back and said that clothes were pushed off the body's face and breast, so the older people went to see. They found this was so and the man coming to life. He came to life and said that he had been in heaven and was sorry for what he had done by leaving his wife on the Reserve, etc., but that he knew he was going to die in exactly a month from that day at midday, and would never see Rama again. After a short while the party moved camp on their homeward journey, and at Balsam Lake when the month was just about to be up the man said that he was going to die and knew he could not stop it. So he made a little camp and went in there. He was all right the night before and also on the morning of the last day, but before noon he said his time was near and began to act terribly crazy-like. His eyes stuck out and he chewed his tongue and rolled around his camp in terrible agony. He acted strangely and shook his camp so much that he so frightened the others that they were afraid to go near him; and so left him alone to die. His actions continued till noon, when the man died in horrible pain. Thus he was punished for leaving his wife and taking another woman.

John York's Own Story.

When he was a young man the Mohawks were bad at that time. Nobody was allowed to go out alone anywhere. He wanted to hunt very badly so he and another young man went out one morning quite a long way off the Reserve to hunt bear and deer. They got to Mud Lake (Carden township) the next day about the middle of the afternoon. They shot about twenty-five duck that night. The next morning early they heard something across the narrows, they looked and saw a great big, black bear. They got in their canoe and got near enough to shoot and kill the bear. While looking at the dead bear they heard another one coming down to drink, near where they were standing. They both shot and killed this one. They took the two bears in their canoe and started for home. After going down the lake a little way he looked up and saw three bears in a big oak tree. The two hunters got out of their canoe and went to the tree. He shot the big one but did not kill him outright, but had to shoot again. This left only one more shot ready for use, as they had one double and one single-barrel shot guns. The other two bears came down the tree. He shot one of these and killed it and the last bear had to come down when there was no shot ready for him. He (York) grabbed the bear by the legs till the other hunter got his gun loaded. The bear was a cub but fought like an old bear, tearing the clothes of the man. The hunters got the five bears and took them home. When they got home there was a big feast and everybody came and ate some bear meat, for their friends thought the hunters had been killed by the Mohawks.

GERMANS DISAPPOUNTED.

Casement Had Said 100,000 Irish Would Join Revolt.

Amsterdam, April 27.—Intense disappointment is felt in Germany, say despatches from Berlin, over the failure of Sir Roger Casement's expedition, which was expected to start a revolution that would overthrow British power in Ireland.

The German opinion is that the watchfulness of the British navy was responsible for the fiasco. Casement had given the Germans to understand that 100,000 fully armed Irish would rally to him.

The Cologne Volks Zeitung says that if the venture had succeeded it would have had an immediate influence on feeling in America towards Germany, but that now even the revolt at Dublin will do little good.

Suffered From Nerves Could Not Sleep

To the thousands of people who are tossing on sleepless beds night after night, or who pace the floor with nerves unhinged, and to whose eyes sleep will not come, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills offer the blessing of sound refreshing slumber.

They restore the equilibrium of the deranged nerve centres, thereby producing peaceful, undisturbed, refreshing sleep, and will cause you to get up in the morning feeling that you have the strength and vitality to go through your day's work.

Mrs. Hollas Knox, St. John, N.B., writes: "I suffered greatly with my nerves, I could not sleep at night, nor work, and the least little thing worked on my mind and bothered me. Last winter I thought I would go out of my mind, I would screech out, and my mother really thought I was going crazy with my nerves. It was so terrible I would hold my head and cry. I tried two doctors, but they did not do me any good. I thought I would tell you that to-day I am perfectly cured by using three boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and I can recommend them to all sufferers from nervous troubles. You can tell everyone that they are the only thing that did me any good."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have been on the market for nearly a quarter of a century, and are universally known as the best remedy for all heart and nerve troubles.

Price 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25 at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

COMMISSION VISIT PARIS

Nickel Investigators Cross Channel to Pursue Their Inquiries.

London, April 27.— Dr. Miller and Thomas W. Gibson, of the Ontario Nickel Commission, have been enquiring here for about a month, ago to Paris to pursue their investigations.

Richard Reid, representative of Ontario, and John Howard, of Halifax, also leave for Paris for the International Commercial Parliamentary conference.

DON'T SCOLD, MOTHER! THE CROSS CHILD IS BILIOUS, FEVERISH

Look at Tongue! If Coated, Clean Little Stomach, Liver, Bowels

Don't scold your fretful, peevish child. See if tongue is coated; this is a sure sign its little stomach, liver and bowels are clogged with sour waste.

When listless, pale, feverish full of cold, bad breath, throat sore doesn't eat, sleep, or act naturally, has stomachache, indigestion, diarrhoea give a tablespoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul waste, the sour bile and fermenting food passes out of the bowels and you have a well and playful child again. Children love this harmless "fruit laxative," and mothers can rest easy after giving it, because it never fails to make their little "insides" clean and sweet.

Keep it handy, Mother! A little given today saves a sick child tomorrow, but get the genuine. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Remember there are counterfeits sold here, so surely look and see that yours is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Hand back with contempt any other fig syrup.

OUR SERIAL STORY

"THE HARBOUR OF DOUBT"

BY FRANK WILLIAMS

CHAPTER I.

MALICIOUSLY ACCUSED.

"Let them think what they like. If I had died I would have been a hero because I lived I suppose that there is nothing in the history of crime that I have not committed."

Young Captain Code Schofield sprang out of the deep luxurious chair and began to pace up and down before the fire. He did not cast as much as a glance at the woman near him. His mind was elsewhere. He had heard strange things in his talk with her.

"Well, captain, you know how it is on an island like this. The tiny things of everyday life becomes a subject for day's discussion. That affair of six months ago was like dropping a tomb stone in a mud muddle—everything is profoundly stirred but no one gets spattered except the one who dropped it. In this case yourself."

Schofield stopped in his tracks and regarded his posters with a look that was mingled surprise and uneasiness. She lay back in a chaise-longue, her hands clasped behind her head, smiling up at the young man. The great square room was dark except for the firelight and her yellow dress, gleaming fitfully in it, showed her curving lissomeness of her young body.

"Mrs. Mallaby," he said, "when you say clever things like that I don't know what to do. I'm not used to it." He laughed as though half-ashamed of the confession.

"Appreciate them," she directed shortly with a fleeting glance from her great dark eyes.

"Do you demand all my time?" he asked and flushed. The well turned compliment caught her unawares and she admitted to herself that perhaps she had underrated this briny youth who was again beginning to interest her extremely.

But with the sally he seemed to have forgotten it and recommenced pacing the floor, his hands in his pockets and his brows knit. His mind had gone off again to this other vastly important thing.

She noticed it with a twinge of vexation. She vastly preferred the personal.

"What was it old Jed Martin said to you this afternoon?" he asked.

"That if the opinions of old sailors were of any account Nat Burns could get up a pretty good case against you for the loss of the May Schofield."

"I suppose he meant his own opinion. He is an old sailor now but if he lives to be one hundred and five he'll never be a good one. I could beat his vessel if I was on a two by four with a pillow case for a mainsail. I can't understand why he has turned against me."

"It isn't only he, it's—"

"I know it!" he burst out passionately. "It's the whole island of Grande Mignon from Freekirk Head to Southern Cross. Not a man nor woman but has turned against me since that awful day.

"Great God! what do they think? That I wrecked the old May for the fun of the thing? That I enjoyed fighting for my life in that sea and seeing the others drown with my very eyes? Dont' they suppose I will carry the remembrance of that all my life? My Heaven, Elsa, that was six months ago and I have just begun to sleep nights without the nightmare of it riding me!"

"Poor boy!"

Her voice calmed him like a touch on a restive horse and yet he unconsciously resented the fact that he did.

I haven't been blind, Code, and I have heard and seen this thing growing. It is hard for a fisherman to lose his ship and not suffer for it afterwards at the hands of inferior sailors. I've know you all my life, Code, and I believe in you now just as I did that day in school you took the whipping I should got for passing you a note.

"You haven't heard the last of the May Schofield and you won't until you lay the ghost that has come out of its grave. But whatever you do or wherever you are I want you to remember that I stand ready to help you in every way I can. All this"—she swept her arm about the richly furnished room—"is worthless to me now that Jim is gone, unless I can do some good for those I like. Please, Code, will you feel free to call on me if you need help?"

The flush that had receded returned with a flood of color that made his face beneath its fair hair appear very dark.

"Really, Elsa," he stammered, "that is awfully handsome of you but I hope things won't go as far as that. I can never forget what you have said."

Elsa Mallaby has always been like that to him. Even when she married "Hard-Luck" Jim Mallaby she had always seemed to regard Code Schofield as the one man in Freekirk Head. But Jim being too busy with his strange affairs, had not noticed.

Jim it was who after twenty years of horrible poverty and ill-luck, had caught the largest halibut ever taken off the banks and made thousands of dollars exhibiting it alive. And it was this same Jim who, for the remaining ten years of his life, turned to gold everything that he touched. Mallaby House was his real monument, for here on the great green hill that overlooked the harbour, he had erected a mansion that made his name famous up and down the Bay of Fundy. And here, seven years ago, he had brought Elsa Fuller as his bride—Elsa Fuller who was the belle of Freekirk Head, and had been to Boston to boarding-school.

It was to Mallaby House that Code Schofield had come to dinner this night. He had not wanted to come, and had only agreed when she bribed him with a promise of something very important she might reveal.

The revelation was hardly a pleasure. Nothing had been a pleasure to him since that day six months ago when his old schooner, dismasted and leaking in a gale, had foundered near the Wolves, two sharp-toothed islands near Grande Mignon. Four islanders had been lost that day and he alone had lived through the surf.

"What else did old Jed Martin say, Elsa?" he asked suddenly.

She knitted her brows and stared into the fire. Why should he always go back to that?

"He said that the May Schofield should have been able to live out that gale easily if she had been handled right, old as she was. She was pretty old, wasn't she"

"Fifty years. She was twenty when dad got her—he sailed her for twenty-eight and I had her for two."

"You got a good deal of insurance out of her, didn't you Code"

"Ten thousand dollars—her full value."

"And you bought the Charming Lass with that, didn't you?"

"Yes—that and two thousand that dad had saved. Why?"

"Old Jed Martin said something about that, too."

Schofield's face paled slightly and his mouth closed tightly, exhibiting the salience of his jaw.

"So that's it, eh? Thinks I ran her under for the insurance—the old barnacle. Is that around the island, too?"

"I guess it must be, or I shouldn't have heard about it. You didn't of course, did you, Code?"

"I hardly expected that you would ask that, Elsa. Why, I loved that old schooner like I love—well, my mother!"

"I believe you, Code; you don't need to ask that. I just wanted to hear you deny it. But you know there were some queer things about her sinking just then, when she was supposed to be in good condition. Nat Burns—"

"Ha! So he is in it, too. What does he say?"

"He says that her insurance policy was just about to run out. Is that so?"

"Yes."

There was a tone of defiance in the answer that caused her to look up at him quickly. His blue eyes were narrowed and his face hard.

"And it wasn't such a hard gale, was it?"

"No. I have weathered worse with the May. I can't explain why she sank."

"And Michael Burns, who was on board of her, was the insurance inspector, wasn't he?"

"Yes." The reply was more a groan than a spoken word. He laughed harshly.

"I can see Nat Burns's hand in all this," he cried. "Why didn't I think of it before? He will dog me till I die because his father lost his life aboard my schooner. Oh, I had no idea it was as bad as this!"

He sank down into the chair again and stared gloomily into the fire.

"I'm glad I came to-night," he said at last. "I didn't know all these things. How long has this talk been going round?"

—"Not long, Code." Her voice was all sympathy. "It is simply the result of brooding among our people who have so little in their lives. I'm sorry. What will you do? Go away somewhere else?"

He looked at her quickly — scorn written upon his face.

"Go away," he repeated, "and admit my own guilt? Well, hardly. I'll stay here and see this thing through if I have to do it in the face of all of them."

"Splendid, Code!" she cried clapping her hands.

"Just what I knew you would say. And, remember, I will help you all I can and whenever you need me."

He looked at her gratefully and she thrilled with triumph. At last there was something more in his glance than the purely impersonal; he had awakened at last, she thought, to what she might mean to him.

There followed one of those pauses that often occur when two people are thinking intensely on different subjects. For perhaps five minutes the cheerful fire crackled on uninterrupted. Then suddenly recollecting himself Code sprang to his feet and held out his hand.

"Half-past ten," he said, glancing at the mahogany chime clock on the mantelpiece. "I must really go. It has been kind of you to have me up to-night and tell me all these—"

"Inner secrets of your own life that you never suspected before?" she laughed.

"Exactly. You have done me a service like the good old friend you always were."

She took his hand, and he noticed that hers was a trifle cold. They started toward the hallway.

From the broad verandah of Mallaby House the view extended a dozen miles to sea. Beneath the hill on which the mansion stood the village of Freekirk Head nestled against the green. Now the dim, yellow lights of its many lamps glowed in the darkness and edged the crescent of stony beach where washed the cold waters of Flag's Cove.

To the left at one tip of the crescent the flash of Swallowtail Light glowed and died like the fire in a gigantic cigarette. To the right, at the other, could be seen the faint lamps of Castalia, three miles away.

For a minute they stood drinking in the superb beauty of it all. Then Elsa left him with a conventional word and Schofield heard the great front door close softly behind her.

Silently he descended the steps, when suddenly from the town below came the hideous, raucous shriek of a steam whistle.

He stood for a minute astonished, for the whistle was that of the steamer Grande Mignon, that daily plied between the island and the mainland. Now the vessel lay at her dock and Code, as well as all the island, knew that her wild signaling at such an hour foreboded some dire calamity.

Swiftly buttoning his coat, he started on a run down the winding, rocky path that led from Mallaby House. He cast one more glance towards the roofs of the village before he plunged among the pine and tamarack, and in an instant caught a red glow from the general direction of the fish wharfs.

CHAPTER II.

THE RED PERIL.

Five minutes of plunging and slipping brought him down to the main road that gleamed a dim gray in the blackness. A quarter of a mile east lay the wharfs, the general store, and some of the best dwellings in Freekirk Head.

Ahead of him in the distance he could see lanterns bobbing, and the illuminated legs of the men who carried them running. Behind he heard the muffled pound of boots in thick dust and the hoarse panting of others racing toward the scene of the trouble. The frantic screeching of the steamer's whistle (that was not yet silent) had done its work well. Freekirk Head was up in arms.

LINKS IN THE B. B. AND B. H. CHAIN

1729 saw the founding of the firm of Brandram Bros., the inventors of the Brandram Process of corroding White Lead,—a process that produces a lead that has been the standard White Lead of the world ever since.

In 1906 after handling Brandram's White Lead for many years, in the Canadian market, the firm of Brandram-Henderson purchased the Brandram Bros. formulae and exclusive rights to manufacture it in Canada.

In 1909 the final link was forged when the firm decided to use B. B. Genuine White Lead in the manufacture of their B. H. "ENGLISH PAINT and after practical tests and most careful research arrived at an exact formula guaranteed on every can under the President's signature. Thus was the chain completed.

The B. H. "ENGLISH" PAINT formula of 70 units of Brandram's B. B. Genuine White Lead and 30 units of pure White Zinc, in all tints and white with its ironclad guarantee, makes B. H. "ENGLISH" PAINT the Quality-Service-Paint of Canada.

TREATMENT FOR TUBERCULOSIS

JOHN A. TRIBYTACHER.

TESTIMONIAL.

I swallowed a large tank in April, 1910, and it lodged in my lung. This developed into tuberculosis. Four doctors treated me but I gradually became worse. Then my sister learned of Nature's Creation and got the medicine for me. When I began taking Nature's Creation, I was having night sweats continually, pains in my chest and both lungs. Several physicians said I could not live over 30 days. After taking the first bottle of Nature's Creation, a wonderful improvement was noticeable and I continue to improve. Weighed 107 pounds; now 128, and never have had any return of the old trouble.

How Many Fathers Do This?

By Daniel Boone.
(President of Midland Life.)

I know a man who has five sons. He believes in Life Insurance, and this is what he did for the boys. When each of the boys reached the age of seventeen, he insured his life for $5,000 on the 20 PAYMENT LIFE PLAN in favor of the mother, and said to them: "My son, I am going to pay the premium on your policy and keep it in force until you go to work and are earning enough to pay the premium yourself, and then I am going to give the policy to you. You can continue your mother as beneficiary, or if you should marry, you can change it and make your wife the beneficiary. IT WILL BE A NEST EGG FOR YOU IN LATER YEARS, AND WILL BE AN INCENTIVE FOR YOU TO SAVE."

All of the sons are STILL LIVING. All of them are IN BUSINESS FOR THEMSELVES, and all of them are paying the premiums on their policies. Two of these policies will soon mature.

It was a wise thing for the father to do. IT GAVE THESE BOYS A START IN LIFE, and was the easiest and best possible method to assist them, and create a desire in their mind to save money.

This is a true story. I know it to be true because I am the man who wrote their applications.

If your Boy is not already insured, why not give him a start in Life by placing a policy for him in the Sun Life Assurance Company, Canada's Leading Life Assurance Company.

HOME HAPPINESS.

Home pleasures and happiness should be considered foremost of all. No effort should be spared in trying to make the home the dearest and most attractive place on earth for each one of its inmates. It ought not to be regarded simply as a place to eat and drink but a place of refuge where we can return at any time from the trials and perplexities of the outside world, and meet with loving faces beaming with joy and happiness. No mansion where discord reigns is equal in attraction to the cottage where love is master.

Each member of the family should unite in the efforts to make home pleasant and enjoyable; one discontented and irritable member destroys the comfort of the whole family, just as a simple fault in painting spoils the whole picture; therefore we must endeavour to make ourselves pleasant and agreeable at all times for this reason, and for the upbuilding of our own characters. A Christian resignation and submission to all things is essential to true and real happiness, enabling us to be prepared for any fate that may befall us, strengthening both mind and body thereby.

Loving words and kind deeds must be our safeguard at all times in making home pleasant, for where love is master, happiness is inevitable. How unfortunate, indeed, are those persons, the peace of whose homes has succumbed to the fashion, and frivolities of the age regardless of circumstances.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID H. REEDER

SCHOOL LUNCHES: One of the best bulletins recently sent out by the Department of Agriculture at Washington covers this subject very well indeed. So important do I consider it that I am going to quote what I believe to be the most important feature of it in a series of articles:

"What should school children be given to eat at noon? What are best for the school lunch baskets? The frequent asking of these questions shows that mothers and others interested in children's welfare have unusual difficulty in planning this meal. There are no special scientific principles which apply to it more than to the other meals, for of course choosing healthful foods and preparing them carefully are no more necessary at this than at either of the other meals of the child's day. Nor is it wise to study one meal apart from the other two. The three taken together must if they are to satisfy the needs of the growing body, supply several different kinds of food materials. It is seldom convenient to provide all of these at one meal and those which are left out of one meal must be supplied at another. Breakfast, dinner or lunch and supper should therefore usually be thought of together as necessary to the making of a complete day's ration."

On the other hand it is particularly difficult to live up to one's ideals in a meal which is almost always hurried and which must often be prepared in one place and served in another. The midday meal of school children on days when school is in session has, therefore, problems of its own and may well be occasionally discussed, as it is in this bulletin apart from all other meals.

There are some places, small towns for example, where dwelling houses and schools are so close together that pupils can easily go home at noon. In these cases the thought or care necessar for the noonday meal is along the same line as that given to breakfast and supper. There are other places, however, and these include large cities as well as rural districts, where children are obliged because of distance, to remain at school over the noon hour. Under these circumstances most children carry their lunches. Some however, particularly in the cities, are given money with which to buy food. This practice is of course open to dangers for the money is too often spent in shops or at pushcarts over which those who are most interested in the children's welfare, have little control. To insure that food is prepared under proper conditions, lunch counters or lunch rooms have been established in many school buildings where the pupils may buy full lunches or certain dishes with which to supplement food brought from home. There are schools, too, where the task of preparing lunches, or at least one on two of the dishes to be served at noon is given to cooking classes as a laboratory or practice exercise.

The essentials of the diet of all normal children are of course the same—namely an abundance of simple foods carefully prepared and of sufficient variety to provide for activity which in healthy children is almost ceaseless during the waking hours, and for development into healthy manhood and womanhood. For this reason the general subject of food for children will be discussed before the special problems of the school lunch.

One of the chief practical food problems, whether children or grown people are concerned, is how to get good wholesome, clean bread. It has been shown that cereals provide nearly one-third by weight of all the food eaten by the American people and that they supply nearly half of the protein (commonly referred to as tissue building material) and nearly two thirds of the fuel or energy. The greater part of these cereals is of course served in the form of bread of one kind or another. The quality of the bread which is eaten is therefore an extremely important consideration.

It is not possible within the limits of this bulletin to give directions for making bread, nor is it necessary, for recipes can be obtained from any good general cook book. All that can be done here is to speak of the qualities of good bread. These are perhaps most clearly and concisely stated in the score cards commonly used in bread judging contests at State fairs, farmers' institutes and elsewhere. Such cards are designed especially for judging loaves of wheat bread, but with a little modification they can be used also for breads made wholly or partly of other cereals (corn, rye, oatmeal, etc.) and for bread in other forms, such as biscuits and rolls. In all cases the characteristics of the crust and the crumb (the inside of the loaf) the lightness and the flavor are taken into consideration.

The next article will tell of the importance of milk, eggs and other protein foods. The third article will tell of fruits and vegetables. I would suggest that these articles be saved, and that you call your neighbour's attention to them.

Anything that improves the health of your neighbor's children reduces the chance of disease infection to your own children.

"Here is the Nerve Food I know that will help you."

Malnutrition Failure to get the good of the food you eat.

It is not what you eat, but what you eat, digest and absorb, that counts in keeping up the health and vigor of the human body. If you are not getting the benefit of the food you eat you should suspect the nervous system, for the nerves control the flow of the gastric juices of the stomach and the other chemical fluids of the digestive system which effect the digestion of starches, fats, etc.

Especially at this season of the year digestion lags, appetite fails, you do not get the good of the food you eat and vitality is consequently lowered. You feel the effects in loss of energy and ambition, feelings of fatigue come over you and you lack in courage and good cheer.

Eating more will not help you, for you must have nourishment in an easily assimilated condition so that it may be taken up by the blood stream without effort. In short, you need such assistance as is best afforded by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

By using this food cure you enrich the blood and supply nourishment directly to the starved nervous system. The nerves which control the process of digestion are invigorated, digestion is improved, appetite sharpened, and gradually you are restored to health and vigor.

This is Nature's way. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food supplies the elements and the processes of Nature convert these elements into new, rich blood and new nerve force. You cannot fail to be benefited by such treatment, and the results obtained are lasting.

Gin Pills
FOR THE KIDNEYS

Relieve Constipation while Healing the Kidneys

Gin Pills have an almost world-wide reputation as a Kidney medicine—their healing, cleansing, soothing effect has earned unstinted praise from thousands.

But their virtues do not end with the relief of Kidney and Bladder Troubles. Gin Pills are excellent for the relief of constipation. We have hundreds of testimonials from people telling us they have found that in taking Gin Pills for Kidney and Bladder trouble, the Gin Pills also acted as a gentle cathartic and bowel stimulant.

This is only logical, as in building up a medicine to restore the Kidneys to perfect health, the bowels must receive attention as the other organs of excretion.

If you are constipated, you will find the real relief you desire in the use of Gin Pills, which will also regulate your kidneys even though you have so far failed to notice alarming symptoms of trouble in these organs.

Your dealers sell Gin Pills at 50 cents a box, or 6 boxes for $2.50.

Trim Street Suits For Spring and Summer

One-Piece Frocks of Taffeta and Other Soft Silks Also Popular

Hip or Knee Length Jackets Favored

NEW YORK, April 20.—Although the fashions are still undergoing changes—and before summer is fairly here, we shall probably find many novelties which have as yet not put in an appearance—for street wear, at least, styles are established. The panniers, bustles, ruffles, wired hip pockets, and other weird effects, are relegated to the house for evening and afternoons.

The Morning Walk on the Avenue.

One is gratified at the simple, trim street suits and the smart little frocks of taffeta and other silks which greet our eyes in a morning walk on the Avenue. The jacket of the serge, gaberdine, and novelty wool suits are hip or knee length, fitted well through the shoulders and at the waist, which is usually a trifle raised, and are finished with full basques. The skirt, many of them, are of the circular gored models, and hang full and grace ful from the top of a high inside belt. The effect of these jackets, worn with this type of skirt, or with one of the numerous pleated models, which are equally popular, is exceedingly smart, and more to the point perhaps, most becoming almost all types of figure.

Styles Which Conceal Either Slenderness or Avoirdupois

The spring and summer styles, many of them, seem to be designed with the idea of concealing slenderness, but at the same time, fortunately, they serve equally well to conceal an overabundance of flesh. For instance, let us consider the fitted jacket, with waist raised slightly above the normal, and the full, fan-tail coat, pleated or flared; such a model, while softening to angles, also straightens out curves most effectively. These coats, originated by Mme. Paquin, will in all probability be the features of the spring and summer tailored suits of serge, linen, or novelty sport materials.

The Charming Summer Silk Frocks.

We have too thoroughly enjoyed the comfort and becomingness of the simple one-piece frock of silk to let it disappear from view even for a summer. They are being used for the street, for the house, and for evening wear this season, being even more popular than for the past season or two. Plain, crisp taffetas are used in their fashioning, soft crepes, and crepe de Chines, foulards and printed silks in checked and flowered effects. Mme. Callot sends us a charming little model of plain navy blue taffeta, combined with Pompadour silk; it has a full, gathered skirt of the plain blue, and a quaint corsage and bustle effect of the Pompadour silk, in its soft, delicate colorings. There is a quaint laced bodice which lends a dainty touch. The sleeves and body portion of the waist are of white lawn, and the belt-girdle is laced over the bust and held in place with shoulder straps.

There are any number of interesting sleeveless outer or three-piece dress effects which strongly appeal to many. These are of taffeta or satin, and are to a great extend replacing the short capes introduced a little earlier.

TORNADOES CAUSE DEATH.

Eleven Lives Reported Lost in Kansas and Missouri.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 22.—Eleven persons were reported dead Thursday and scores injured, several seriously, in a succession of tornadoes which swept through the central portions of eastern Kansas and western Missouri Wednesday night. Property damage is believed to be heavy. Storm areas centred north of Topeka and in a line running from the southwestern corner of Wilson County in Kansas, across the Missouri line into the border counties.

A GOOD MEDICINE FOR THE SPRING

Do Not Use Harsh Purgatives—A Tonic Is All You Need

Not exactly sick—but not feeling quite well. That is the way most people feel in the spring. Easily tired, appetite fickle, sometimes headaches, an da feeling of depression. Pimples or eruptions may appear on the skin, or there may be twinges of rheumatism or neuralgia. Any of these indicate that the blood is out of order—that the indoor life of winter has left its mark upon you and may easily develop into more serious trouble.

Do not dose yourself with purgatives, as so many people do, in the hope that you can put your blood right. Purgatives gallop through the system and weaken instead of giving strength. Any doctor will tell you this is true. What you need in spring, is a tonic that will make new blood and build up the nerves. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine that can do this speedily, safely and surely. Every dose of this medicine makes new blood which clears the skin, strengthens the appetite and makes tired, depressed men, women and children bright, active and strong. L. R. Whitman, harmony Mills, N.S., says:—"As a tonic and strength builder I consider Dr. Williams' Pink Pills wonderful. My whole system was badly run down, and although I faithfully took a tonic given me by my doctor I could note no improvement. Then I began Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and was soon restored to my old time health. I can most heartily indorse this medicine."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S CIRCULAR SKIRT.

By Anabel Worthington.

The circular petticoat is being very cordially received since the increasing fullness in the skirt means style, and as the wider width skirt is to remain with us the woman who has not a petticoat with necessary fulness will make one, suiting herself as to whether it shall have ruffles.

A very popular model to copy is shown in illustration, No. 7,673. This petticoat is attached to a three gored yoke; the seam in the back marks where the closing is made and the picture shows precisely the graceful fall the garment has from the yoke to the hem. If you wish, you may add ruffles or ruchings, cutting strips about two inches wide, arranging at equal distances, three ruffles, one above the other, or, if you prefer, cut the skirt in pointed outline and make the ruffles three deep; this gives a most effective setting for a garment to be used for special occasions.

The pattern is cut in sizes 22-32 inch. 36 inch material; without the ruffles, 2¾ waist measure. In size 24 inch the width of the lower edge will be 2¾ yards; making with the ruffles it will take 3½ yards. To obtain the pattern send 20c cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

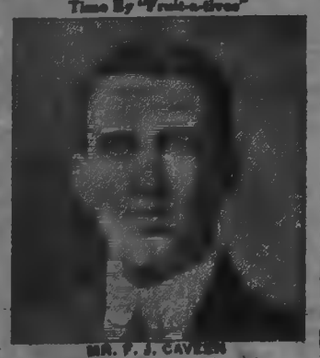
SHARP ATTACK REPULSED

Dangerous Condition Relieved Just in Time By "Fruit-a-tives"



MR. F. J. CAVEEN
662 Gerrard St. East, Toronto.

For two years, I was a victim of Acute Indigestion and Gas In The Stomach. It afterwards attacked my Heart, and I had pains all over the body, so I could hardly move around. I tried all kinds of medicines but none of them did me any good. At last, acting on the advice of a friend, I decided to try 'Fruit-a-tives'. I bought the first box last June, and now I am well, after using only three boxes. I recommend 'Fruit-a-tives' to anyone suffering from Indigestion, no matter how acute". FRED J. CAVEEN.

Simple Indigestion often leads to Heart Attacks, Catarrh of the Stomach and constant distress of mind and body. If you are bothered with any Stomach Trouble, and especially if Constipation troubles you, take 'Fruit-a-tives'.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent postpaid by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

WAITED ENTIRELY TOO LONG.

Man Gets Black Eye for Delaying Professions of Love.

The poor, weeping woman stood before the judge, and the sympathies of the spectators went out to her. She looks muscular, but so miserable, says Answers, London.

"You are charged," said the magistrate, sternly but kindly, "with assaulting your husband."

Choking down her sobs, the prisoner wiped away her tears with a brawny hand and replied sadly:

"Yes, your worship. I only asked the brute if he would ever cease to love me, and he was so long in answering that I hit him in the eye with a broom. I'm only a defenceless woman," she went on in broken voice, "and a woman's life without love is a mere blight."

Hair Pulling Ends New Religion Talk

Suffragists Fight at Belmont Club House After Hindu Addresses Meeting.

NEW YORK, April 28.—What was to have been a harmonious interchange of economic and religious opinions, with the main idea of converting the unregenerate to the cause of "votes for women," developed Monday night, according to information received yesterday, into a hair-pulling contest in front of the suffrage club house, owned by Mrs. O H. P. Belmont.

Mrs. Belmont was not present when half a dozen Jewish women rose to defend their faith and two others, of different religious beliefs, grabbed for their hat pins when the meeting at No. 13 East Forty-second street almost got beyond the control of the chairman, Miss Florence Herman, who arranges these weekly forums. Many of those attending the gathering failed to see the finish of the fight started inside, when one woman sent another sprawling to the sidewalk, somewhere between the two tall white suffragette bulletins that adorn the building and the curb.

All this went on while T. Ishi Butes, a Hindoo, with a mellifluous voice, talked about the new religion and the discrimination in California against his people and the Japanese. It wasn't to have been just that kind of a meeting, for Miss Herman had arranged for a Hindu princess to tell about the economic position of her sex in the Orient.

But the princess contracted pneumonia or something, according to Miss Harman, so T. Ishi Butes substituted. Then he invited others present to speak, and the chairman gave them the floor, which they began taking one at a time, until finally half a dozen insisted upon having it all at once, and in order to quell what began to look like a riot Miss Harman told them they would have to stop talking about religion or get out.

Those who couldn't bring their arguments to an end then and there got out and finished telling each other some home truths when on the sidewalk. They pulled hair, shouted in one another's ears, and one, a little more excited than the others, gesticulated so emphatically that she sent her oratorical opponent sprawling on the pavement.

"We were so engrossed with the discussion after the meeting was over that we didn't hear anything about the fight," Miss Harman said yesterday. "Afterward we all went and had a friendly cup of tea."

Little sawdust piles at the base of trees indicate where the borer is at work. Dig him out with a knife and wire.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN IS SUED.

Essanay Film Co. Asks $500,000 for Violation of Contract.

New York, April 26.—Charlie Chaplin was sued in the Supreme Court yesterday by his former employers, the Essanay Film Company, for $500,000 damages for alleged breach of contract.

According to the papers, Chaplin made a year's contract with the Essanay company, ending December 1915, at $1,250 a week. In the spring of last year, however, it is alleged that Chaplin asked for an increase, which was granted on the basis of a bonus of $100,000, payable in sums of $10,000 upon the completion of each of ten pictures.

Under this arrangement Chaplin was supposed to complete a two-reel picture every three weeks. The Essanay company alleges that during this period Chaplin failed to report at the studio for eighty-one days, for which he was being paid $1,250 a week, and it is necessary, therefore, under the contract for him to complete three more pictures.

Chaplin already has a suit against the Essanay company for an injunction preventing them from exhibiting his film "Carmen" on the ground that it was padded from two to six reels.

MRS. HETTY GREEN IS CRITICALLY ILL AFTER A STROKE

Now in Eightieth Year, She Said at Seventy-Seven She Wanted to Continue Work Until She Died.

NEW YORK, April 27.—Mrs. Hetty Green, often described as "the wealthiest woman in the world," was reported to be dangerously ill late last night in the home of her son, Edward H. R. Green, at No. 5 West Ninetieth street.

Her attendants said that she was stricken quite suddenly three days ago, had been unconscious much of the time since then, and was only semi-conscious last midnight.

Two nurses were at her bedside constantly and physicians were coming and going. The apartment on the second floor was alive with excitement. All rooms, excepting that in which the aged invalid lay, were lighted, as were the servants' quarters on the top floor.

If Mr. Green was in his home he refused to see callers or to make a statement. An effort was made to prevent the fact of Mrs. Green's illness from becoming public, but persons not attached to the household, who had been in attendance upon Mrs. Green said her condition was critical following a stroke of paralysis.

The fact that she is in her eightieth year militates against the chance of her recovery, it was explained, aside from the fact that the attack of paralysis severely affected her nervous system.

Active Until Stricken.

Mrs. Green had continued her wonderful physical and mental activities up to the time she was stricken on Sunday. On Friday she had closed negotiations for the erection of a fine residence at No. 7 West Eighty-first street, facing Manhattan square and the American Museum of Natural History, which she was to give to her daughter Sylvia, who a few years ago became the wife of Matthew Astor Wilks.

At that time she was living at No. 9 West Ninetieth street, but when she had contemplated arrangements for the erection of a home for her daughter and had approved the architect's plans and had made the contracts with the builders she moved back to Hoboken, where for years she said she had lived happily in a modest flat the rent of which was $24 a month.

Her son and daughter opposed her return to Hoboken, but she said those had been her happiest days and where she was not bothered by the constant appeals of those who wanted money.

No one would say last night where Mrs. Green was when she was stricken. If she was in her flat in Hoboken no one there knew of her illness or told about it. It was believed she had been calling upon her son when stricken.

While Mr. Green, popularly known as "Colonel" Green, because he once commanded a Texas National Guard regiment, had endeavoured in recent years to relieve his mother of much of the work attendant upon the care of her vast fortune, she refused to be retired, and each business day saw her at "her bank" and at her business offices in the Trinity Building. She is a large stockholder in the Chemical National Bank and daily was at that bank transacting business.

Work Her Great Pleasure.

Mr. Green assumed charge of her extensive holdings of real estate in this and other cities. When she was seventy-seven years old, two years ago last autumn, she said she would never retire from work until she died, that work was her pleasure.

On the occasion of that birthday she ascribed her good health and remarkable activity to the fact that every day, before and after meals, she chewed baked onions. At the time of her interview she was chewing on a piece of onion and proudly said that vegetable had prolonged her life and usefulness.

At that time Mrs. Green had formed a close friendship with the Countess Leary and had remained in her home for weeks at a time. It was reported that Mrs. Green was aiding several Catholic charities which the Countess was interested in.

Mrs. Green said, on the occasion of her seventy-seventh birthday, that she had no idea of the value of her estate, but that she intended to take an inventory the first of the year, January 1, 1914, and then would make the amount public. However, if she took the inventory she did not announce the result. No one has been able to give any kind of a competent estimate of her wealth. So closely has she guarded her assets that it was said that even her son had no more idea than the public.

Besides vast holdings of real estate in this city, Chicago, St. Louis and Kansas City, she owns extensive lands in many Western States. More closely has she guarded the contents of her safety deposit vaults, wherein she has stored her holdings of stocks and bonds. Those are believed to be very large.

Every Man admires a workmanlike job

And that is why any man who is thinking of installing a heating system should examine the Sunshine Furnace. It is a piece of work he will take to.

Every part is well thought out. The sections are carefully made. The whole is substantially and accurately put together.

And there is a sound reason for every feature. Take the shape of the fire-pot as an example. The straight walls allow the ashes to fall instead of lodging against the sides where they would interfere with the free passage of heat from the burning coal.

See the large double tight-fitting doors. Notice how easily the dampers are controlled. Not much trouble to shut off the fire and hold the heat with this furnace. See how dust is directed up the chimney whenever the fire is shaken down. Note the large radiating surfaces and wide passages for heating the air.

It was a man who knew his job that designed

"Paint My House, Too"

The spirit of neighborhood improvement fills the very air. The glad, bright colors of spring have replaced the somber hues of winter. Grass is green—flowers are springing into glorious bloom. Nature is providing a beautiful setting. Is your house in harmony—or do the fresh-looking surroundings only serve to emphasize its dullness? Does it complete the picture—is it well painted?

Now's the time of all times to dress up your home in fresh, new colors. The first essential in home improvement is good paint, and the paint that you can depend upon to be good is

Lowe Brothers HIGH STANDARD LIQUID - PAINT

You take no chances, you know exactly what the contents of every can of "High Standard" will do. Forty years of experience and countless exposure tests have made this knowledge definite. Chemical analysis of the raw materials and thorough machine mixing insure a uniform product.

You get in "High Standard" a paint that works easier, and spreads farther than cheaper paints—a paint that hides better and protects better the surface of your building—a paint that does not fade, that holds tight to the surface in perfectly protecting coats—that fails only by gradual wear and leaves a good surface for repainting.

It actually costs less to use this better paint and get its perfect protection. It goes so much farther—and it lasts so much longer on the building that its use is true economy. Ask us for an estimate on your paint requirements.

PROFIT FROM HUN ERRORS

ALLIES STUDY VERDUN 'DRIVE.'

It Has Delayed the Intended General Offensive—Enemy Plans Known In Advance.

LONDON, April 27.—Many signs portend an early resumption of the offensive by the British armies on the western front, according to English military experts. Whether their expectations are realised or not, there is no doubt that Sir Douglas Haig could have launched his bolt before this, but for the fact that the allied commanders are closely studying the German drive against Verdun in order to profit by the mistakes made by the Teuton armies.

Reports from Paris that the closing of the German-Swiss border indicates that the Germans are starting a great flanking movement in Alsace that has as its objective the masking of the entire eastern line of French fortresses were given little credence here to-day. Such a move would necessitate violation of Swiss neutrality, and the opinion in England is that Germany will avoid by every means possible steps that would increase the number of its active foes.

Plans Are Known.

The plans of the German general staff are known to the French and British War Offices. That the Germans would launch an attack on Verdun late in February became known to the allied commanders early in that month. Two weeks before the Teutons made their first assault field hospital contingents in the Verdun front were heavily increased. Reserves that had been held in Paris were sent to the Meuse region. The product of most of the munition factories in Paris was diverted to Verdun.

SAILOR HAS SACRED TURTLE

Huge Chelonian Has Lived in Mexico Since Days of Columbus.

A huge turtle, which probably was slumbering in some Mexican jungle when Columbus was landing in the West Indies, arrived in San Francisco on the steamship Centralia, says a despatch from that city. On its back were carved ancient hieroglyphics.

Jack Wilson, sailor on the vessel, said he found the turtle at San Jose de Cabo. He is certain it was once worshipped by Indians as a god, hence the cabalistic characters. An attempt may be made to interpret the mysterious signs.

U. S. WARNED BRITAIN?

Editor of "Gaelic American" Says Von Igel Papers Revealed Plot.

NEW YORK, April 27.—That President Wilson's administration had knowledge of the plot to land munitions on the Irish coast through the Von Igel paper and warned the British Government, which warning resulted in the capture of Sir Roger Casement and the German expedition, is the charge made by John Devoy, editor of the Gaelic American, says the Times. In an editorial which will appear Saturday, Devoy will say in part:

"The worst blow the insurgents received was the sinking of the German auxiliary cruiser with a load of arms and ammunition on board. The silence with which the first blow was delivered proved that the secret was well kept. There was no informer or British spy who was able to learn the plans of the insurgents, but that deficiency was supplied by the Washington Government, which paid the Irish handsomely for putting Woodrow Wilson in power and thus enabling him to do this timely service to his mother country, which is dearer to him than the one in which he was born."

Captain Offley, head of the Bureau of Investigation here, denied yesterday that the Von Igel papers Washington the least hint of was to happen in Ireland this He admitted, however, that I was mentioned in some of them.

"There were just a few l from crazy Irishmen," said C Offley, "such as you would pa attention to under any circumsta —letters which said what a thing it would be for the worl Germany went over and made Irish free."

Increase In Price of Stockings Due to War

Although the pinch of war has not been felt to any great extent the advance in the prices of many commodities is more than noticeable. Stockings, for instance, have increased in value. A serious study will bring to the average mind the reasons for this. The cashmeres and the Llama wool necessary in the production of stockings is now difficult to obtain, and difficult to transport.

When one considers the millions of pairs of stockings that are going to waste in Europe, which must be reprovided, it is not hard to understand that wool must by now have become scarce. The stockings used by the soldiers are not laundered and used again. War permits of no such measures. They are thrown away.

Cotton stockings too, have advanced in price, since so much cotton thread is used in the manufacture of Red Cross supplies for both the army and navy.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

What a Cornet Did

A Story of War in East Prussia

By F. A. MITCHEL

O hark, O hear! How thin and clear
And thinner, clearer, farther going!
O sweet and far from cliff and scar
The horns of Elfland faintly blowing!
Blow, let us hear the purple glens replying:
Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying, dying.
—Tennyson.

The killing and maiming of combatants are not all that is terrible in war. When the mailed fist is raised law, which has been the sole arbiter in the affairs of men, hides its face. The general commanding takes his place on the bench. But the general cannot even control his own troops. The victorious trooper frequently becomes a plunderer. When an army invades an enemy country those who have lived securely under the law flee before it as from an engulfing wave. And it matters not whether one is friend or foe; the soldier unrestrained by constant military discipline becomes a wild beast.

Paul Stanislaus, a Russian Pole, early developed a taste for music. When but eighteen years of age, being very poor, in order to make a living he enlisted in the band of a regiment stationed at Warsaw. The instrument he played was the cornet. At this he became so proficient that when the band played in the public gardens he was frequently selected to play a solo.

On one occasion when the band was playing the national hymn at a ceremony attending the reception of the czar Paul led with his cornet. His instrument, accompanied by a hundred other pieces, rang out in such clear and inspiring tones that the emperor's admiration was excited, and he sent the musician a present of 100 rubles.

When Paul Stanislaus left the band he took his instrument with him, and many a time some ceremony was made impressive by his rendition of the national anthem. Then would the Pole forget the dismemberment of his nation or dream of the day when its three parts—Austrian, German and Russian—would be again united under one independent government.

Stanislaus drifted northward and finally married and settled down within the border of East Prussia. There he worked a little farm, but no great a portion of the year was given to winter that there was not much time left in which to grow farm products, and there was little profit.

A family grew up about him. His wife was a good manager and made the most of the scanty income. Little by little, year by year, she added something to the family comforts, and what she and her husband had not money to pay for they made with their own hands. When a child was born to them Paul would add an additional room to his little home, and in time there were six of these additions nestling up against the central building like so many chicks against the mother hen.

Then, too, there were frequent additions to the furniture. Paul was handy with tools, and, though he had never learned the trade, he was no mean cabinetmaker. Now it was a bed, now a crib, or, rather, a bunk for one of his children, now an easy chair, all made out of plain material, but strong and not rough. And as for quilts, the wife was as apt at saving odds and ends for the purpose as patching them together.

In this way the nest grew in size and in comfort, though so slow was the process that it was like the hands of a clock that are not seen to move. Paul and his wife loved their home because they had not received it all finished at the hands of some generous giver, but had made it all themselves through a term of years. As for the children, they loved it for the best reason in the world—because it was home.

There had been when the property was bought a small mortgage on it. From the first the couple put aside a certain sum each year, if it were only 10 rubles ($10), and slowly during a long term of years they had seen the amount they owed becoming smaller. At last it was reduced to 100 rubles, then 50, then 10. When the last 10 rubles were paid the couple invited their intimate friends to sup with them, and when all were ranged around the table Paul took the mortgage document and burned it before them. Then all drank health and prosperity to the happy family who owned their home and everything in it.

Amid the rejoicing a horseman rode up to the door and cried out:

"Are there any reservists here?"

"No. Why do you ask?"

"The kaiser has declared war against Russia, and all reservists of the first line are called to the colors."

The happiness of the Stanislaus family was turned to anxiety. They were Russian Poles living in Germany. The boys were too young for military service, and the father was beyond the age for first line troops. But they lived on the border, on German territory, and the tide of battle was liable to sweep over them.

Day after day spark after spark lit new flames. Russia declared war against Germany. France, as Russia's ally, did the same. Germany hurried across the border into Belgium, which drew England into the fray. All was preparation, while troops were being moved to points for defense or attack. Germany, having hurled its first strength westward, gave the slow moving Russians on the east time to concentrate and take the offensive.

Then came the Russian drive into East Prussia. The army, a vast horde, crossed the line by a route leading directly toward the Stanislaus home. On they came with fire and sword, accompanied by the thunder of their guns.

"We shall be swept away before the hurricane!" cried Stanislaus. "All we have been gathering for so many years will be lost."

"You are a Russian subject," said his wife. "You have been musician in a Russian regiment. Can you not make them understand this?"

"We will be overrun by stragglers and pillagers. They will have no mercy."

One morning the devastating horde reached the Stanislaus home. They were moving to attack the Germans farther within the border. There was no fighting, but one wing of the army passed down a road not a hundred yards from the Polanders' home. A number of men bent on loot, seeing the comfortable looking house, with its additions and a vegetable garden beside it, broke away from the column and scudded along, bending low to the ground so as to escape detection by their officers. The family saw them coming. The father seized a gun, but put it back. The mother fell on her knees and began to pray. The children wrung their hands, and some of them sought places in which to hide. A dozen men entered the house and began to appropriate everything in sight. They were a savage lot, and soon all thought of what they were taking was overtopped by the occupants' fear that they would be murdered.

Stanislaus believed that if he could attract the attention of an officer he might secure protection. He started out for the purpose, but one of the troopers, probably realizing his intention, hurled him back.

Stanislaus' cornet, on which he had played when a member of a Russian military band, hung on the wall over a fireplace. An idea occurred to him for calling for assistance. Seizing the instrument, he began to play the Russian national anthem. Clear and solemn, the beautiful air rang out, passed through the open door, its vibrations sweeping over the land far and near.

At the first notes off came the head covering of every pillager. Then they began to drop such plunder as they held in their hands; then they unloaded their pockets, all the while their heads bowed reverently.

A general riding at the head of his staff reined in his horse and listened. A brass instrument needs distance. It is "thin and clear" when heard from afar, and its harsher tones are softened. The general recognized the hymn of his fatherland. He doffed his hat. His staff followed his example. Men marching in the ranks, hearing the hymn and seeing the general uncovered, took off their hats. When the last notes died away he said:

"There is only one man who can play the hymn as it has been played, that is Paul Stanislaus of the old —th regiment, in which I was once a captain."

Then, turning his horse's head toward the house from which the sounds emanated, he rode thither, followed by his staff.

The looters saw him coming, and by the time he reached the door they were standing at attention before it, dreading his wrath.

"Paul Stanislaus, where are you?"

"Here, general!"

Stanislaus, his cornet in his hand, came out of the house and saluted.

"Do you recognize me?" asked the general.

"No, general."

"I have heard you play that anthem many a time when I was an officer of the —th regiment of the line at Warsaw and was present when you played it before the czar, and he sent you a gift. As soon as I heard it just now I knew that you were the musician."

"Many years have passed since I was one of the band of the —th, general. We have changed."

"Why did you just play it?"

"To call an officer. I need protection."

The general understood and looked at the men who stood trembling before him. He ordered one of his staff to march them away, then dismounted and went into the house. Seeing the confusion, he knew what had occurred. A table, on which were writing materials, stood near, and approaching it he wrote a safeguard which he handed to Stanislaus. Then he asked him to stand in front of the house and play again the Russian hymn.

Stanislaus did as requested, and as regiment after regiment marched past on the road below each burst into song, above which rang the clear tones of the cornet. When the anthem had been repeated again and again the general said to Stanislaus:

"You may be too old to fight, but you are not too old to inspire others to fight by the soul you put into music. Here are a hundred rubles to make up for the ruin done by these pillagers, who, I promise you, shall be severely punished. After you have repaired the damage done by them I desire that you follow the army and join me wherever I may be. You shall be with me at my headquarters, and before we go into battle you shall breathe love of the fatherland into the souls of my men. I as their general am expected to inspire them to deeds of valor, but were I the god of war himself I could not move them as you can move them by the power of song."

While the general was speaking these words Stanislaus and his family stood in respectful attention. When he had finished he put spurs to his horse and rode on.

Then father, mother and children clung to one another in an embrace. Then they all fell on their knees and gave thanks. Then—they began to clean up.

Throw Away Your Eye-Glasses!

A Free Prescription

You Can Have Filled and Use at Home.

Do you wear glasses? Are you a victim of eye-strain or other eye-weaknesses? If so, you will be glad to know that there is real hope for you. Many whose eyes were failing, say they have had their eyes restored through the principle of this wonderful free prescription. One man says, after trying it: "I was almost blind; could not see to read at all. Now I can read everything without any glasses and my eyes do not water any more. At night they would pain dreadfully; now they feel fine all the time. It was like a miracle to me." A lady who used it says: "The atmosphere seemed hazy with or without glasses, but after using this prescription for fifteen days everything became clear. I can even read fine print without glasses." It is believed that thousands who wear glasses can now discard them in a reasonable time and multitudes more will be able to strengthen their eyes so as to be spared the trouble and expense of ever getting glasses. Eye troubles of many descriptions may be wonderfully benefited by following the simple rules. Here is the prescription: Go to any active drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto tablets. Drop one Bon-Opto tablet in a glass of water and allow to dissolve. With this liquid, bathe the eyes two to four times daily. You should notice your eyes clear up perceptibly right from the start and inflammation will quickly disappear. If your eyes are bothering you, even a little, take steps to save them now before it is too late. Many hopelessly blind might have been saved if they had cared for their eyes in time. The Valmaz Drug Co., of Toronto, will fill the above prescription by mail, if your druggist cannot.

Advertisement City Druggists to whom the above article may be referred: Bon-Opto is a very remarkable remedy. Its eminent ingredients are well known to and are specified by druggists and widely prescribed by them. It can be obtained from any good druggist and if any of your customers prefer to get it that way, be kept on hand for regular use is almost every family.

The Warne Drug Co., fills many Bon-Opto prescriptions and will gladly fill yours.

EXPLOSIVES FROM AIR

Discovery that is Available For All Nations.

The great discovery has recently been made that the high explosives can be produced from the air we breathe.

As every body knows the air is composed among other things of nitrogen and oxygen. You separate the nitrogen, which is a gas, and reduce it by a chemical process to liquid form from which nitric acid is made and from this nitric acid many high explosives are made.

The best known plant for this purpose is at present in Norway, but the Chief of Armaments of the United States recently recommended that his Government should establish a factory to meet possible demands of the American army and navy in the future.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from any druggist and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than an ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

Pro-German By Nature; Pro-Ally By Conviction

Dr. James A. B. Scherer, president of Throop College of Technology, sends the following letter to the New York Tribune, which is published under the caption, "The Confessions of a Dehyphenated American":

This morning I was told that a pro-German publication in New York has severely criticised the college of which I am the president for having permitted the delivery before its assembly of what is characterized as an anti-German speech. .....I intend to take advantage of this New York attack on Throop College to assume my full share of responsibility for Mr. Garfield's speech, and also to go a bit further.....Let this attack on Throop College be directed at me, and if the time has come in American institutions that a president may not have equal privileges with a professor in expressing individual opinions on subjects that he regards as profoundly important then let this particular office seek a new president.

OF GERMAN ANCESTRY.

Until a few weeks ago I had so far regarded President Wilson's early appeal for neutrality as to observe, with the most scrupulous care, in every public or published utterance, the strictest abstention from the expression of opinion on the war.

I was the more ready to do this, not only on account of my present position, but also because of my paternal antecedents and former connections. Bearing a German name, ordained at the age of 21 to the Lutheran ministry, and president before I came here of a college established by German-Americans, and maintained by their descendants, I have many dear friends and close kinfolk whom I would not lightly grieve by an open attack on positions which are presumably as vital to them as mine are to me. But the President's "neutral" course, which I have observed with a slowly waning confidence and a steadily increasing alarm has at length disgusted me and filled me, as an American, with humiliation and shame; so that in February last I signed the declaration of the American Rights Committee, by which I will stand or fall.

HOW ATTITUDE CHANGED.

The development of my anti-German position is of singular origin. For fully twenty years my education was solidly directed, without break or hindrance, to the glorification of everything German. Above all I was taught to admire the German Reformation, and everything that came of it. Moreover, whenever it seemed to me, as sometimes happened, that its fruits in this country did not quite made for the tree. I was told that in order for Teutonic institutions to be properly appreciated they must be observed growing on their own native soil; that the Vaterland, in other wards, was quite a living witness to the spiritual power and pre-eminent ethical superiority of Lutheran Germanism. This I accepted on faith. Anyone curious to see the personal reaction produced by this kind of education may find it in my first published book, "Four Princes of the Church," (1903), written on the basis of other books and of reverently received hearsay, and culminating in a treatment of German Protestantism as a shining example of "the full corn in the ear."

VIOLENT DISILLUSIONMENT

In 1907 I made my first visit to Germany. The result was a violent disillusionment. I went intent upon further studies of German Lutheranism, and I came back resolved never again to open my mouth in glorification of the pre-eminent spiritual and ethical power of modern Germany. In my opinion it is wholly unfair to judge the Lutheran Reformation, as I have been told by dogmatic partisans to do, by contemporary Germany — clutched in the grip of a Prussianism which, so far as my own eyes can see, gives not a fig for Luther's faith or for vital Christianity of any kind. If a tree is to be judged by its fruit as I found them in Germany — Germany, contrasted with such countries as America and England, Holland and France—then the tree which I have been taught to regard as the veritable tree of life would seem to have something wrong with it.

Subsequent visits only confirmed the impression of the first one. Efficiency, I found in an impressive and depressing degree; it did not take long to find out that kultur is a very different product from culture. Prussianism I came up against, as against a solid brass wall, everywhere; but Lutheranism as a spiritual power, had to be looked for. Far from being the obvious fountain head of dominant Teutonic conflict, as I had been taught to believe, it seems confined, as a vital religious power, to fruitful obscurity.

A SOULLESS MACHINE.

I am aware that some of my best friends profess a different experience; I can only recount my own. The Germany I had been taught to believe in, seemed in a word, to have undergone a complete metamorphosis; the Germany of Luther and Goethe and Beethoven, big and warm, and tender and free, has been shaped by the iron hand of the Hohenzollern into a marvellous but soulless machine, headed by a comfortable people going blind. That is the dominant impression Germany produced on me, utterly to my surprise, in the year 1907, and the pride I take in my German ancestors, who came to this country 150 years ago is hardly diminished by the fact that they came from old Germany rather than now.

It is not easy, however, to throw off wholly the shell of a shattered tradition, and it is almost impossible to escape from the deep reverence and sympathies ingrained by prolonged education in one undeviating direction. I was in Europe in the summer of 1914. Returning just before the war broke out, fresh from the liberalising influence of European contact, which every traveller knows how to appreciate, and startled by the apparent rashness of the outbreak, shut myself in my study for a fortnight and tried, for the sake of old blood and old ties, but above all for the sake of fair play and justice, to get the modern German point of view regarding this war. Not only did I read the White Paper when it appeared, but also again, the history of modern Germany, the life of Bismarck, the speeches of the present emperor, and the works—in part, at least—of Bernhardi and Treitschke.

KULTUR WILLED THE WAR

As for the German White Paper, no one, however sympathetic can read it carefully without wondering over the cool suppression of fundamental parts of Serbia's amazingly acquiescent reply to the severe ultimatum of Austria, which reply is really the hinge on which turns the whole heavy responsibility for this war. The further I read into German books, seeking the German point of view, the more was I led by these writings themselves away from all possibility of sympathy to a conviction, which has gradually become most profound, that the German government, with its highly efficient kultur, has in deliberately willing this wholly unnecessary war, with its much boasted "frightfulness," reverted to a barbarism infinitely more revolting than that of a pre-Christian epoch, with a cynicism that strikes the heart cold, this Prussic Germania fears the sacred law or contract, on which all civilisation is founded, into scraps of paper, massacres Belgium, stealthily murders American women and children on the high seas, and flirts with an effeminate administration at Washington with small effort to hide her contempt.

MORE NOTES ARE NEEDED.

To say that England and France are fighting our battle in behalf of freedom and justice, is to state a truism. Yet Mr. Lansing impartially measures out multitudinous words of protest to England about mail bags and cotton bales with the same carefully calculated passion with which he addresses Germany on the subject of murdered infants; the whole policy of the present administration, to which I remained loyal as long as I could and retain my own self respect, being summed up in a certain famous proverb, turned topsy-turvy ward—"Talk loud and carry no stick at all.

I think the time has come for us people who have been trying to maintain respect for the president of the United States, to begin writing a few notes ourselves, and also to ascertain the whereabouts of a certain well-known Dutch gentleman, who, whatever his faults, backs words with deeds, and believes unreservedly in that defensive Big Stick without which we ourselves shall certainly fall before Germany should our defenders, France and England, fall.

Cultivated black currants in several of the western states are now in quarantine, as it is found that they furnish one of the best plants necessary to the completion of the life cycle of the pine blister rust. This rust is an imported disease, 90 per cent. of the infection now in America having come from a single German nursery.

TO REDUCE YOUR WEIGHT EASILY AND QUICKLY

If you are overstout the cause of your over-stoutness is lack of oxygen-carrying power in the blood and faulty assimilation of food. Too little is being made into the harder tissue of muscle and too much into little globules of fat. Therefore you should correct the malassimilation and increase the oxygen-carrying power of the blood. To do this go to any good druggist and get oil of orilene, only sold in original packages and in capsule form, and take one capsule after each meal and one at bedtime till your weight is reduced to what it should be on all parts of the body. The effect of oil of orilene in capsule form is remarkable as a weight reducer, and it is perfectly safe.—E. J. T.

Any druggist can supply you or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Canada.

Seeding in the Western Provinces

MONTREAL, April 29.—So far as Alberta is concerned, the weather conditions for farming in the districts served by the C.P.R. have been excellent. Ploughing and seeding are general.

The land is in a good condition of moisture, and the seed being put in is in first-class shape. Along the main line and branches north to Red Deer and on the branches south of the main line, 25 per cent. to 30 per cent. of the seding is completed.

Business conditions in Alberta are considered to be in better shape than at any time since the commencement of the war. There is a steady increasing demand in practically every line of staple goods. The past winter has been the best in the history of dairying in Manitoba, thirty creameries working the entire twelve months of the year.

YOU'RE BILIOUS! LET "CASCARETS" LIVEN LIVER AND BOWELS

Don't Stay Headachy, Constipated, Sick With Breath Bad and Stomach Sour

Get a 10-cent box now.

You men and women who can't get feeling right—who have headache, coated tongue, bad taste and foul breath, dizziness, can't sleep, are bilious, nervous and upset, bothered with a sick, gassy, disordered stomach, or have a bad cold.

Are you keeping your bowels cleans with Cascarets, or merely forcing a passageway every few days with salts, cathartic pills of castor oil?

Cascarets work while you sleep; cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested fermenting food and foul gasses; take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will straighten you out by morning—a 10-cent box from any drug store will keep your stomach sweet, liver and bowels regular, and head clear for months. Don't forget the children. They love Cascarets because they taste good—never gripe or sicken.

IRISHMEN MINIMIZE REVOLT

Chicagoians Assert Dublin Uprising Will be Quickly Crushed.

CHICAGO, April 27.—That the Dublin rebellion is only a futile attempt by a small minority, aided by outsiders, fomented by a paid group of agitators, and is foredoomed to failure, is the opinion of Chicagoans of Irish birth or descent.

"It's bound to fail," declared P. T Barry, local representative of John Redmond and the Nationalist Party. "It cannot possibly succeed, for the great majority of the Irish people are against it.

"This talk about Ireland being in sympathy with Germany is false. The Irish people have long ago cast their lot on the side of the Allies, and are fighting for them.

"The reported uprising in Dublin is not an expression of Irish sentiment. It's the sentiment of a few professional Irishmen who receive compensation for their sentiment. It is Irishmen of this kind who are fomenting the present rebellion in Dublin."

CASEMENT NOT LEADER.

Sir Chas. Fitzpatrick Makes Reference to the Dublin Outbreak.

Montreal, April 27. — Priest and minister spoke together at a patriotic rally in Windsor Hall here last night under the auspices of the Irish-Canadian Rangers now recruiting for overseas.

Sir Charles Fitzpatrick said: "Our leader is not Sir Roger Casement. The present time is not one for internal conflict and trouble. Canadians should learn to respect not only the rights and privileges of others, but even their prejudices."

Dr. John P. Coyle, of New York described Irish deeds at Gallipoli and elsewhere in the war. Other addresses were given by Major the Rev. C. A. Williams, chief recruiting officer of the district; Rev. Father McShane and Captain Rev. Father Hingston, all of whom condemned the rebels of Dublin.

Freckles and Blotches Are Easily Peeled Off

If you are bothered with any cutaneous blemish, it's a poor plan to use paint, powder or anything else to cover it up. Too often this only emphasizes the defect. Besides, it's much easier to remove the disfigurement with ordinary mercolized wax. Applied nightly, the wax will gradually remove freckles, pimples, moth patches, liver spots, sallowness, red blotches or any surface eruption. The affected cuticle is absorbed, a little each day, until the clear, soft, youthful and beautiful skin beneath is brought wholly to view. Ask the druggist for one ounce of mercolized wax and use this like you use cold cream. Remove in morning with soap and water. Many who have tried this simple, harmless treatment report astonishing results.

If troubled with wrinkles or furrows, a wash lotion made by dissolving 1 oz. powdered saxolite in ½ pint witch hazel, will prove wonderfully effective.

HITTING THE TRAIL.

Billy Sunday has just completed an eight weeks evangelistic campaign at Baltimore.

Over a million and a half have attended Billy's revival services and of these twenty-three thousand have "hit the trail."

And incidentally Evangelist Sunday has received as an offering from those attending the tabernacle $80,000.

That is a lot of money for eight weeks' work. But undoubtedly the twenty-three thousand souls who 'hit the trail' will consider it little enough.

Two dollars a soul is a good investment for Baltimore.

Bill Sunday's final meeting at Baltimore was marked by an incident that will be read with interst by thousands of men who are not exactly Billy Sunday admirers. And they will pause, perhaps a moment, and consider.

The incident was the 'trail hitting' of "Home Run" Baker.

J. Franklin Baker, the home run king and third sacker for the Yankees stepped from the ranks and along with four other Yankee ball players and the trainer, hit the sawdust trail.

"Come on, you ball players; try sliding home to God," said Sunday. And Baker and his friends came "home".

The cynic may curl his lip. The supercilious may smile. But certain it is that Baker and his friends have in no wise spoilt their averages by this decision.

It is a winning tally.—Buffalo News.

GIRLS! THICKEN AND BEAUTIFY YOUR HAIR AND STOP DANDRUFF

Try This! Your Hair Gets Wavy, Glossy and Abundant at Once

To be possessed of a head of heavy, beautiful hair; soft, lustrous, fluffy, wavy and free from dandruff is merely a matter of using a little Danderine.

It is easy and inexpensive to have nice, soft hair and lots of it. Just get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine now—all drug stores recommend it—apply a little as directed and within ten minutes there will be an appearance of abundance, freshness, fluffiness and an incomparable gloss and lustre, and try as you will you can not find a trace of dandruff or falling hair; but your real surprise will be after about two weeks' use, when you will see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair — sprouting out all over your scalp—Danderine is, we believe, the only sure hair grower, destroyer of dandruff and cure for itchy scalp and it never fails to stop falling hair at once.

If you want to prove how pretty and soft your hair really is, moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair—taking one small strand at a time. Your hair will be soft, glossy and beautiful in just a few moments—a delightful surprise awaits everyone who tries this.

HE LIKES GERMAN PEOPLE.

"Can't Blame Them for Sinking Enemy Ships," Says B. Sunday.

BALTIMORE, Md., April 27. — "Billy" Sunday was sitting in the "office" at the Sunday residence opening the scores of envelopes containing cheques and reading the letters. Without looking up, he remarked:

"I don't think Germany's going to give in."

"But it will have to do something."

"No, it won't. Won't have to pay any attention to us."

Sunday looked up and continued:

"There's not going to be any war with Germany. We Americans don't want any war with Germany and the Germans don't want any war with us. It's the Kaiser and the gang that's working with him that we haven't any use for. But the German people themselves are a quiet, peaceful people, just as we Americans are.

"The note will be answered, to be sure. But so were the other notes. Germany will go on sinking ships just the same. You can't blame the Germans for wanting to sink the ships of enemy countries. I don't blame them for sinking as many of them as they can. What we blame them for is the way they go about it."

EAT LESS MEAT IF BACK HURTS

Take a Glass of Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers You

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked, get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will soon act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it is no longer irritated, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

DE LAVAL Cream Separators

Efficiency Test

It is the all around test of efficiency in the home dairy, in the creamery, or at the World's greatest Expositions, which judges and eventually places in its proper class every Cream Separator in the market.

DE LAVAL SUPREMACY

World's Expositions at San Francisco 1915, St. Louis 1914, Buffalo 1901, Paris 1900, Chicago 1893, and all others since the introduction of Cream Separators have awarded the highest possible prize to the De Laval. 98% of all Creameries operating separators are equipped with De Laval machines, and there are more De Lavals in use in the home dairy than all other makes combined. This is evidence of efficiency and supremacy which must be recognized by Cream Separator purchasers.

If you are not using a De Laval in your dairy, you are not using the Separator judged by all classes of dairymen as the best. Why not start right now?

Protect Your Eyes In the Spring

Your eyes are certainly worth more to you than the price of a pair of glasses.

Weak eyes in spring can be protected by proper lenses. If you indulge in the pastime of motoring or bicycling get a pair of glasses to protect the eyes from dust and wind.

If the eyes need glasses the sooner you know it the better. No charge for examination. That which helps you to accomplish more is an investment, not an expense. The first cost is the least cost.

REBELS SURROUNDED IN HEART OF DUBLIN

Crown Prince Resumes His Drive on Verdun

Rebel Forces Are Surrounded

British Besiege The Post Office

Artillery Trained on Building But British Commanders Hope to Capture Post Office Without Futher Damage to the Structure---Government Troops Storm Barracades in The Street After Fierce Hand to Hand Fighting 500 Prisoners Being Captured.

GERMAN ATTACKS ARE ALL REPULSED

LONDON, April 29.—A rebel force, variously estimated at from 2,000 to 10,000, has been cornered and surrounded in the heart of Dublin by British troops. The Government forces have laid siege to the general post office building in which the rebels have established headquarters. Several nearby buildings have been captured from the Sinn Feiners. Light artillery has been trained upon the post office, but the British commanders hope to capture this rebel headquarters without doing further damage to the building itself. A press despatch from near Dublin to-day reported that some of the rebel bands have made overtures for surrender. Severe fighting occurred in the Irish capital late yesterday afternoon when British troops attacked and captured strongly entrenched positions of the rebels in Stephen's Green. The Green itself is enclosed by a stone wall. Entrance is gained only throug hcomparatively narrow gate sacross which the Sinn Feiners had built high barricades of overturned auto buses and trucks.

The Government troops rushed the barricades in a massed attack, and after fifteen minutes' of furious hand-to-hand fighting broke through the gate. Inside the Green the rebels had thrown up shallow trenches, protected by sand bags. From behind these they poured fusilades at the British troops pouring through the gate.

Despite this hot fire, the Government troops charged the rebel works without waiting for reinforcements. One detachment of Sinn Feiners was cut off and surrounded. The prisoners number more than 500. An unofficial despatch to-day said that the entire Green is in possession of Government forces. Several women Sinn Feiners, who figured in the early street fighting, have disappeared and are believed to have been hidden away by rebel sympathizers who feared they would be executed.

According to best information obtainable here to-day, the rebels still hold the general post office, a large biscuit factory near Dublin Castle, and the "Four Courts."

British Garrison Has To Surrender

Lack of Food Supplies Compels General Townshend's Mesopotamian Forces, Surrounded for Over Four Months, to at Last Yield to the Turks. Relief Force Was Held up by Flood

LONDON, April 29.—The garrison at Kut-El-Amara, Mesopotamia, after being under siege for over four months, has been forced to surrender to the Turks, it is announced to-day. Lack of food was responsible for the surrender of General Townshend's forces. For months they have been cut off and surrounded, and no food could be sent into the city. The British relief force is held up by floods at Felahie, twenty-three miles to the east of Kut-El-Amara.

General Townshend's force was trapped by the Turks at Kut-El-Amara 105 miles southeast of Bagdad, early last December, after the collapse of the British campaign against Bagdad. Gen. Nixon left Townshend with a force estimated by the Turks at 10,000 men to hold Kut-El-Amara, which occupies a position at the bend of the Tigris on rising ground. A large quantity of supplies was left with Townshend's forces, but it was believed that the arrival of British reinforcements would enable an expedition to march to his relief within a few weeks.

Sir John Nixon was subsequently relieved of the command of Mesopotamian forces, because of the Bagdad blunder, being succeeded by Sir Percy Lake, formerly of Canada. General Lake's relieving force have been held up 20 miles from Kut-El-Amara by floods.

General Townshend's forces were composed largely of Australian and Indian troops.

Fresh Attacks on Verdun Repulsed

Crown Prince Attempts New Drive on Both Sides of Meuse River But Attacks Fail in Both Cases—Heavy Fighting Resumed Around French Stronghold

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS (French Official Communique), April 29.—The Crown Prince resumed the drive on Verdun last night with heavy attacks against the French positions on both banks of the Meuse. The Germans launched an attack at five o'clock last night against Hill 304, the keystone of the French defenses northwest of Verdun. The War Office announced to-day that this assault was stopped by a grenade counter attack. On the right bank of the Meuse the Germans delivered an even more violent attack east of Thiaumont farm, but were driven back suffering heavy losses.

PARIS, April 29.—The fighting on the east bank of the Meuse, north and northeast of Verdun, spread from the river itself to the French positions around Douaumont and Vaux village. On this wide sector savage fighting raged throughout yesterday. Following most violent artillery preparations and an intense curtain fire, the Germans charged the French front east of Thiaumont, wher they have suffered frequent defeats. Liquid fire was sprayed upon the French advanced trenches as the Teutons advanced, but they were met by steady streams of shrapnel and thrown back with heavy losses.

One Hundred Are Killed In Dublin

Special to The Examiner:

DUBLIN, April 29.—One hundred person shave been killed or are missing as the result of street fighting in Dublin since the rebel outbreak began Monday afternoon. It is believed that the military now has the situation in hand. Officials admit, however, that it will be difficult to dislodge the rebels from their headquarters in the General Post Office. The substantial structure in well fitted for use as a temporary fort. The dead include many civilians picked off by Sinn Fein snipers, and some women and children. It has been ascertained that the rebel forces are composed entirely of Sinn Fein adherents.

THREE LOCAL MEN WERE FINED THREE HUNDRED DOLLARS

Allan Harding, Frederick Moran and William Barroughes Pleaded Guilty to Selling Liquor to Soldiers—Fines Aggregating $900 Imposed.

PLEADED GUILTY

Next to carrying contraband of war on the high seas, the illegal sale of liquor to soldiers represents probably the most hazardous occupation arising out of the present war. In this morning's police court it took Magistrate Dumble but a few minutes to fine Allan Harding, Frederick Moran and William Barroughs, each three hundred dollars for dispensing liquor to soldiers during the prohibited hours. Each of the three men pleaded guilty. They were rounded up yesterday in the yard of a local hotel.

A number of empty bottles were produced in court as evidence of one or more of the transactions. The case was settled in less than ten minutes as no evidence was offered owing to the men having pleaded guilty to the charge. In event of the fines not being paid the men will sojourn in the county gaol for three months.

REQUEST FOR BAND GRANT

Matter Was Introduced At Last Night's Meeting of the Finance Committee

At last night's meeting of the Finance Committee of the City Council, a letter was read from Adjutant McElheney in regard to a grant to the band of the Salvation Army. Alderman Stratton, chairman of the committee, said that nothing had been done this year for the Salvation Army Band, and that if any of the members had any suggestion to offer this was their opportunity. As none was forthcoming, no action was taken.

It was moved by Alderman Saunders and seconded by Alderman Weir, that if the Tax Collector's Roll for 1915 is not returned as has been directed, Mayor Duffus be requested to look into the matter and take action in accordance with the by-law.

An account from White and Ackford was referred back to City Engineer Parsons for further information.

A number of accounts were similarly dealt with.

CLAIM PROPERTY UNDER AGREEMENT

Some time previous to her death, the late Mrs. T. E. Fitzgerald, who resided at 464 Charlotte street, made a will devising her property to the use of All Saints' Anglican church. When the executors of the will, Messrs. John Edgar and E. L. Goodwill, appeared for probate, objections were entered by Hall and Hall, attorneys for Mr. W J Sisson, a nephew, and Wood and Wearing for Mrs. C. A. Church, who claim the property under an agreement alleged to have been entered into by the late Mrs. Fitzgerald.

Must Show Cause.

Counsel for the executors appeared before Judge Huycke yesterday, and a citation was issued requiring the objectors to show cause why the will should not be entered for probate, and to prove their case. The date set was May 6th.

Messrs. Bennet and Goodwill represent the executors, and Messrs. Peck, Kerr and McElderry the congregation of All Saints' church.

You May Not Get Another Opportunity

Music-lovers are reminded of the concert in Victoria Hall on Monday night by the Band of the 93rd Battalion, assisted by Mr. Asa Huycke in vocal and piano specialties. This entertainment is one of the last and incidentally one of the best tobe given by the band before the Battalion leaves Peterborough, and there should be a crowded house. Don't fail to hear Mr. Huycke's new march, or Bandmaster Hughes' new patriotic song. Proceeds for the band's music fund. Admission 15c and 10c.

A TRYING EXPERIENCE FOR BRITISH CABINET

For Some Days It Looked as If the Cabinet Would Break up but Reports in the Papers Were Probably Exaggerated Says T. P. O'Conner.

REVIEW OF SITUATION

By T. P. O'Connor

LONDON, April 29. —The Coalition Ministry has gone, during the last two weeks through its most trying and testing experience. The conflict was of a double character, partly political, partly personal. The principal underlying point was conscripton. To be perhaps more accurate, it was the particular date and form of conscripton, rather than the principle itself, for the principle disappeared as a living issue when the military compulsion measure was passed.

For days it looked as if the Ministry would break up, but probably reports in the newspapers were exaggerated. It is now clear that the differences of the ministers were never as great as the sensational newspaper writers augested. A little common sense and some give and take was all that was necessary to produce a harmonious cabinet; therefore it is certain that the Cabinet comes before the House of Commons united and with a common programme.

It is equally certain, except for a growl here and there, from a small section of convinced anti-conscriptionists, that the ministerial proposals will receive practically the unanimous support of Parliament and country. Everybody regrets the tone of personal antagonism introduced in the discussion again by the partisanship of the newspapers. Everyoody approves the action of the Ministry in warning newspapers that such disruptive discussions will be closely wanted and and nothing will be allowed for publication, which is calculated to comfort the enemy.

Amounts to Scandal.

Indeed, the furious partisan intervention of newspapers in the revelation of personal and political differences, often less real than alleged, has amounted to a scandal and a danger. The country is getting sick of it, and expects the Ministry to defend itself against such disturbing, embarrassing and unpatriotic assaults. Of course government interferences with the liberty of the press is open to serious apprehensions, unless the government uses its great powers with breadth and discretion, but there is little ground for fearing such intervention will go beyond the legitimate demands of a ministry fighting a tremendous war.

As far as personal relations are concerned, they are much better, too, than the sensational statements would lead one to suppose. The closest friendships exist between ministers who in the past were political opponents. Nor is it true that the Prime Minister and Mr. Lloyd George have become either personal or political opponents. Their relations continue as always friendly and appreciative.

Strange Results.

Out of such a strange portent as a Coalition Ministry, it was inevitable that strange results should flow. These strange results confront every old member of the House of Commons in every part of the chamber. Men's places there both as individuals and as member of a party are fixed by long usage. When therefore you see on the right hand of the Speaker—that is to say on the side of the House which is always taken by the Party in power—some peculiarly stout and virulent Tory of the old type, and when moreover this man sits just behind Mr. Asquith, the great Liberal leader, or Mr Lloyd

OUTSIDE PLATOONS WILL MARCH INTO CITY NEXT WEEK

The Lakefield and Apsley Detachments Will Arrive on Monday And Norwood and Havelock Platoons on Wednesday.

WILL BE WELCOMED

The 93rd Battalion will be augmented early next week by the arrival in the city of the outside detachments of the battalion. The Lakefield and Apsley platoons, C Company, will be the first to arrive. They will leave Lakefield at one o'clock on Monday afternoon and the battalion will march out from Peterborough at the same hour to meet the Northerners, who will be about 75 strong, and escort them to the Armouries. The Apsley platoon which marched down to Lakefield last week and home again early this week, have again reached Lakefield, and with a record of ninety-six miles to their credit in the last few days. The ten-mile march from Lakefield will not bother them very much.

The Havelock and Norwood platoons, D. Company, will reach Peterborough on Wednesday. The Norwood platoon are holding a field day on Monday which the Havelock detachment will attend, marching over to Norwood and returning to Havelock on the same night. The Bugle Band of the 93rd will go to Havelock on the noon train on Tuesday, and will march with the Havelock platoon to Norwod on Tuesday afternoon, and take part in the farewell entertainment which will be given in Norwood on Tuesday night.

Wednesda ythe Bugle Band, and the Norwood and Havelock detachments will leave on their 20-mile march to Peterborough. The Peterborough detachment of the battalion will march out about ten miles to meet the Norwood and Havelock soldiers, and the two bodies will have dinner together before the march to the city is resumed.

It is hoped that the civic authorities and the citizens generally will turn out on Monday and Wednesday and give a warm welcome to the gallant Peterborough County lads.

OPENING SALE POSTPONED

We regret being oblized to disappoint the large number of people who came to our door this morning, expecting we would be ready with the big bargains advertised.

We found it necessary to enlarge the store to enable us to properly display the two stocks which we will offer to the public below the present cost of production.

The carpenters are at work increasing the size of the sale-room, and we are at work reducing the prices. Only the Strictly First-Class Portions of The Fancy Dry Goods and Smallwares in Mrs. Byrne's stock will be retained here, the balance, together with the Hair Goods Department, will be removed to Toronto, where Mrs. Byrne will continue this branch of her business.

Our dry goods stock, now stored at 458 George Street, will be removed to the Byrne Store, ready for a regular SLAUGHTER SALE, to begin on Friday, May 5th, at 10 a.m., and last EIGHT day.

Now remember three things. 1st date and place, Friday next, 10 a.m. at 424 George Street.

2nd. We need the money.

3rd. Your necessity is your opportunity.

Yours for bargains,

G. A. BLACK,
Liquidator

RAILWAYS TO GET A LOAN

OTTAWA, April 29.—Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific Railways of Canada are to be tided over their financial difficulties by a direct loan from the Canadian government. It is said that the question of the government taking over the both systems will be one of the things that a commission will report upon.

THE HEALTH ASSOCIATION.

In spite of the aldermanic dictum that the Peterborough Health Association is a "fad of doctors," we venture to call attention to an extended reference to its important place and function in promoting the public health, and developing better sanitary (especially domestic) conditions. This reference, under the heading of "Local Health Association," will be found in our news columns, and should be read carefully, and its appeal appreciated. With the civic and national health conserved, the civic and national efficiency is kept to the highest point. With good health hard toil and even poverty, are not bad things; without health hard work and poverty become heavy burdens, and without health even wealth loses its power to give comfort, not to say happiness. The Peterborough Health Association, working to restore health and alleviate the sufferings of disease; in conserving the public health by creating the sanitary conditions necessary to health is one of the most important agencies of modern civilisation, worthy of being maintained by civic and national funds, instead of having to trust to the largess of the philanthropic.

THE ANNUAL FORMALITY.

Peterborough's growth to city size and importance has not eliminated village ideals altogether. The city is slow to outgrow the village stage, one of whose features is the custom of the aldermen making an annual tour of the city streets to see what should be done; and to show that some attention is paid to complaints of conditions that involve dereliction of duty. This custom is a relic of village days when we did not have an engineering staff, with an annual salary total of $6,000. With such a staff in existence and under pay, the annual tour of the aldermen is a mere perfunctory pilgrimage. They can't see what a skilled engineer can see; and besides, the action is virtually a vote of want of confidence in the engineering staff. What the aldermen might advantageously do, is to adopt a policy of effective street maintenance—with instructions to the engineering department to see that it is carried out—that street shall be kept in good order; that defects developing in streets should be immediately repaired. If this policy were carried out, our streets would be kept in better repair and cost of their construction would not represent so much wasted money. In the old country the highways, as a rule, are far better than the average city street. They are kept for generations in good shape by constant watchfulness and timely repair. A dump cart loaded with metal and in charge of one man would do more good in keeping our streets in order than a dozen aldermanic tours a dozen times a year.

PRODUCTION AND THRIFT.

These words are the keynote to the song we should sing — the work we should do in this time of war. The combined idea is to produce more and save more—a double gain—to make our labour more effective; to save work from being expended in wasteful effort—to save material from waste, or to rescue what is practically waste and convert it to useful purposes, one form of production; to spend money wisely; for necessities, and not for luxuries that are not necessary to comfortable living, so that we may have the more to devote to purposes, which involve the fulfilment of a national duty.

In this conection the Government has provided help to meeting the demands the war time makes upon us individually as well as a people. It is perhaps not too much to say that the Agricultural War Book, issued for free distribution by the Federal Department of Agriculture, is the most complete book ever published in Canada entirely devoted to the subject of which it mainly treats. Yet in variety it certainly is. Besides the general matter brought together by the editor, the Commissioner of Agriculture, some seventy agricultural and educational experts have contributed to its 250 pages, including the Federal Ministrs of Agriculture and Finance, the Live Stock Commissioner, the Dairy Commissioner for the Dominion, chiefs and sub-chiefs of various departments and divisions, federal and provincial, and professors at the Ontario and other agricultural colleges.

While there are statistics of the world's as well as of Canada's produce last year, for purposes of comparison, and two or thre years preceding, the book is a long way from being confined to figures. On the contrary it contains pages upon pages of textual information, instruction and sound advice appertaining to its title —"Production and Thrift." Not alone would the farmer and breeder be the better for its study, but every householder, every citizen would profit by following its counsel, which, in a general sense, is embodied in the motto that appears on the front cover, namely—in war time—

Produce more and save more,
Make your labour efficient,
Save material from waste,
Spend your money wisely.

UNPATRIOTIC INDIFFERENCE.

It is easy to become weary in well doing, and at this time it is necessary to guard against forgetting the duty that comes to us in this awfully draw-out war. Use may have made some of us indifferent to the continued demand for our services, but, as he only is the ideally good soldier who fights till the victory is won, so the ideal Red Cross worker is she who works till the need of her work is overpast. In our news columns is found an expression of regret that the attendance at the work rooms of the Peterborough Red Cross Society is falling off. There can be no falling off in interest or effort if our soldiers are to be supplied with sorely needed surgical dressings and comforts. The battle is stiffening and the need is becoming greater every day. It is also complained that other organizations are becoming less active; that, for instance, the members of the Business Girls' Club are thinking of tennis and teas, while the needs of Canadian soldiers are growing greater. The soldiers can't take it easy; and those whose duty is to ease their hard lot cannot cease their activities. All of us at home must keep busy. Work at home is the price of victory as well as fighting abroad. We should take to heart the injunction of the fighting Apostle, as an expression of the price of victory:

And let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap (victory) if we faint not.

CARELESS CENSORSHIP.

The Mail and Empire, suspected as a partizan journal of being a little more than friendly to the Government of the Dominion, is plainly a little more than unfriendly to the Asquith Government. In an article yesterday it holds Mr. Asquith and Mr. Birrell responsible for the Irish rising, because they allowed the publication of seditious literature in Ireland. If there is evil in disloyal literature and literature inciting to revolt, the Borden Government must assume responsibility, equal, in kind with Mr. Asquith and Mr. Birrell and the British Government. The Dominion Government has responsibility in respect of the censorship of mail matter coming into Canada from the United States. This censorship is pretty much of a farce, as shown by the manner in which it is conducted. Harmless matter is received daily at the Examiner Office such as government reports from the United States Department of Agriculture, which has been censored—that is, examined and passed after careful scrutiny and so marked. But other mail matter, not harmless nor useful, but openly and essentially seditious, and calculated to be poisonous to loyal Canadian sentiment is either admitted without examination or perfunctorily censored. The other day we referred to a most damnable and lying compilation of abominable pro-German literature, embodied in a book entitled "Neutrality," sent uncensored through our mails. It was a rehash and summary of all the devlish arguments advanced by German authorities to excuse and justify all their devlish actions during the present war. It seemed abominable that the money of the people of Canada should be used to circulate among loyal Canadians stuff that is an insult to every Canadian and calculated to poison the minds and affect the sentiments and opinions of superficial thinkers.

The local Postmaster was spoken to upon the subject and he said he would call the attention of the Post Office Department to the matter, but apparently his report was not heeded. Yesterday Mr N. C. Mills received through the mails a copy of a pestiferous New York pro-German journal, the "Fatherland," full of audacious trash in the interest of "fair play for Germany and Austria-Hungary"—and of foul play to British and allied interests. What is the censor doing in permitting Canada to be flooded with such rubbish? No doubt thousands of copies are sent through Canadian mails to Canadians that are not reported to the newspapers.

There seems to be no end to the forms taken by the German propaganda of influencing United States and Canadian public opinion. We have received from the proprietors of Punch a copy of a bogus "Punch," something in the way of the "bogus Globe," issued by the Montreal Star in a Dominion general election. The New York "Punch" was issued in New York by the German-American organization of that city responsible for the bomb and shipping outrages. A representative of "Punch" in New York, when the bogus "Punch" was placed on sale, succeeded in having the issue suppressed (under threat of legal action) and all the copies printed handed over; and the Examiner has before it, one of the suppressed copies. It has a fac simile reproduction of Punch's title page, and reproductions of Punch cartoons for fifty years back, which are tortured by the legends into declarations of British hostility to the United States, the object evidently being to influence United States public opinion against Great Britain. It seems that nothing in the way of crookedness is left unemployed by Germany to help make friends for itself among neutral nations and to destroy the sympathy which all civilized neutrals are compelled to feel for the allied nations that are fighting to end Germany's infernal warfare against humanity and human rights.

An Irish and Catholic Journal Upon The Opera Bouffe Rising in Ireland

Yesterdays despatches brought word of very unfortunate happenings in Ireland. Hot on the heels of the reported capture of Sir Roger Casement came the news of a deplorable outbreak in the Irish capital. Up to the time of going to press very little details of the affair have filtered through but our intimate knowledge of Irish affairs enables us to read between the lines. Whilst the occurrence is unfortunate in so far as lives have been needlessly sacrificed, it is hardly necessary to caution our readers against attaching too much importance to it. Ninety-five per cent. of the Irish people are loyal to the Empire and the cause of the Allies. There is a noisy section of extremists, known as the Sinn Fein (Ourselves) party, who are opposed to all participation in the war. They are close blood relations of the "patriots" of New York. Hated of England is the great pas ion of their lives and the main spring of their actions. To even up old scores with their century old oppressor they would not hesitate to call in the aid of the Kaiser's legions. It would be idle to deny them the merit of sincerity, but it would be foolish to assert that they have logic on their side. For were it possible to evolve an independent Ireland out of the present welter of blood any sane man must see that complete separation from the Empire would not be in the best interests of Ireland. Times have changed since the days when Tone and Emmett dreamed of an Irish republic. An independent Ireland at the present day would simply mean that our motherland would become the unhappy battle ground of European rivals. We would have the tragedy of Belgium repeated over again. Ireland could not stand alone without an international guarantee. And the events of the past year and a half demonstrate quite conclusively the utter worthlessness of such a "scrap of paper" when bigger interests rendered its violation advisable. Autonomy within the Empire is the only logical solution of the Irish question.

An attempt may be made to use this unfortunate episode to discredit Irish loyalty. To forestall such a manoeuvre it is well to be in possession of the real facts of the case. The Sinn Feiners have always been the bitterest opponents of the Irish constitutional movement. They do not execrate King George one whit more than they execrate John Redmond. Mr. Redmond is, therefore, in no way to be held responsible for their antics. They openly broke with him over the question of Ireland's participation in the war. It was then that they disrupted the National volunteers, claiming that since they were enrolled to defend the liberties of Ireland they should not be asked to enlist for foreign service. An insignificant minority of the Volunteers sided with them. The seceders formed a new body, known as the "Irish Volunteers," in contra distinction to the "National Volunteers," who accepted Mr. Redmond's leadership. It is these "Irish" Volunteers who are responsible for the Dublin episode. They have nothing in common with the masses of the Irish people. The Irish constitutional leaders are in no way responsible for their attitude. The Irish constitutional movement cannot be saddled with responsibility for their hostile intent. Casement, the pseudo-Emmett, has no right or title to represent Irish national opinion. For long years a British consular agent, recently courted by Germany for her own selfish ends, he is obsessed with the idea of his own importance. He is no more the mouthpiece of Ireland than Armand Laverne is the mouthpiece of Canada. And fools and cranks we shall always have with us.

So much for the Sinn Fein flash in the pan. It is deplorable, as we have said, in so far as Irish blood has been spilt in the cause of German "kultur." But we are confident that its ultimate result will be for the good of Ireland. The meagre measure of support that the extremist faction have received will enable the world to see th overwhelming loyalty of the Irish people in its proper proportion. The Dublin fiasco will also tend to open the eyes of the deluded victims of German intrigue to the utter foolhardiness of their action.—Canadian Freeman, Kingston.

WAR HID "DREAM GIRL," SEARCH FINDS HER WED

NEW YORK, April 28.—The long and ingenious search by Max Orbay, sergeant aviator in the Belgian army, for Miss Lillian Jones, of New York, whom he met on board the Vaderland in 1914 and has dreamed about ever since, is ended. If a German bullet hasn't already sped Sergeant Orbay on his last flight, he will learn this in a few weeks, and will learn too, that his dream of romance is ended—for the Mi sniinLall aordtdte dodtalolan the Miss Lillian Jones he knew is now Mrs. Leon Osterwell, of No. 49 Milford Avenue, Newark, N.J., she formerly lived at No. 815 West End avenue and is well known in society.

It was the story of the persistent efforts Sergeant Orbay was making to find the young woman, printed in a New York paper two weeks ago, that finally found her and revealed the fact that fate had conspired to convert the Belgian soldier's dream of the future into a mere memory of the past.

Sergeant Orbay, a young Belgian lawyer, met Miss Jones on board the Vaderland and fell in love with her in 1914, just before the war started. He saw her again in Deauville and proposed marriage to her, she says yesterday, but as she was just nineteen years old at the time she gave him no definite answer. He asked if he could come to New York to see her, and she said he might, giving him her address in West End avenue, and her telephone number, to announce his arrival.

Then war came, and Sergeant Orbay went back to Belgium and enlisted. He lost all of his papers in Brussels, and until a few months ago was constantly at the front. Then he was wounded and went to Paris, still dreaming of Miss Jones, determined to find her. He found a New York telephone directory in some manner, sought the telephone numbers beginning with "Riverside" for he remembered that was the exchange number Miss Jones had told him of.

To every "Jones" who had a telephone number of that exchange Sergeant Orbay wrote a letter, addressing it "Dear Miss Lillian," and recalling to her their previous acquaintance, explaining how he had lost her address and begging her to write to him.

Then he went back to Deauville, to A-67 division, where he has headquarters, waiting hopefully for some reply to his flood of letters. His notes poured into New York and astonished many a placid "Jones". Since they were in French, they were passed to many recipients, until persons with a knowledge of French were importuned to translate them. Each one who found out what the letter meant decided there must be a romance hidden somewhere, and in about every case each "Jones" tried to find the "Miss Lillian" whom Sergeant Orbay sought.

The paper printed the details of the romance and the text of the letter, all of which came the other day to Mrs. Osterwell's attention. She has been married since November, 1914. In fact, she was married shortly after returning from Europe, just about the time Sergeant Orbay was learning to make his first flights over the German lines, then crushing their way across Belgium.

"I met Mr. Orbay on board the Vaderland in July of 1914", she said. "He was a handsome young man, very brilliant, a lawyer, and he was very attentive. We were good friends, and when I saw him afterward at Trouville he asked me to marry him, but I was nineteen years old at the time and delayed answering him. Then the war broke out and I never heard any more, until a day or so ago, I was handed the articles which appeared in the paper and realised that I was the person he was seeking.

Mrs. Osterwell will write Sergeant Orbay.

Woman's Suicide Revealed After Mysterious Call

Left Letters which she Unopened—Bond Broker from Whom She was Parted Assumes Charge.

NEW YORK, April 28—Much mystery surrounds an incident which preceded by a few hours the suicide of Mrs. Juliet Singleton March in her apartment at No. 140 West Fifty-fifth street. The Superior Court in Philadelphia approved on February 28th a master's recommendation that a divorce be awarded to her from Forest March, bond broker, of No. 71 Broadway, and golf friend of John D. Rockefeller. The final decree had not been granted.

Mrs. March, whose separation from her husband was the result of her insistence upon becoming an actress, was escorted to her apartment after midnight yesterday morning by a strange man, according to the superintendent of the apartment house. After this man had gone he returned and asked if Mrs. March had taken a black travelling bag into the house with her. When told she had he entered her apartment and the superintendent said he heard heated words for fifteen minutes, after which the man left.

After writing and sealing letters to Mrs. N. L. Singleton, at the Blackstone Hotel, Peachtree street, Atlanta, Ga., Eugene Newbold, the Lotus Club, and J. P. Uhl, No. 10 West Forty-eighth street, Mrs. March had turned on all the gas burners in her kitchen range, closed the door and rested her head on a pillow. There she was found dead when the gas alarmed the other tenants.

When Forest March was informed of the suicide of his wife he hurried from his apartment, at No. 136 West Forty-fourth street, to her apartment and assumed charge of matters, sending a telegram to her mother. The letters Mrs. March had written were taken by the police and given to the Coroner. They were not opened. Mr. Uhl was said to be out of the city and Mr. Newbold was not to be found.

Mr. March was a newspaper reporter in Cleveland, Ohio, until about six years ago. In his frequent calls upon John D. Rockefeller for news he became friendly with Mr. Rockefeller and they played golf together frequently. Soon after the death of his father, who is said to have left most of a $300,000 estate to him, Mr. March went to Pittsburg and became a bond broker. Later he moved to Philadelphia. It was in Pittsburg he met Miss Singleton, noted in the South for her beauty, and they were married.

"A little more than a year ago we separated because she insisted upon adopting the stage as a career," said Mr. March yesterday. "I did not desire her to go on the stage, but she insisted and we parted. In July she began an action against me for divorce, alleging incompatibility of temper. This was heard before a referee, who, on February 2 last, recommended that a decree be granted to her. On February 28th the Superior Court approved that recommendation, but the final decree had not been granted."

Doctors Say Phosphorus Cures Nervousness in Three to Five Days

People have been suffering untold misery for years doctoring for their nerves when there real trouble was, want of phosphorus in their system.

Doctors are surprised after many years of experience to find that they were unable to find that the real cause of nervous weak run down people was due directly to lack of phosphorus for the nervous system and iron for the blood circulation. The moment that phosphorus is given you can notice the nerves beginning to tighten and you begin to get control of your nerves once again. Without phosphorus the system becomes voakon, your stomach is unable to digest the little food that you eat, your liver becomes torpid, the kidneys start to pain you, the blood becomes clogged with impurities, the color of your face is muddy, then pour hands, head and legs begin to shake through loss of control of your nerves. One is taking medicine for kidney trouble another is taking laxative every night, others taking poisonous spring tonics, some can't sleep for twitching nerves, and some give up all hopes thinking they are too old and there is no hope for them. You have almost ruined your system and vitality by taking all these medicines for something that never ailed you and you have no person to blame now but yourself if you do not start at once by going to your druggist and get a few cents worth of Bonised Phosphorus with iron and take one or two tablets after each good meal. Give yourself a good ice cold bath every morning, rubbing yourself well; eat plenty of good wholesome vegetables, fruit and drink plenty of water every time you think of it. Here is good advice which millionaires are paying specialists thousands of dollars for to look well, eat well, sleep well, work well digest well look well. As we are here only for a short stay so why not be healthy, strong, vigor and enjoy our short, sweet life. People can talk as they like about all the wonders, life and death, stories about medicines that have cured them, but when you come right down to scientific proofs, hard facts, there has been nothing in medical science to compare with just ordinary Bronsed Phosphorus with iron to restore wrecked systems, put vigorous life in old people, color in your cheeks, clear thinking, strong nerves and strength like a giant.

Bronsed Phosphorus with iron does not contain an atom of arsenic strychnine or any poison which has been found so harmful in almost every tonic. It is easy to take, does not upset the stomach and is taken up by the system immediately making you feel better at once. It is dispensed in this city at either of F. C. Webber's stores at 50c a box.

Victory Gives Straits to Tsar

PETROGRAD, April 27.—There is no longer any doubt in the public mind here that the Allies reached a complete agreement some time ago to the effect that in case the Entente Powers are victorious Russia is to have possession of the Dardanelles after the war. Professor Milikoff, the Liberal leader, speaking in the Duma this week, made the assurance of such an agreement definite when he said:

"The end of March, 1915, is a date which is well worthy of remembrance by the Russian people. That is the date when a definite agreement was reached between us and our allies regarding the future of the Dardanelles."

Milikoff is the creator of the "progressive bloc," the greatest force in Russian politics to-day, and is closely affiliated with the Foreign Office. In the course of his speech, which was reported verbatim in all the Petrograd newspapers, he said:

"Our Russian interest in this war can be defined very briefly: We need an outlet to a free sea. We did not begin the war for this; but without it we shall not end it.

"The annexation of the Dardanelles is in no way an attempt to enlarge the Russian frontier. Russia is big enough and has no need for new territories. But her complete development without an outlet to a free sea cannot possibly be realised. In our time, when the old idea of continentalism is dead, when international relations demanding a sea way have become the order of the day, the state without such communications is an organism without the necessary organs.

"You can say to me, 'If Turkey had been wiser we could not possibly then have realized this aim. We would have had to wait.' But when Liman von Sanders entered Constantinople, when the Turkish War Minister became the servant of Germany and the Turkish fleet became controlled by the Germans, the whole situation changed. We fully realise what is the plan of Germany and for what she is carrying on this whole war. It is clear to everyone that in the case of victory Germany would create in Europe a central state and would capture or subjugate Turkey economically and then politically. 'Berlin to Bagdad,' that is the German idea; and since it has been created we have no other choice. The question now is not whether the Straits will become Russian or will remain Turkish; the question is whether they will become Russian or will remain German.

"We must make no mistake. The question which we are now deciding probably will be decided forever, but there scarcely ever will be such favorable conditions as there are now. The chief of these conditions is the attitude of our allies toward our national problem. Berlin to Bagdad is a real danger not only for us but for Great Britain, with India and Egypt, and for France, with her prospects in Syria. On the basis of this real danger an agreement has become possible between Powers which for centuries were suspicious of each other."

DO YOU FEEL SEEDY?

If You are Nervous, Depressed, Sleepless and Suffer From Sick Stomach, Headache, Constipation and Indigestion, you need Ferrozone to Build Up the System.

Thousands are in this dreadful condition, only half alive, unable to stand the strain of work and worry. There is no sense or reason in trying to be comfortable with the idea that it will pass off, and that you are going to be better soon. Unless the system is cleansed of the impurities that poison the blood, you will never be better.

The best remedy is Ferrozone. It achieves marvellous results in chronic wasting diseases, nervous prostration, faulty nutrition, heart disease and stomach troubles.

Ferrozone promotes healthy digestion which results in all food being assimilated. Nutrition is vastly improved, the blood grows rich and red and gives stability to the entire system. The store of nerve energy and force increases daily by the use of Ferrozone. The process of waste is arrested, and in its place a rebuilding of the whole system takes place.

Diseased conditions cannot exist where Ferrozone is used. It attacks disease at its very foundation, and by keeping the body well nourished and supplied with strong blood and a powerful nervous organization prevents and keeps away all manner of sickness.

There is no blood builder, nerve tonic and strength producer that can equal Ferrozone, and few people are so well that could derive great benefit from its use. It is valuable in Nervous Dyspepsia, Anaemia, Weakness, Impure Blood, Bronchitis, Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is prepared in the form of a chocolate coated tablet and is both pleasant and convenient to use.

Ferrozone produces that high standard of health so much desired by everyone. It brings back the rosy tint to the pale cheeks of the Anaemic girls and women. It puts grace and elasticity into their movements, gives lustre and brightness to the eye, and symmetry and roundness to the form. It gives a man new strength and energy with which to pursue his daily toil, and can be relied upon at all times to benefit and give perfect satisfaction.

You can't invest half a dollar to better advantage than in a box of Ferrozone. Your druggist has it.

Drop a small quantity of oil of lavender into very hot water and you have a refreshing odour for a sick-room.

DRAWS "JUICE" FROM AIR.

Plan of Jailed Genius Interests U.S. War Department.

TOWANDA, Pennsylvania, April 29. — The Eastern Penitentiary at Philadelphia has at least one genius within its walls. H. E. Mills pleaded guilty to forgery, and was sentenced by Judge Maxwell to spend not less than two or more than three years in the penitentiary.

Mills is a genius, and while here in the county jail has been in regular correspondence with the United States War Department and an aeroplane company.

They think so well of his plans that they are anxious to do business with him. Mills has developed an apparatus for extracting electricity from the air, and with it operate motor cars and aeroplanes, thus doing away with the use of gasoline.

Those familiar with Mills' plans and devices call them wonderful. The War Department and the aeroplane company seem to think the same way. Mills had his secret carefully guarded, and expects to realize a fortune and at the same time revolutionize the operation of motor-driven machines.

A mixture of linseed oil and lime-water known as carron oil, is an excellent thing to have on hand for any burns.

Naval Battle At Lowestoft

Graphic Sketch of The Unequal Naval Conflict

LONDON, April 29.—The Lowestoft correspondent of the Daily Mail, telegraphing under date of April 25, of the German raid says:

"The enemy did not have his own way for long. The watchers saw German seaplanes, which a few minutes before had left the vessels, come hurrying back. From the south came little clouds of smoke, drawing nearer every moment. A rousing cheer was given as it was seen that the smoke was coming from British cruisers and destroyers.

"The big German ship loosed a stream of shells at the approaching ships and then swung to the east, but the German Admiralty again changed his course when he found that the British force was not nearly equal to his five great cruisers and many destroyers. Every moment we expected to see our ships blown out of the water, said one of our watchers. 'Our comparatively small vessels were seeking to get at close quarters to the German giants and a perfect storm of shells screamed across the water toward them, but whoever commanded our ships had great courage.'

'The German shells were falling all around our craft, but they did not reply until well within range. Then time and again they hit the German monsters. Once we saw a volume of flame leap from a funnel of one of the great warships. Another suddenly staggered but in a second righted itself, though we could see steam and smoke coming from unusual places.

"Our ships were hit—they could hardly escape, so thickly did the Germans plaster the water with shells. The sea was so churned by the fast moving ships and the exploding shells that it looked like foam. Suddenly we saw an aeroplane coming from the north at a terrific rate. Whatever message it brought the Germans turned tail and made off at high speed to the north east. As they fled one of the giants shot after them and worried them as they disappeared."

ADIOS TO THE LANDLORD

Goodbye, old pal! We hate to leave you thus;
"The curtains here are ours, ain't they, Myrt?"
You've been a friend—a corking friend to us!
"Aw, don't you sweep; let him take up the dirt!"
When we have asked for favors or repairs—
"Cop out those shades; we'll need them all to trim;
You've granted them without landlordly airs;
"Those fixtures, too, don't leave a thing for him!"
For all of this we're grateful as can be—
"Don't overlook those mantles, Myrtilla dear!"
'Tis very rare, such amiability!
"Sneak out this bell and cop that chandelier!"
And hence we hate to sever such a tie,
"We'll take this shelf, although I 'spose it's his."
And now we're off; good-bye, old top, good-bye!
"How empty, Myrt, our old apartment is!"

Historic Country Estates Broken Up By War Sales

LONDON, April 28.—The aristocratic owners of England's famous country estates, comprising thousands of idle acres, to-day are selling their holdings because the war has pinched them financially. This is believed to mean that the idle land will be broken into small holdings and that England will become an important agricultural nation.

These grand country manors, castles and mansions on immense reserves of idle lands have been famous for centuries as deer parks, shooting preserves, lands of the fox hunt, golf, and fishing. To-day they are a drug on the market.

The current issue of a well-known British real estate magazine to-day carries nineteen solid pages of closely printed advertisements asking purchasers or tenants for more than 50,000 acres of sporting estates and innumerable country seats throughout England, Scotland and Wales.

Real estate experts with an eye on the future declare the large estates, will in most cases fail of sale or lease; that they must be split into smaller tracts and sold for agricultural purposes. The fox hunt and the grouse moor will never again be so popular as they were before the war, say the experts.

Sample of the Advts.

Here is a sample ad. of the properties now on the market:

"Historic manor house in the western Highlands. Thirty bed and dressing rooms, several reception rooms. Delightful matured old grounds. Ten thousand acres of shooting. For sale or moderate rental."

The ad. continues to explain that one season's shooting on the game preserves has been 7,000 pheasants, 500 partridges, 1500 hares, 1,500 rabbits and many woodcock, duck and snipe.

Any person in America who has garnered wealth making munitions, or otherwise, could lease a real castle on a long-time contract at very moderate terms.

This castle, its ad. declares, is charmingly located on a pretty loch and is surrounded by a vast sporting estate of 14,000 acres, 11,000 of which consists of one of the best grouse moors in Scotland. The best single bag of grouse thus far has been 750 brace. There also is excellent salmon fishing and golf links.

The ad. makes no mention of agriculture.

With hundreds of thousands of men released from the army after demobilization, Britain must find a place for them.

Those who have lived in the open air will not return to desks in stuffy offices and indoor civilian occupations of the past. They will insist on continued open air according to those who are now making a study of the situation.

What were grouse moors and hunting estates of the pre-war period most probably will be the agricultural homes in the post-war era of thousands of the men who have carried the guns.

That England, Scotland and Wales will be much nearer the soil long before the next five years are over is the firm and widespread conviction in England.

ECZEMA ON THE HEAD.

Mr. Peterson, South Bay, Ont., writes: "For years I suffered a sort of eczema on the head. I tried four different doctors, giving each a fair trial, but the disease grew worse and spread to my arm. I got Dr. Chase's Ointment, and it has entirely cured me. I give you my name because I want other sufferers to know about this splendid Ointment."

INVESTIGATE THE IRISH.

U. S. Authorities to Make Inquiries in Big Cities

WASHINGTON, April 27.—A country-wide investigation of the activities of anti-British Irish-Americans was undertaken to-day by the "neutrality squad" of the secret service, and the department of justice. Inquiries were ordered in a score of cities as to the possible connection of Irish-Americans with the revolt in Dublin.

Washington authorities pointed out to-day that the present colossal campaign of telegrams and letters swamping Congress to prevent a break between the United States and Germany is the work of German-American and Irish-American societies in cooperation. The same organizations have been behind the propaganda for an embargo on arms and ammunition.

NOTHING TO EQUAL BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Mrs. Lawrence M. Brown, Walton, N.S., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for the past ten years and believe there is nothing to equal them for little ones. They instantly banish constipation and teething troubles and unlike any other medicine I have used they are pleasant to take and do not gripe the baby." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A little vaseline applied to the hinges of a door that creaks will stop all the noise. It is far more satisfactory than oil.

Interesting New Importations of Rugs and Draperies

Just Arrived Yesterday

The New Draperies include fine English and French Chintzes—the very Newest and Best of the season's productions. They are beautiful both in design and colouring. It's an exceptional showing in every way—in variety, beauty and price.

There is nothing common or undesirable in our entire stock of Rugs and Draperies, so you will know how to appreciate the statement that the new arrivals stand out as unusually attractive in a showing that is artistic throughout. Critical housekeepers will admire them and economical housekeepers will find strong appeal in the low prices they bear.

Mrs. Edgar, of New York will be at our store all next week to demonstrate the practical use of The New Idea Seam Allowance Pattern and take subscriptions for the Woman's Magazine, which they offer for a whole year at 35c instead of $1.20: included Free, any New Idea Pattern and New Idea in Fashions.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Sinn Fein Society, Blamed For Irish Revolt, of Recent Origin

Name, Purely Gaelic, is the Celtic Equivalent for "Ourselves Alone"—Outgrowth of Young Ireland Movement in 1907

The Sinn Fein, the Irish revolutionary society, at the door of which the uprising in Dublin has been laid, is of comparatively recent origin. It was not until 1907 that this latest outgrowth of the Young Ireland movement of 1848 became of enough consequence to attract to itself any considerable notice, either in or out of Ireland. Late in that same year a branch of the society was organized in New York, then, as now, second only to Dublin itself as a storm centre of Irish agitation.

The name Sinn Fein is purely Gaelic, pronounced Shinn Fain, and is the Celtic equivalent for "Ourselves Alone," more sentiously expressive of the sentiment of Ireland for the Irish, with everything English left out. And, indeed, this is the mainspring of the society, its guiding principle and the basic idea on which it was founded and on which it has attained whatever momentum it has attained.

A short time after its organization the Sinn Fein was described as an outbreak against orthodox nationalism, as represented by Redmond and Dillon, similar to that movement in the revolutionary period of 1848 against the Home Rule agitation conducted by Daniel O'Connell. In 1848 the repealers were condemned by a faction as being too conservative in methods and lacking in constructive ability, and out of this radical opposition sprang the Young Ireland party.

Unlike the Sinn Fein, whose leaders and organizers were men of obscurity and not distinguished in the councils of the Nationalist party, from whose pacific methods they revolted, the moving spirits of the Young Ireland party included some of the brightest minds of Ireland — poets, historians, writers and men of action as well. Among the leaders were such men of culture as Charles Gavan Duffy and William Smith O'Brien and men of more militant mood, like John Mitchel, grandfather of the present Mayor of New York; Thomas Francis Meagher, afterward leader of the famous Irish Brigade in the Civil War, and Thomas D'Arcy McGee.

Owes Origin to Protest.

The Sinn Fein owes its ogiain to a protest among the intractable spirits in the Nationalist party against Home Rule agitation as unduly deliberate and impracticable. Its organizers counted for their strength with the rising generation of Irish on their broader appeals to independence and self-reliance, and from the very inception of the movement was more openly seditious and disloyal. From the beginning of the movement and ever since the British Government watched the society's fearing from its incitements to insurrection and organized resistance to law, just as the Young Ireland movement eventually developed under the leadership of John Mitchel. How well founded were their fears the present rioting in Dublin proves only too well.

The origin of the Sinn Fein is definitely traced to the influence and inspiration of a series of articles by Arthur Griffith on "The Resurrection of Hungary," which were subsequently reprinted and widely circulated in popular pamphlet form throughout Ireland. Mr. Griffith's articles drew a close parallel between the political condition of Ireland and Hungary, and the conclusion was strongly emphasized that Deak's movement for Home Rule in Hungary carried passive resistance to the extremity of disloyalty in the withdrawal of the parliamentary delegation from Vienna. The parallel drawn in the articles pointed to the advisability of a similar movement by the Irish members at Westminster.

The entire argument of the Griffith pamphlets was an unequivocal negation of all that O'Connell, Isaac Butt, Charles Stewart Parnell, Redmond and Dillon attempted at Westminster. It was, in fact, a modus vivendi held out to the radicals, revolutionists, separatists and irreconcilables among the Irish, who found the constitutionalist methods of the Nationalists too deliberate, too pacific and too "subservient" to be to their liking.

Movement Has Steady Growth.

With this groundwork for their organization the Sinn Fein came into being almost unobserved. Its organizers and leaders were men of comparative obscurity and without standing in the Nationalist party. Notwithstanding this, the movement had a steady growth, and while not attracting to its ranks the better minds of the Irish with aspirations for a national entity and never seriously a contender with the Nationalist party for the greater favour of the Irish people, its activities have always been sufficient to inspire the real leaders of the Irish people with apprehensiveness and to call forth from them frequent and severe condemnations of the society.

Attempts on the part of the Nationalist party to ridicule the movement or to discipline its leaders only served to strengthen it, with the result that branches were formed in every county, an influential press was established which advocated its tenets and local elections were contested by it, sometimes successfully, and even in Dublin.

This new Young Ireland movement, which seems destined to come to the same violent and tragic end as that of 1848, in its present development into the active revolutionary party of Ireland has justified the fears of the Nationalist leaders no less than it has those of the British Government. The Nationalists, who are and have been conducting the agitation for Home Rule along the lines pursued by Parnell, have the support of the priests and the hierarchy in the Roman Catholic provinces of the Green Isle. The Sinn Fein, which early in its career was described as "a non-clerical, temperance and anti-machine movement for Irish nationality," has won for itself the hostility of the professional classes in Ireland, who support the Home Rule policy laid down by Parnell and faithfully followed by Redmond and Dillon and which has been successful in wringing from one government after another compromises and concessions.

Long before Sir Roger Casement's open treason he was repudiated by the Nationalists of Ireland. The present Sinn Fein "revolution," abortive and futile as it is doomed to prove, is not less a revolt of one minority faction of Irishmen against Mr. John Redmond and the Nationalist party than against British rule in Ireland.

Redmond repeatedly has spoken in defence of the loyalty of the great mass of his countrymen in the present war, as often in answer to the contrary assertions of the Sinn Feiners as against those of Sir Edward Carson and his Unionists adherents. The speedy suppression of the Sinn Fein revolution will be due not less to the lack of support of the movement by Irishmen than to repressive measures by the British Government.

POURED DRINKS INTO MAN.

Bartenders Pass Jail as Armless Man Get Drunk.

"What are you doing here?" Judge Mahon asked William Parker, an armless man, who said his home was in Pittsburgh, in Police Court at Elizabeth, N.J.

"They say I tipped me elbow too much last night," replied Parker, and he added, "I guess they are right."

"The complaint states you were in a state of intoxication," said Judge Mahon. "Explain to me how an armless stranger in Elizabeth can get in that condition."

"Easiest place I have struck since I left Pittsburgh, Judge," declared Parker. "Every place I visited the 'barkeep' served me by pouring the drink down my throat."

"Altogether too much efficiency," said the Judge. "After you give me the names of your willing assistants I will order your release. I serve notice that any one I get evidence against as pouring liquor down a customer's throat will get sixty days —the maximum this court may impose."

410 Vessels Lost By Great Britain

WASHINGTON, April 29.—British estimates of the European war's toll of merchant ships, given in figures to-day by the Department of Commerce, put the number at 736 ,with a tonnage of more than two million. Allied vessels lost number 538 and neutral 198.

The estimates, made by a British Admiral, give British losses as 410 ships; French 58; Russian, 35; Italian 27; Belgian, 10; and Japanese, 3. This does not include the loss of 237 trawlers by the British, several by the French, and two by the Belgians.

Norway, with 81 vessels destroyed, leads the neutral nations in losses. Sweden, with 40, is second, and Denmark with 28, third. Holland has lost 24 and the United States seven.

British losses amount to four per cent. of the total number in service, and six per cent. of the tonnage. French losses are four per cent. in number and seven per cent. in tonnage. Despite these losses, it is declared, the aggregate of ships owned by the Allies is being steadily increased through building.

HOTEL LICENSES WILL EXPIRE ON SUNDAY

Licenses May Be Extended on Payment of Five Dollars and With Approval of License Inspector, Until Such Time as Temperance Legislation Comes Into Force.

THE BARTENDERS

Today is the last day that the hotelkeepers of the city can operate under the old 1915-16 licenses. The licenses in question which expire to-morrow, may be renewed until September next when now temperance legislation will come into force on payment to-day of five dollars. This money must be paid into the Bank of Nova Scotia. The license holder will then receive an official receipt which, together with the 1915-16 license must be presented on Monday morning to License Inspector Stewart for endorsation. The Inspector will extend the old licenses by writing across the face of it, after which it will be returned to the licensee.

The bartenders will also present ther old licenses and will have them extended in much the same way, with the exception that no money is necessary. The licenses are extended without payment of any kind. Licenses in both cases are extended until the new temperance legislation comes into force.

Duffus Garage Has Reached the Century Mark

The Peterboro Representative of The Ford Motor Co. of Canada Continues to Maintain the Popularity of the Universal Car

Few people excepting those who are regular customers of the Duffus Garage know the activity which exists around this busy automobile house. This week brings the sales up to the century mark for the year.

Having regard to the fact that the motor season has scarcely opened, one hundred cars would seem a phenomenal attainment, particularly so on account of this being a war year.

However, the price, $530, for a five-passenger touring car, positively reliable and economical in the strictest sense of the word, after all, makes this truly a war year car, and when one takes into consideration this very modest price and the high grade qualities of the Ford car and its economy from a standpoint of gasoline and tires, and the exceptional low cost of its repair parts, together with the service that is rendered each and every customer by the efficient and reliable staff at the Duffus Garage, one does not wonder at its phenomenal sale success.

The fact that one can get each and every part of a Ford car on a moment's notice at an exceptionally small price, together with all the other economic features, and the difference in price of it and any other car, together with the fact that you can sell or exchange a Ford car almost any day in the week, makes it a very flexible and wise investment, entirely different from buying a car that remains a fixture on your hands, no matter for what reason you may desire to exchange or dispose of it, and the difference in price properly invested would more than maintain your Ford car. 1d-1w

The Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—It is refreshing to notice the streets in most parts of the city free from dust, and well oiled, although the credit for this cannot be given to this year's Council. In my part of the city there has been no dust blowing this year, and probably the street will not require to be oiled for some weeks if not months, the oil having lasted since it was put on last summer or fall, notwithstanding the snow and frost of last winter. This was one of the reforms brought about by G. Walter Green, and in spite of the greatest opposition, he having stood practically alone in advocating oiling the streets, but carried through this system of improving the highways with the result that even to-day no oil is required to keep the dust from floating about in the air. It is to be hoped the City Council will not buy the cheap oil they advocate, but will follow the lead of a man who believes in doing things thoroughly and well, and who succeeded in doing more for the people of Peterborough than probably they at that time appreciated.

Yours truly,

"APRON" SOCIAL AT ST. JOHN'S SCHOOL HOUSE

This Was Followed by a Musical Progamme and Refreshments

An "Apron" social and entertainment was promoted by the ladies forming the Church Women's Association of St. John's Anglican church at the school-house last evening. A stall for the sale of aprons, of many shades and kinds, was provided, at which also were sold other articles.

A musical programme followed the commercial side of the undertaking. Miss Ruby Quartermaine contributed a vocal solo. Mr. Frank Whitehouse delighted his audience with a violin solo, accompanied by Mr. R. J. Devey. Mrs. Widderson, (accompanied by Mrs. Scadding), gave a vocal solo. Pianoforte solos were contributed by Miss Gladman and Miss Jean Hill. Miss Kathleen Moore gave a vocal solo. A pianoforte duet was contributed by Miss Mitchell and Mr. R. J. Devey.

The stage was prettily and effectively decorated with pots of Easter lilies.

The instrumental and vocal numbers were well rendered and much appreciated by an attentive audience.

At the close of the performance refreshments were served by some of the ladies of the Association.

Mr. Churchwarden Morris acted as chairman, and Mr. R. J. Devey as general accompanist.

Rev. Fr. McShane Holds Fighters' Is Holy Calling

Rev. Father McShane, pastor of St. Patrick's church, Montreal, who has preached on several occasions in Peterborough, at a recent recruiting meeting in the interests of the 199th Battalion, expressed the following regard for Canada's volunteer soldiers.

"I will not undertake to say to any individual young man, singling him out specially, "Go, my boy! It is your duty." There may be obligations and claims of a still higher order with which I am not acquainted. But I will say that Canada and the preservation of Canadian privileges has a positive claim upon the services of every fit and free young man; that there is a call and a Mission of a character and of a nature so sacred that no man can stifle it in his heart can leave it unheeded.

"I regard the soldier's profession as a real vocation. I regard the entrance into that profession as a call as sacred and as God-inspired as the call to any particular career or avocation in life; and as there is no feeling of the human soul so pure and sublime as love or country, as there is no act of man so noble as that of dying for his country so there is no calling or profession so grand and so worthy of admiration as the mission of the soldier who fights for his country.

"Some day, young men who are listening to me, that call will resound in your ears, and it will be as clear and distinct and as unmistakable as your father or mother's voice. Once you hear it, there is no human influence that can hold you back. That voice, that call, has been heard by many a young man of your acquaintance, nay of your very close and intimate kinship, and the very best of our youth and the finest types of our Canadian manhood have already generously responded.

The Call May Come.

"That call may come to you, young men, to-night, as you gather around this platform and listen to the leaders of thought in this country, the most sincere and unimpassioned men of our people. It may come to you on the street, as our gallant Rangers march by, and the sound of their bugles awakens in the recesses of your hearts yearnings and generous desires that you never experienced before.

"It may come to you in the silence of the night when hour after hour passes by, and you wonder what it is that drives the needed refreshing sleep from your heavy, drooping eyelids.

"It may come to you in the midst of that pure, serene atmosphere of the sanctuary of your home, where the sweet family ties that bind you to your loved ones never seemed so strong or so soothing to your heart.

"No matter how or when that voice is heard, let me say, in the beautiful words of Holy Scripture, which we can afford to apply here without any profanation or straining of their meaning:

"If to-day you should hear that voice, do not harden your hearts.

"Do not turn away and try to drown that voice by the excitement of a pleasurable, sensual life, or by the arguments and reasonings of an unbalanced attachment for your home and for your kith and kin.

"If to-day you should hear that voice, do not harden your hearts. If to-day you should hear that voice, do not, in the name of God, in the name of your country, do not harden your hearts.

WOMAN OF 65 A BIGAMIST

Husband, Aged 79, Didn't Support Her, So She Wed a Soldier.

PORT HOPE, Ont., April 29.—Yesterday Police Magistrate White sentenced Mrs. Mary Davy to two months in Cobourg jail at hard labour for bigamy. On February 5th she went through a form of marriage with Wm. Robert Huffman, a soldier, while her husband, John Davy, of Cobourg, was living. Her plea, as presented by her counsel, D. H. Chisholm, was that since Davy had not supported her for three years, she had a right to marry another man. Davy is about 79 years of age, and the woman about 65. The magistrate said such a plea would do away with all social regulations, and would lead to broom stick marriages and broom stick divorce. The soldier was the woman's third matrimonial venture.

MUCH IDLE LAND.

Dull Market This Morning

The farmers' market was a tame affair this morning. Butter sold at 30 cents, eggs at 21 and 22 cents and potatoes $2.00 a bag. Seed potatoes were $1.50. There were a few stray chickens, a great quantity of fruit, several fish booths, and more noticeable were the windows closed as tightly as in January.

The Local Health Association And Its White Plague Fight

Another Reason Why The Association's Plea For Funds Should Not Be Allowed to go Unheeded – Great Deal of Work Has Been Done Locally

Twenty-five or thirty years ago tuberculosis wah recognized as one of the most hopeless diseases to which man was heir. We would see one after another in families stricken down and whole communities would pay toll from almost every household. We could easily see the results of this dread disease, but the cause was a complete mystery, and so we drifted until one day the medical world was startled with the information that the cause of tuberculosis had been discovered in the microscopically small living organism called a bacillus. Long years were required to convince the medical world of the truth and value of this discovery, and longer years still to get the great lay public to realise its importance. Governments were slow to enact laws dealing with the great problem. Industrial corporations and employers of labor had little opportunity of learning the grave danger of crowded factories and workshops. Gradually, however, here and there in different parts of the world groups of men and women gathered together to study this trouble and endeavor in every way possible to disseminate whatever information they were able to secure. Gradually these groups became more and more numerous. Those in authority began to listen, and to act, and finally we had formed large national and international societies supported and encouraged by governments, and by those of high standing in all departments of human endeavour. To one of these national associations the Peterborough Health Association belongs, namely, the Canadian Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, the honorary president of which is the Governor-General His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught. The Health Association carries on its work under a charter of incorporation from the Ontario Government, and its reports and communications are annually published in the report of the Federal Association. Locally a great deal of work has been done in fighting the white plague, but it was soon discovered that to get really effective work accomplished we must take up general nursing. Consequently, the Health Association placed two nurses in the field, so that all cases whether of tuberculosis or general illness could receive prompt and efficient attention. Naturally this brought many more cases under our care and necessitated largely increased expenses in extra food, medicine and comforts. From the gradually increasing work of our nurses and the many kind words of appreciation received we believe that our work is desired by the citizens. It is with such belief, therefore, that we appeal for funds to carry along the work, and we feel that our citizens have only to be reminded to cheerfully respond to our canvass.

THE KINGDOM OF THE SKY

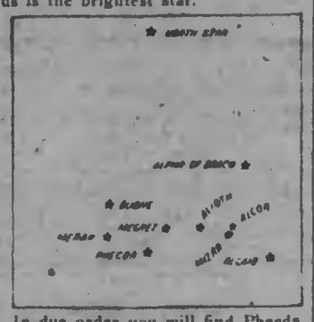
With the exception of Orion there is no other constellation with so many bright stars in so close a group.

Alioth, the third star from the handle, is the brightest of these and barely escapes being a first magnitude star.

All the others are second magnitude stars with the exception of Megrez, which lies at the point where the handle joins the bowl of the dipper. This is a third magnitude star.

After the first magnitude stars there are only two stars in our latitude that are brighter than Alioth.

One of these is Castor, one of the twins, and the other is Adara, a bright star in the constellation of Canis Major, the constellation in which Sirius is the brightest star.



In due order you will find Pheeda, Merak, and Dubhe. Dubhe belongs to a more advanced class than do the others. Like our sun and Capella it has advanced along in years to what astronomers call the G stage. It shows a yellow tinge. Afterwards it will change to red and then it will burn out and lose all its heat and light.

But not for hundreds of millions of years yet.

Dubhe is an interesting spectroscopic double star. Its little companion is 8,600 times fainter than itself.

Our earth itself if a good illustration of what a double star is. Our earth moon system is practically a binary. If we may be permitted to call a planet a star.

The earth is so much larger than the moon that the direction of the earth is very little disturbed by the attraction of the moon.

Were these two bodies more equal in size they would both move around a common centre, did the attractive force of our solar system permit.

Olcott says, that, "The big dipper is unquestionably the most ancient of all the constellations, (of course in saying this he refers to the name only) and is universally known as the Bear.

On the banks of the Euphrates, thousands of years ago it was so designated, and the Iroquois Indians of North America called this group Okouari, their name for bear.

The Algonquin Indians called the constellation "The bear of the hunters."

The Fins called it Ursa Major, Otawa, a title resembling the Okouari of the Indians, as it inferred that they regarded this constellation as representing a bear.

Thus in the remote parts of the earth, in the far north, from the valley of the Euphrates to the great lakes of North America, we find the same stars likened to the same animal, the relics of some primeval association of ideas long since extinct.

Aristotle held that the name was derived from the fact that of all known animals the bear was the only one that dared to venture into the frozen regions of the north and tempt the solitude and cold.

In all probability, it is this group of stars and not Arcturus which is referred to in Job's question "Canst thou guide Arcturus and his sons?"

In the revised version it reads—

"Canst thou guide the bear with her train?"

The Iroquois Indians have a pretty little legend about the big dipper which says that "A party of hunters pursuing a bear were attacked by three monster stone giants, who destroyed al but three of them, these, together with the bear, were carried up to the sky with invisible hands."

The bear is still being pursued by the three hunters.

The first carries a bow, the second carries a kettle to cook him in. The kettle is represented by the little star Alcor.

The third hunter carries sticks with which to light a fire when the bear is slain. In the autumn the first hunter hits the bear, and the blood stains from the wounded bear tinge all the autumn foliage.

Addison in his translation of Ovid's metamorphoses thus writes that Jove

"———Snatched them through the air
In whirlwinds up to Heaven and fixed them there.
Where the new constellations nightly rise
And add a lustre to the northern skies."

Keep The Red Cross Watch Fires Burning

A Stirring Appeal to The Women of Peterborough

It is a matter of very deep regret to the Executive of the Peterborough Red Red Cross Society that the attendance at the work-room at the Public Library has greatly fallen off. There are several reasons to account for this; one of the chief being that so many of the Churches have their own societies working on the church premises and turning out splendid work. Another reason is that now is the season for house-cleaning. Some are feeling the strain of long and regular attendance, while some have got used to the thought of this terrible war and have become indifferent.

A very earnest request has come from headquarters to do our utmost to keep up the supply of surgical dressings, not to let them fall off as there must be ample resources always ready in case of emergency. When one reads of 800,000 Germans in front of the British lines, it looks as if our resources would soon be taxed to the utmost. Are we Peterborough women content not to keep up our splendid record in regard to the quantity and quality of all the surgical dressings sent from our Society to let our labours relax in the face of the fact that the fiercest fighting is going to confront our Canadian boys ere long.

Everyone is welcome at the Red Cross room; everyone's help is needed sorely in order to keep up our supplies, so rally in answer to this appeal of the Executive for more workers.

The soldiers cannot take a rest while they are needed, and we women cannot afford to take a rest as long as our work is required. The work-room is open on Monday, Wednesday and Fridays, morning and afternoon, and on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. Please come and help us.

The Executive of the Peterborough Red Cross Society will meet on Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock, in the Teachers' room at the Library.

CANTATA IN SUNDAY ACHOOL

Through the efforts of Mrs. P. B. Wright's Young Ladies' Bible Class, a very pretty cantata "Judith," an Easter song story for reader and chorus, assisted by the Orchestra illustrated by special Easter slides will be given in the Charlotte Street Sunday School room, to-morrow afternoon at 2:30, at which time everybody is most cordially invited.

Mr. A. D. Hone will read the story which will be interspersed by musical numbers, as follows:

Meditation, "In the Garden," Orchestra.

"O Garden Fair," Double Quartette Sop., Miss A. Williams, Miss A. Rigby; tenor, Mr. Ridyard, Mr. A. Lee; Alto., Miss Pollard, Miss A. Lee; bass, Mr. N. Staines, Mr P. Naish.

Solo, "The Nazarene," Mary Elisabeth Wright.

Duet, "O Wondrous Words," Miss Calvary trio, Miss K. Moore, Miss G. Stevens, Mrs. W. R. Widdess, Alice Williams, Mrs. W. R. Widdess.

Chorus and Orchestra, "Son of Man, Yet Son of God."

Quartette, "The Shadows Dark are Veiling," Miss K. Moore, Miss Pollard, Mr. C. B. Adair, Mr. N. Staples.

Cello: Mr. J. M. Green, violin, Sergt.-Major Hartshorne.

Chorus and Orchestra, "O Morn of Resurrection."

Solo, "Soldier's Song."

Pte. W. Farr, violin, Sergt. Major Hartshorne.

Closing Chorus and Orchestra "He Liveth."

New Foundry is Filling War Orders

Rudkins Brass and Iron Co. Foundry Now in Operation

The Rudkins Brass and Iron Co. foundry, now occupying the old Rapid Tool Co. factory on Hunter St. East, is now in operation and in the course of a short while will be employing a considerable number of men. The company under the capable managership of Mr. Wm. Rudkins, is filling a large number of war orders, manufacturing brass fittings for harness sets. With the installation of additional machinery, work will be proceeded with on a much larger scale. Peterborough will then have a thriving little industry, and a building will be utilized that has been standing idle for some time past.

Bomb-Laden Camels Blown Up By Turks

Cairo, Egypt, April 2, (by mail.)—Camels laden with bombs and petrol were blown to pieces by the Turks so that these living carriers of ammunition would not fall into the possession of the attacking British during the sensational dash of the Duke of Westminster's armoured motor car battery through the Libyan desert.

This British expedition consisting of 32 men, nine armoured machines, and one open car containing a machine gun, began its pursuit at Sollum, in northwestern Egypt. Dashing at racing speed along the Tabruk road over which the Turks had retreated, the British, after covering 23 miles came unexpectedly upon the enemy, whose troops were on the move.

The Turks opened fire with their only artillery in position—one ten-pounder and two machine guns. The British battery swung into line, silencing the Turkish guns and then capturing them after shooting down the defenders almost to a man.

The Turks were scattering in every direction. The attacking batteries dashed here and there killing all the Turks who offered resistance. Those who chose the alternative of flight passed long enough to fire upon their camels, which one by one disappeared as their packs exploded with terrific force.

A TRYING EXPERIENCE FOR BRITISH CABINET

George, the chief Tory bug-bear of pre-war times, you begin to rub your eyes and wonder what has happened. Again when you look at the front Opposition Bench and see side by side Sir Edward Carson and so vehement a Liberal as Sir Alfred Mond, you once more ask yourself if the world has turned topsy-turvy. So I might go on with the extraordinary transformation indicated by these signs.

One party alone, of course, is where it has always been since Parnell was elected Leader in 1880. Now as before the war the Irish Party sits on the Opposition benches; it remains "agin" this and every other Government until Ireland receives her self-government. This is the official position; as a matter of fact, the Irish Party is more resolutely a Ministerial Party than any other in the House. It is united; it knows its own mind; it has as its definite policy the vigorous and successful prosecution of the war; and it opposes by all its powerful force any attempt to create trouble by dividing the Ministry or the House or the country.

Among the strangest of results, however, are the personal relations between men who for all their political lives have been political opponents, and in some cases have even been personal enemies.

Asquith and Balfour.

In the present Cabinet there are no two men who understand or like each other better than Mr. Asquith and Mr. Balfour. But this has always been the case—even when they were on opposite sides. This is largely due to the fact that though they come from very different stocks originally, there is much in their live that is common. They are both University men, they are both scholars; they are both great readers; though there is lacking in Mr. Asquith that interest in metaphysics and theology which is so essentially Scotch and therefore natural in Mr. Balfour. They are both essentially students who have brought to the politics of the hour all that accumulated learning of all the schools.

A friendship between two such men is not unnatural or unexpected; but it is curious to find that another of Mr. Asquith's great friends and admirers is Mr. Bonar Law. Between him and Mr. Asquith there is no common ground in either heredity or up-bringing. Mr. Bonar Law is a typical Scotchman. He is not a University man; he had to go into the Metal market in Glasgow when he was quite young. He is as Scotch as Mr. Asquith is Yorkshire. Yet whenever a question arises of interfering with Mr. Asquith, Mr. Bonar Law is the first man to be up in arms against it. He insists that Mr. Asquith has great qualities, and that his sense of these qualities has been enormously increased by his intimacy with Mr. Asquith in the Cabinet Councils.

His Outlook Modified.

Another man whose whole outlook personal as well as political, has been enormously modified by the war and the Coalition is Mr. Walter Long. Here is one of the most typical figures of English life and of the English country party that has ever appeared in present-day politics. For centuries his family have been large land-owners in Wiltshire; for centuries they have represented their native county.

Physically as well as mentally Mr. Walter Long is just what you would expect from his heredity and from his opinions. He has a red face—as of the man who rides to hounds, looks over his fields, and spends as much of his time as possible in the open air. Once when he received a number of unexpected compliments from an Irish Nationalist member, he made a playful allusion to his appearance by saying that he would have blushed if nature had not prohibited his face from showing a more scarlet hue. When poor George Wyndham— one of the modern tragedies of our Parliamentary life—was driven out of the office of Chief Secretary for Ireland because of the too strong Liberal tendencies he revaled, Mr. Walter Long was chosen to take up the thankless office in the certainty that he would not err on that side, and would bring back the office to its old traditions of stubborn resistance to all change. The Orangemen who regarded him as one of their own, hailed the appointment with uproarious delight, and he was even elected for an Irish constituency, for the County of Dublin in fact, where neglect of registration by the Nationalists and careful preparation of it by the Tories, had for a brief space given a Tory majority. And Mr. Walter Long had lived up to expectations; for to every Nationalist demand in the direction of Home Rule he gave stern and unbending opposition.

Never Unpopular.

Yet it was a curious fact that he was never personally unpopular. Indeed there are few men in the House of Commons who enjoy greater personal popularity. He is so transparently honest, so free from complexity, so straightforward, and withal so good-natured, that it could not be in the heart of any man to dislike him. But still up to the Coalition he was always put down as one of the irreconcilable Tories. It was in his favour that even during the worst hours of the struggle over Ulster in the Home Rule enquiry, he went out of his way to declare that he did not share the fears that the Irish Nationalists and Catholics would lend themselves to religious persecution. His chief fault as a politician was that he spoke with some diffuseness. There is a story of somebody asking Mr. Balfour when he was Mr. Long's chief, when Mr. Long would finish the speech he was then engaged in making. Mr. Balfour's characteristic reply was that Walter had finished long ago, but that when he would end, God only knew.

Then came the Coalition, and Mr. Walter Long, going back to his old office as head of the local Government Board, suddenly found himself thrown into one of the most difficult and one of the most contentious of all the Government departments. This department had a lot to do with recruiting, and the fierce struggle between the Conscriptionists and the anti-Conscriptionists was quite sufficient to make his office a bed of thorns. But he had also to deal with all the vast series of questions which arose out of the pecuniary embarrassments of the war— especially among the lower middle-class who had gone to the war and left wife and children to face the difficulties of living without the assistance of the head of the household. This involved breaking of leases, moratoriums of rent, and a number of other revolutionary expedients which were enough to make the ancestors of Walter Long turn in their graves. But Mr. Long took the jump with out hesitation, and carried the bills through with great tact and skill.

And his Parliamentary reputation and indeed his Parliamentary gifts have risen to the occasion. He is now the man put forward whenever there is a ticklish situation; and no Minister—except perhaps Mr. Bonar Law—speaks with greater adroitness and effectiveness. Among the many Parliamentary gifts which Mr. Asquith has displayed since the war, none is greater than the admirable dexterity with which he has pushed forward these two old opponents into positions of delicacy and responsibility—thereby raising their reputations and safe-guarding the Ministry.

To destroy Mr. Asquith his enemies have to pass the outer guard which is held firmly in his favour by Mr. Balfour, Mr. Bonar Law and Mr. Walter Long.

GENERAL PETAIN PRAISED FOR VERDUN'S DEFENCE

PARIS, April 29.—Generals Petain Commander-in-Chief at Verdun; Balfourier and Claret de la Touche have been placed on the special roll of the Legion of Honor for grand officers for conspicuous services at Verdun. The Inscription relating to General Petain says:

"A general officer of the greatest valor since the beginning of the campaign, he has not ceased as a Commander of brigade, division, army corps and army to give proof of most remarkable military qualities. Thanks to his calm firmness and the skillfulness of his dispositions, he knew how to retrieve a delicate situation and inspire confidence in all. He has thus rendered the country most conspicuous services."

A Housing Lesson From The Birds

The birds display a wonderful skill in the fashioning of their 1916 model nests. Not that there are any innovation in this year's plans. Robins are building as the first generic pair built when the world was young, and they had all the cherry trees, with their fruit, to themselves. The coy, modest song sparrow is making a new nest in the cedar hedge, of the same kind of materials and of the same dimensions as the nests of previous years. High up in the pines the crows are industriously erecting their crude summer home, and in a nearby tree is a similar pile that sheltered a last year brood. In the stubble, too, the meadow lark is preparing its ground nest, the site of which it is palpably afraid of betraying. Man is baffled by the natural efficiency of the birds in the annual construction of their new homes, but how often is he impressed by the fact that they are new homes?

Many of last year's nests could be "overhauled" and made habitable, a common practice in the human order. But too often the families of men move from house to house with little thought of the previous occupants. There are houses that are admittedly a great public convenience, even necessity, though built as an investment. But among them are too many that have become tumble-down, have reached an advanced state of disrepair. They are dilapidated beyond renovation, cheaper to raze and reconstruct than to patch and renovate. And in their worst condition there are families that rent them, families with which the habits of the indolent, trespassing cuckoo are above comparison.

Sanitary Inspector Spence has a list of such houses which he wants torn down. They are unsanitary, he says, and a menace to public health. While other preventive methods against disease are being combatted, there is no means of striking the shaky props from under these shacks and throwing the debris on the woodpile.

The birds set the example by their natural attention to sanitation. Of course they have not the additional health menace of windows permanently nailed down, nor are the ravens feathered plumbers. But these ramshackle houses that are a present menace have never known a plumber, and never will. These, at least, should be regarded as the birds regard the nests of a former year. They should not be used. Man should go a step further and destroy them. At their best, if there is such a condition among them, they invite a low mode of living which should have no place, or should be to that extent discouraged in these days of super-sanitation.

(15). Cleaning. All clothes must be kept clean and neat at all times.

J. E. B. MUNRO,
Captain.
Adjutant 93rd Overseas Battalion
C. E. F.

The 93rd Battalion is still sticking to its traditions regarding family groups. Within the past few days Mr. Sam Hale, East City, an employee of the Calcutt Brewing and Malting Co., and his two sons, Thomas and Louis, have become members of the 93rd. Another son of Mr. Hale left Peterborough with the 57th detachment to the 2nd Battalion and has been at the front for over a year. That makes four for this Canadian-born family.

"A" company of the 93rd Battalion held a very interesting sham fight on Thursday afternoon and the men enjoyed the break from the ordinary routine immensely. The tactical scheme worked out under the direction of Capt. J. H. Eastwood. A detachment consisting of one and a half platoons in charge of Lieut. P. G. Might formed the defending party. They left the armouries half an hour in advance of the attacking party which consisted of two and a half platoons commanded by Capt. Eastwood. Lieut. Might's orders were to select a position to the west of the city and defend it against the attacking party. The defence selected a good position near Lily Lake. The attackers of course threw out scouts as soon as they left the city limits. They expected to find the defenders somewhere near Jackson Park, but after long, careful scouting they were finally located miles beyond that point. The troops were furnished with blank cartridges and a battle royal followed when the two forces came into contact. Then defenders and attackers united and marched back to the city reaching the armouries at 5 o'clock after a strenuous but most interesting afternoon.

The Lindsay Post says: Bandmaster Hefferman, of the 109th Battalion band, has signed up Geo. Maguire, of Uxbridge, the well kpown clarinet soloist. "Billy" is building up the reed section of the band, and Mr. Maguire is a valuable acquisition to the organization.

It will be interesting information to many Peterborough people that twelve members of the Peterborough contingent who left with the 39th Battalion are with the 36th Battalion at the front. They are Corp. Wm. Allen, Lance-Corp. Walter Elliott, Pte. Gordon Calberry, Pte. Harry Amos, Pte. Fred Eggleton, Pte. Tommy Dyer, Pte. Jack Garratt, Pte. A. Picard, Pte. Geo. Robinson, Pte. Ed. Thebeau, Pte. Jack Saffrey and Pte. Bruce Clarke.

Here is a useful tip for the societies who send out comforts to the boys in the trenches. A Peterborough boy writing home from the front says: 'Some of the fellows chew that old reliable tobacco called McDonald's, and they don't smoke, so some of it would be very much appreciated by the boys."

Pte. Harry King, who was recently discharged from the Soldiers' Convalescent Home at Kingston as being unfit for further service, is spending a holiday with his brother, Mr Herb. King, in Chicago.

It is sincerely hoped no one is forgetting the sock shower the Daughters of the Empire are giving our departing Battalion. It is to be held in the Simcoe Street Recruiting Room on May 13th. The Battalion, by that time, will be very large; 1,100 pairs of socks are required. We would be grateful if every one helps the Daughters of the Empire in this noble cause, as you can see they need all the hearty cooperation of the ladies. Those who would like to contribute to the 93rd Battalion shower and have got any wool may apply to Mrs. W. H. Hill, 'phone 17 and she will supply them with the necessary wool.

The 39th Battalion had some trouble last night with some of their soldiers. Some fourteen were in the gangs who tried to desert at two different times. The military and others were kept busy in the G.T.R. yard rounding them up and succeded in getting ten of them under arrest in various places, empty cars and so forth. Some four men had not been located up to a late hour this morning.—Wednesday's Belleville Ontario.

His Lordship Bishop O'Brien will give an address at a recruiting meeting in Cobourg Sunday night.

At the conclusion of the burial of the late Pte. Boike at the Little Lake cemetery yesterday, Major Davidson addressed a few words to the men of the 93rd, expressing sorrow at the untimely death of the late Pte. Boike. He said the warm sympathy of the battalion would go out to the young man's parents and friends, far over the seas. It would be a consolation to them to know of the great comradeship he enjoyed in life, as a member of the battalion, and also of the Christian burial he had been given.

To-day was pay-day for the members of the 93rd Battalion. Hence the smiling faces on the street this afternoon.

No word has yet been received of the date of the departure of the 93rd draft to the 4th Canadian Pioneer Battalion, although it is likely that the draft will leave for Ottawa early next week.

Some More Convincing Evidence

If more evidence were needed to demonstrate the exceptional value of the total abstinence on an insurance risk than what has already been published by this Company, it is found in the following Table covering the experience in the two Departments of the Company for the period of ten years.

Year	PER CENT OF EXPECTED LOSS
	Abstainer	General
1906	36.96 per cent	74.33 per cent
1907	37.81 per cent	69.15 per cent
1909	33.50 per cent	68.45 per cent
1911	46.87 per cent	77.68 per cent
1913	48.48 per cent	64.94 per cent
1914	41.83 per cent	71.69 per cent
Average for Last 10 Years	39.46 per cent	64.19 per cent

Why not reap the advantages of Total Abstinence by insuring in a Company which quotes the special terms and rates which the above Table clearly shows are deserved by those who classify for insurance in this Dept?

NORTH MONAGHAN'S NEW ROAD SYSTEM ALREADY OPERATING

Road Drag Being Used in Division No. 6 Where About $1000 Will be Spent This Year - Other Features of The Township Extended Good Roads Scheme.

The beginning of a broader and more extensive system of road repair and rebuilding is evidenced in North Monaghan this spring. During the past week a new road drag was put into operation in No. 6 division of which Mr. Archie Patterson is Road Commissioner. It was ordered in time to arrive earlier in April, but was delayed on account of freight congestion. Had it been received when expected it could have been applied to roads that were more plastic, or less settled than they are now, but in spite of this preliminary obstruction to the township's present plan considerable progress has been already made. Mr. Patterson has been over a section of the Gravel Road and others in the vicinity of its intersection with the extension of Sherbrooke street.

A drag is mainly used for the purpose of levelling a road. It fills in ruts and hollows when the top covering is in a suitable condition for this work, and also removes the surplus material which when dried by the summer sun provides the loose dust that is too often a nuisance and discomfort to those who use the country roads. Experience has shown that spring work with a drag relieves this nuisance to a large extent.

It is not correct to create the impression that this is North Monaghan's first serious attempt at road building. Considered by and large the township posseses roads that are well up to the rural standard that has generally prevailed. But the standard has become antiquated. It belongs to the age of mere utility. Now there is a disposition to consider comfort since the automobile is gradually coming into universal use. Whatever the real influence behind the good roads movement, it is being adopted everywhere and with considerable enthusiasm in North Monaghan. In this municipality it is the fruit of an agitation for the most effectual employment of the money appropriated for road work. This sentiment has been sedulously cultivated and promoted by ratepayers who clamoured for a definite policy that would make for a greater degree of permanency of repair and construction.

Probably the public is aware of the township's supply of gravel and crushed stone from the big C.P.R. pit, as it is familiarly known, adjoining the old Hooper property a few miles west of the city. Last year the crusher was operated there, and this summer the work will be continued. Thus, the roads will be gradually graded and gravelled, and will be improved to a condition the whole township will take a pride in.

It will be thus observed that North Monaghan is making no plunge with a loud splash in its good roads system. From all accounts the present design is to advance the improvement of roads steadily and uninterruptedly. It is something of a "nibbling" policy, with quite a huge nibble every year. It is something of a "nibbling" policy, first of all fostered and attained a desire for better roads, and the scheme as it actually operates is to accomplish a definite and permanent improved section every year. Ultimately, it is expected the township will be in a position to boast of its roads, and having effected their complete reconstruction there will only remain their maintenance in that state, the price of which is the vigilance of the commissioners.

Allison Testifies Before The Commission

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, April 29.—Col. J. Wesley Allison this morning made the first appearance before the Davidson investigating commission since the time when he gave evidence concerning his part in the purchase of Colt pistols before the commission several months ago. Since that time some evidence has been given indicating certain discrepancies in that first given by Colonel Allison. Colonel Allison was asked: "Did you have any arrangements as to a commission?" "No specific arrangement." "Were you later offered any commission?" "Yes, I was offered an amount of from thirty to forty thousand dollars." "Was the Canadian Government mentioned in connection with the amount?" "Not at the time. It was long after my negotiations with the Canadian Pistols that the commission was mentioned. I was simply to get the pistols through for General Hughes to evade the neutrality laws." Witness told how the package of pistols consigned to him for the Canadian Government were shipped to Waddington and then across the boundary to Morrisburg, and thence to Quebec, Valcartier or Ottawa, to General Hughes, Col. Murphy, Col. Hallock or Mr Brown. "I want to say here," said witness at this point, "that my endorsation by General Hughes was of very great advantage to me in dealing with other governments. It helped me a great deal indeed."

Unexpected Meeting of The Cabinet

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, April 29.—The Cabinet met unexpectedly this morning, causing the circulation of the most sensational rumours, in view of the fact that ministerial meetings are never held on Saturday. The meeting was at once connected with King George's conference with Premier Asquith and Lord Kitchener yesterday afternoon, and the reports of a new Cabinet crisis. In some quarters it was rumoured that the special meeting had to do with the Irish crisis and the almost unanimous demand by the newspapers that Secretary for Ireland Birrell resign. Another report was that it had to do with the conscription fight in Parliament.

Says Country Is Facing a Crisis

Special to the Examiner.

LONDON, April 29.—The Daily News declared editorially to-day that the country is face to face with the "gravest crisis that has arisen since war began. The Prime Minister withdrew the new service bill after a discussion which served only to reveal that every man's hands were against it," said the News. "The elaborate compromise on conscription has broken down at the first trial, and the very existence of the Government may conceivably be imperilled by a controversy which is in itself wholly artificial."

"A FRIEND OF THE WHOLE FAMILY"

Delightful Farce Presented by The Young People of St. Andrew's Church Last Night

St. Andrew's hall was filled to capacity last evening when the young people of the church presented a delightful little play entitled, "A Friend of the Whole Family." Judging from the hearty applause that greeted the presentation, it was evident that it was thoroughly enjoyed by all present. "A Friend of the Whole Family" is a farce comedy in three acts and is brimful of clever witticisms and laughable situations. The dialogue was interspersed with a number of songs that went well. The various roles were acted in a manner deserving of the highest praise. These young artists spoke their lines with a true interpretation of the part they were playing, comparing very favourably with many so-called "professionals." Numerous were the words of laudatory comment showered upon them, and the hope was expressed that at some future time they would again give their splendid production.

The soloists came in for their share of eulogy, and laud and continued applause greeted them. Space will not permit of individual comment. Suffice it to say that the whole entertainment was an enjoyable one from beginning to end, and reflects the greatest credit on all who took part.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

SPORTING COMMENT

Nunamaker, the New York, Yankee catcher, has gone crazy. He poled a single, a double, and a triple Wednesday, and this makes seven hits and thirteen bases in the last eight times at bat.

A record of Tris Speaker's hitting in games played in Cleveland shows that he has hit .390 in eight seasons. His poorest year was 1911, when he batted but .269 against Cleveland pitchers on their home lot.

Plain violators of the rule against allowing players unsigned to train were the Boston Red Sox in the case of Speaker and the New York Yankees in the case of Ray Keating. The season opened with Keating still unsigned.

One of the novelties pulled at the opening game in Cleveland was the distribution by the club management of 10,000 papes Indian war bonnets which were donned by the fans. The effect of this is the great crowd can be imagined but it seemed to be lost on the Indians out on the field.

Three new managers are this season pastiming in the International, in Billy Smith, the former Buffalo pilot, at Richmond; Fred Tenny, the former Boston first baseman and manager, at Newark, and Joe Birmingham, with the Leafs, Toronto.

Both the Ottawa and Cornwall lacrosse clubs claim Capt. Nick. Bawlf, but as his headquarters are now at Cornwall, he will likely be with the factory town team. Bawlf is coaching a team of athletes and will bring them here for the Victoria Day sports carnival.

President Tener of the National League has had a long letter from M. Naoki, manager of the Keio University alumni team of Japan. The Jap writes: "The great American national game has of late taken a firm grasp on the Japanese thus deepening the zeal for a thorough knowledge of the rules." The writer asked for many interpretations on the rules, which were furnished him.

Unusual interest will follow the fortunes of the International League this season in view of the troublous times through which the big minor league passed this season. During the 1915 season, when the Federal League was going along in its glory, there was a great deal of doubt as to whether or not the International circuit would weather the storm. The crowds that have flocked to the exhibition games at Newark augur well for the success of the team there. Buffalo was a good International League town last year, when the fans remained faithful to the club in spite of the fact that Buffalo was invaded by the Federals. Rochester and Providence always have been good baseball towns, and there is little likelihood of this season proving to be an exception. There is still doubt about Richmond, but the Virginians will have a well balanced team this season, and that should do as much as anything to help matters along. In Montreal and Toronto a great many of the supporters of the baseball teams have either gone to the trenches or are in training for military duty, but nevertheless it is expected both clubs will have a fair season.

Walker S. Moulton, Ingersoll's star intermediate O. H. A. hockey player for several years, has reported at Ottawa to go into training in the naval service as a wireless operator. Mr Moulton has been one of the mainstays of the Ingersoll hockey team, and also was prominent as a baseball pitcher. For a number of years he has been a telegraph operator in the C.P.R. office at Ingersoll.

Canadian soldiers are playing their national game at present in all corners of the globe. The 38th has two strong teams in Bermuda and behind the lines in France, there is a league, composed of Canadian twelves. Some of the boys attached to the Varsity hospital in France ordered sticks and have introduced it there. Last month, at the request of the Sportsman's Patriotic Association, Joe Lally sent several dozen sticks to the military camps at Shorncliffe. Some have also been sent to Ramsgate.

An Ottawa despatch says: As Toronto paddlers have declared themselves and their intention of holding only local regattas this year, it is probable that at the annual meeting of the northern division of the Canadian Canoe Association here Saturday the annual meet may be called off so far as 1916 is concerned.

If the C.C.A. is abandoned there is a chance that the northern division will hold a meet at Ottawa for patriotic purposes. Carleton Place is known to be favourably inclined towards holding such a meeting, and the Ottawa clubs would likely fall in line. It would also give the Ottawa-New Edinburgh war canoe a chance to get back for that beating by inches that the Carleton Place crew gave them in the mile race at Toronto last summer.

Two brothers, Geodie and Dougie Munroe, both well known paddlers, have enlisted with the 13th Artillery Brigade, now being mobilized at Kingston under Lieut. Col. Arnold.

Says Hughey Jennings: "Cobb outclasses Benny Kauff. They do not compare, that's all. Benny is a fair ball player, but it is not fair to mention him in the same breath with Ty Cobb."

President John K Tener of the National League, who has just returned after looking over a few of the clubs on his own circuit, is one of those who believe that the Giants are going to be prominent among the first division talent in this year's race.

"You may talk about your $100,000 infields and your Ty Cobbs and your great stars of the diamond," he said, "but it is the pitching staff which counts in the long run. I think the Giant's pitching staff will show up remarkably strong just as soon as it hits its stride. I look for the team to accomplish a great deal as soon as it gets under way."

President Tener is also much pleased over the awakening of the Chicago Cubs and the Cincinnati team. He says that the attendance in both Chicago and Cincinnati shows a remarkable revival of feeling for the game, and he predicts a big season for both teams.

Another pitching staff which President Tener has his eye on is that of Brooklyn. He considers the Dodger twirlers among the best on the circuit.

The McGill Annual, which is published by the members of the third year of McGill every year, was issued yesterday, and one of the chief factors of this publication is that it is dedicated to the late Lance-Corporal Fred Wisher, V.C. Fred Fisher was well known in athletic circles around McGill University during the only year that he attended, he being a spare on the champion football team of that season. Fisher was a splendid player and had the makings of a star Coach Shaughnessy always spoke of him as a coming player, and never doubted his abilities.

At the outbreak of the war Fisher did not hesitate to enlist, he joining the Royal Highlanders (13th Battalion.) With this regiment he showed up even better than he did in football circles, being awarded the Victoria Cross for bravery on the field of action. The young soldier-athlete never lived to hear of his gaining the distincton, being killed on the field.

RELATED A PATHETIC TALE

But Story of Ill-Treatment of English Girl Has Anti-Climax

The British House of Commons rarely has been so terribly disturbed as it was over the experiences of a young English girl, the daughter of an English squire, and of "pure English blood," as narrated by Mr. C. P. Trevelyan. Torn from her home, thrust into a vile jail, subjected for two days to a most searching inquisition, and still lying in duress, Mr. Trevelyan told the moving tale with much skill.

The member for Alland is not a popular member of the House just now, for his views on the war are thoroughly detested, but he described with moving pathos the brutal treatment of this English squire's daughter and aroused great interest.

The other side was told by Sir F. E. Smith. The Attorney-General spoke on behalf of the Home Secretary and presented his facts so differently that the only points of agreement in the two stories seemed to be that the young lady was an English woman and that she had been forcibly carried off. It turned out, indeed, that Mr. Trevelyan had omitted such cardinal considerations as the following: — That the young woman was an intimate friend of a person who had had to flee the country; that this man had been associated with plots of assassination and was charged with vile and dangerous offences; that he went to Berlin, and since the war has been busy visiting neutral countries; that the young woman last year went to Switzerland to meet him and stopped in the same hotel for several days; that he told her that he was an agent of the German Foreign Office; that she came back to England bearing a message from the man to one of the most dangerous German agents in England, and that the papers seized in her possession were of a seditious and revolutionary character.

IRISH TALKING TOO WILDLY

Casement Attorney Says He Will Appeal to Pres. Wilson to Intercede for the Traitor.

New York, April 29.—An investigation was begun at the office of the United States District Attorney to determine whether a crime had been comitted by persons responsible for attacks on President Wilson and the National Administration that have appeared in Irish-American papers published here since the outbreak of the revolution in Dublin. Copies of these editorials will be examined, it was said, by one of the assistant district attorneys who has been prominent in the investigation of alien conspiracies.

The attention of the Federal authorities was first aroused by an editorial statement that information which led to the sinking of the German ship which attempted to land arms and ammunition on Irish soil came from a member of the Washington Administration, "on the orders of President Wilson." This declaration has been authoritatively denied in Washington.

Altogether Irish.

Colonel Patrick J. Wallace, commander of a Connemara brigade of the Irish Volunteers, who is now in New York, is authority for the statement that the present situation in Ireland was not fostered in Germany nor in America. "The plans of the Irish Volunteers," he said, "have been ready ever since the first talk of conscription was heard in Ireland. At the time of the revolt there were 3,000 fully armed and fully trained Volunteers in Dublin. Out through the country there were 60,000."

An opposite view is expressed by the Marquis of Aberdeen, former Viceroy of Ireland. Lord Aberdeen, who is now in New York, said that, while he did not underestimate the seriousness of the situation, he was nevertheless convinced that the outbreak would be of short duration.

Small Centres of Unrest.

In discussing yesterday's despatches regarding signs of unrest in parts of Ireland outside Dublin, he said: "This statement doubtless refers to certain localities where for a very long time there have been small centres of discontent, and, in view of all these circumstances, it is not the least surprising that it has been thought proper to place the whole country, nominally, for the time being, under martial law.

"As to the apparent lack of repressive measures on the part of the Government in the past concerning the Sinn Fein movement, it must be remembered that in Britain, as also in this country, the public mind is sensitive about anything that might seem to trench upon freedom of speech and of the press."

Casement's Sister in N. Y.

Michael Francis Doyle, a lawyer, living in Philadelphia, was in this city to-day in the interests of Sir Roger Casement, from whom he said he had a power of attorney. Mr. Doyle said he had come here to see Mrs. George Henry Newman, a sister of Sir Roger, who is living at a hotel.

"I have wired Secretary Tumulty asking for an appointment with President Wilson," Mr. Doyle said, "and will ask him to intercede for Sir Roger. I shall present as ground for such action by the President the great work done for humanity by Sir Roger in South Africa. I shall also ask the President to intervene for the preservation of the rights of the Irish people."

DETECTIVES SEEK TO BARE A ROMANCE

NEW YORK, April 29.—Rude detectives would like to know the name of the woman who presented an expensive gold-bound wallet to a man last Christmas, and also the name of the man, and as Tiffany and Co. have refused to provide this information the courts have been asked to take action.

A young man, who said he was Frederick Whitney, of No. 306 East Fifty-fourth street, was arrested yesterday while trying to pawn the wallet. He was held on a charge of "suspicion of larceny."

Detective Van Twistern told Magistrate Murphy in Yorkville Court that at Tiffany's he was informed that the wallet had been purchased just before Christmas by a woman who had presented it to a man. As she had requested that their names be not revealed the firm said it always respected such wishes by its customers.

The Magistrate said that if the firm did not reveal the information he would issue a summons for some responsible executive. The police are inclined to believe they are on the trail of an important robbery—or a romance.

Trouble Brewing In Greece

Unless Greece Joins Allies in Balkan Offensive, There Will Be Internal Disturbances Before Long.

ATHENS, April 29, via Rome and Paris, April 29.—An imperial observer who has just returned from a tour of all the main land of Greece reports an amazing spread of sentiment in favour of Venizelos, the former premier, even in conservative Peloponnesus. The recent efforts of the Government to suppress the demonstrations and meetings of the Venizelos adherents has awakened deep resentment among the people and there is a growing determination to oust the present Government even if it be necessary to resort to arms.

The Associated Press learns from incontestible authority that several leaders of the revolution of 1909 are actively engaged in planning a similar attempt, although Venizelos deprecates this, and advises instead the practice of patience and use of legal methods. On the other hand, a recent plot against him failed only by a hair's breadth owing to the extraordinary devotion and watchfulness of his followers.

King Deceives Himself.

Frequent talks with King Constantine have convinced the Associated Press correspondent that the monarch honestly is persuaded that a policy of inaction is approved by a majority of the Greek people. The King persists in regarding the recent demonstrations of the growing popularity of Venizelos as mere political manoeuvres.

The weakness of the opponents of the former premier lies in the discontent among the rank and file of the army, who largely attend the meetings of the Venizelos followers and who are openly dissatisfied and declare that a purposeless mobilization is depriving their families of their support. It is stated in well-informed quarters that so many soldiers have returned to their homes without permission that the general staff is unable to treat them as deserters and is obliged to grant them leave which they already have taken. Even the officers of the army, with the exception of those in higher commands, are discontented, notwithstanding that an increase of pay has been granted to them by Royal decree.

Trouble Inevitable.

Neutral diplomatic observers who are in a position to judge declare that the present situation cannot last sixty days longer and that unless an allied offensive against Bulgaria relieves the tension by sweeping the Greeks into war with their ancient enemies, a political cataclysm in Greece is inevitable.

The time for a compromise between the Liberals and the adherents of the ministry has passed. A most rigid, triple censorship of all press telegrams keeps the world generally ignorant of actual conditions in Greece.

RUMOUR OF BURIED LIQUOR.

Savannah, Ga., is Excited Over Alleged Scheme of Dealers to Supply "Blind Tigers" After May 1.

SAVANNAH, Ga., April 29.— This city was thrown into excitement today by a rumour that $100,000 worth of wine and whiskey had been buried near Bonaventure cemetery by liquor dealers, who expect to exhume the treasure after May1 and dispose of it through "blind Tigers."

It was reported that Sheriff Merritt W. Dixon knew where the liquor was buried and was arranging to confiscate it after May 1. The Sheriff, however, said he knew nothing of the report and that he would seize the liquor at once instead of waiting to May 1 if he did have such knowledge. Others, however, believe the rumour and several digging parties have been organized for work to-night near the cemetery.

Trebizond Taken.—"It's a long way to Constantinople from Trebizond — 575 miles—but the fall of the great Turkish seaport will have a demoralizing effect which will be felt in Constantinople and will be followed by Russian advances at other points. Cities which are the Russian objectives are underlined. In the south is shown Kut-el-amara, toward which the Russians are pushing."

"FINDERS KEEPERS" THESE LADS RULE

NEW YORK, April 29.—While automobiling through Forest Park two weeks ago Mrs. Will Rogers, of No. 38 Harvest Street, Forest Hills, L.I., lost jewellery valued at $2,000 and $50 in currency. She discovered her loss upon her return home and notified Park Commissioner John Weier. Notices offering a reward of $100 were posted in the park, but until yesterday none of the jewellery was found.

For the last week it had been remarked in many homes that the children were eating too much candy. Frank Fehr, eleven years old, the son of George Fehr, a chauffeur of Woodlawn, appeared Wednesday afternoon on a new bicycle. Other boys were seen with new tops and large supplies of marbles.

The appearance of so much wealth among the small boy population of Forest Park was investigated. Fehr read one of the notices of the loss of the jewellery, questioned his son, and immediately went to Mrs. Rogers' home. He took his son with him and the latter told the story.

The chamois bag containing the jewellery and money had been found in the park by one of the boys. The money and jewellery were divided among the members of the band, he said.

Mrs. Rogers and her husband began a house to house canvass. Much of the jewellery was found and given back to her.

LARGEST TREE IN THE U.S. GROWING IN CALIFORNIA

Atlanta, Ga., April 28.—In a recent contest in which a prize was offered by the American Genetic Association for the largest shade tree in the United States, the chief contestant from Georgia was a sassafras tree, seven feet around. The prize was won by a valley oak in California, 37 feet 6 in in circumference and 126 feet high.

The largest living elm is at Wethersfield, Conn., 28 feet in circumference, and 100 feet high. It is estimated to be 250 years old. A chestnut in North Carolina is 33 feet 4 in. in diameter, a white birch in Massachusetts, 12 feet 6 inches; a pecan in Louisiana, 19 feet 6 inches, and a catalpa in Arkansas, 16 feet. The tallest tree found was a yellow poplar in North Carolina, which is 198 feet in height.

DESCRIPTION

A seal brown 16 hands high, weighs 1,250 lbs, bred by G. H. Rundle, Piqua, Ohio. This horse is one of the handsomest and most perfect built, and has the best feet and legs of any horse in Canada; he has excellent breeding and disposition. He has not been raced since 1908 his record 2.09¼, is no measure of his speed. Can show 2.05 speed any time. Mr. Rundle refused $4,000 for him as a three-year-old only on account of Mr. Rundle's health he would not be in Canada. His oldest foals are coming 3 years, 4 out of 5 are trotters—no horse gets better foals. Breeders looking for speed will do well to send 100 miles to this great horse. He should be seen to be appreciated.

WEDDING BELLS

McFADDEN—MELVILLE.

A quiet wedding was solemnized in Regina Wednesday, March 29th, 1916, at twelve o'clock noon, when Adah, eldest daughter of Mrs. Alexander H. Melville of Regina, was married to Thomas Clement McFadden, eldest son of Robt. W. McFadden of Milby, Sask., formerly of Peterborough. The couple were unattended and left on the 2.30 p.m. train for their home in Milby, Sask.

PITCHFORD—SMITH.

At St. John's Church on Saturday, April 22nd, at 2:30, the marriage of Miss Ethel Maud Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Smith, Lock street and Mr. Albert E. Pitchford, formerly of Peterborough, but now of Kingston, was solemnized by Rev. Canon Cornish in the presence of about forty guests. The wedding march was played by the organist, Mr. R. J. Devey. The bride, who was given away by her father, was becomingly attired in a suit of navy blue with hat to match. She wore a corsage bouquet. The bridesmaid was Miss Mae Smith, sister of the bride, while the groom was supported by Mr. Arthur Pitchford.

After the ceremony a dainty luncheon was served at the home of the bride's parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Pitchford left at 9 o'clock for Kingston where they will reside.

A large number of beautiful and costly presents were received by the bride, among them being a handsome silver tea service.

REV. MR. SHIELDS COMING TO CITY

Will Preach Anniversary Sermons At Murray St. Baptist Church

An event that is eagerly looked forward to by many people of Peterborough is the visit of Rev. T. T. Shields to Murray Street Baptist Church a week from to-morrow, when he will preach the sermons at the 70th anniversary of the organization of the Church. Mr. Shields is the Pastor of Jarvis Street Baptist Church, Toronto, the largest Baptist Church in Canada, and is said to be perhaps the strongest preacher in the denomination. Because of his international reputation as a preacher, Mr. Shields has been persuaded to fill the pulpit of Spurgeon's Tabernacle, London, the Mecca of all Baptists, for the last three summers, and has already been invited to the same pulpit for this coming summer. English papers have placed him in the forefront of London preachers during his visit, and it will be a great privilege to hear such a man in Peterborough. The officers of Murray Street Church are preparing for large crowds.

Why the Band Was Not There

Explanation Given Thursday Night Was a Reflection on People of Westwood That Was Not Warranted

The explanation given by Rev. Mr. Price for the non-appearance of the 93rd Band at the service in St. John's Church on Thursday night, as reported in last evening's issue by an occasional contributor to The Examiner, was a reflection upon the hospitality of the people of Westwood and district that has sorely vexed Lt.-Col. Johnston, Bandmaster Hughes and the members of the 93rd Band. The explanation made at the service was that the hand was not on hand because they had been at Lakefield the night before and "that they had nothing to eat or drink or nowhere to sleep."

As a matter of fact the band was not at Lakefield, but at Westwood, and the people of that neighbourhood were hospitably personnified as a representative of The Examiner, who accompanied the band can testify. The men were hilleted for supper and sleeping accommodation with residents nearby, and were splendidly entertained. As for food the ladies had provided enough at the entertainment to feed a battalion.

band voluntarily slept in the Town Hall much to the sorrow of the Westwood people a dozen of whom were anxious to carry them off home for the night. The reason the band did not appear at the St. George's service was simply because they had not made arrangements to do so. Bandmaster Hughes had written to say that the band was not available but might with the permission of Lt.-Col. Johnston gave a concert for St. George's church at a later date. The public should understand that the 93rd band is on active service overseas band and that while they have been and are willing to assist local enterprises as much as possible, definite arrangements must be made with the officer commanding the 93rd unit and Bandmaster Hughes. Several times in the past the band has been advertised to appear at entertainments without any arrangements having been made.

80th Deserters Before Magistrate

BELLEVILLE, April 28.—The 80th Battalion soldiers who left their unit without leave on April 24th and were arrested at a farm house down east after thirty-six hours of flight were arraigned before Magistrate Masson this morning.

Pte. Emery Lander, 38 years, admitted his absence. His officer, Captain Hudgins of "D" Co. said Lander had been the cause of half the trouble in the Picton Company, being absent almost every two weeks. Lander admitted this, and replied to questions of Magistrate Masson that he was in the 21st aBttalion for six weeks but was discharged. He had nothing to say why the penalty should not be imposed. Accordingly the court committed him to the Ontario Reformatory for two years less one day, the maximum penalty.

Pte. R. M. Snider, aged 22 years, a Prince Edward boy also admitted being absent without leave. His captain said he was insolent to N.C.O's. Snider said he was in the 21st for three days, but had not been sworn in or did not have the clothes. He claimed that Emery Lander persuaded him to leave without a pass.

Magistrate Masson said he was apparently not as bad an offender as Lander and sentenced Snider to one year.

Creatore's Famous Band in The Armories, Friday, May 19th

The press and public are unanimous in acknowledging that there is no better concert band in America than the Creatore organization, and the world has not produced another leader of Creatore's ability. He is a musical artist of the very highest order, with more brilliant ideas of interpretation and more startling results in effect than the American public has ever before had an opportunity to contemplate. Elaborate comments have been made regarding the soulful feeling and artistic temperament so strongly shown in the music that responds to Creatore's baton. He is unique and a revelation in his line so that new beauties, novel ideas and a variety of charms are shown in his successful leadership. The pre-eminent and distinguishing feature of a Creatore concert is its enjoyable quality. This splendid organization will appear here on Friday, May 19th, at the Armouries.

Humanity Ass'n of Germany Says Hun is Infamous

How some Germans regard their countryman, is shown in extracts quoted by the Presbyterian witness from a manifesto issued by the German Humanity League. The extracts follow:

"Our homes are still being desolated in campaign waged for more than 500 days not in lawful defence of German territory, but to satisfy the insatiable and savage greed of Prussian conspirators. The moral forces of the nation are stifled b ythe violence of the Administration, trampling under foot the helpless mass of humanity crushed by the double burden of grief and want. We have examined through trusted sources the economic condition of every state and province. From one and all comes the cry, 'Deliver us from this hell of suffering.'

"Consider for a moment the position of the German Empire in July 1914. We then enjoyed civil rights and liberty as traders. I nevery market of the world we were welcomed, free to develop in friendly rivalry with other states the arts, the commerce, the maritime resources of our land. All our legitimate trading interests were safeguarded, defined and protected by treaties and conventions. We were honoured and respected throughout the world.

"To-day the German name is the scorn of civilisation; the German flag has become the badge of infamy. Chivalry is no longer on our ranks. It has been buried in the trenches in Flanders and in the village grave plot of Brabant. For our crimes we are loathed by all honest men. To hide them is impossible. We stand naked and exposed.

"We who love our land with a passionate devotion and strive to reach the dawn of a new era which shall restore her character and win back for her children the honor we have forfeited by barbarous cruelties, and insatiable lust have written the above with heavy hearts.

"Napoleon failed. The Kaiser must fail, and there can be no peace until he has been deposed from the throne he has fouled and his fellow conspirators have met their fate at the hands of an executioner."

First Straw Hat On The Street To-day

The first straw hat blossomed into view to-day. Of course it was a last year's variety and looked like last August. It was worn by an elderly man. Had he been younger his bravery or temerity would suggest him as a likely recruit, for the most of the remaining younger set respond to the discipline of fashion as religiously as the poiret dictates. Hence the youth disregards what "the others are doing" may be credited with a certain amount of moral courage. But getting back to the open season for straws, the hatters may now put in their window displays, especially for the young munition makers who at $4.00 a day, will not only want the early felt, but a couple of straws.

History of The Victoria Cross

Some Early Awards of the Famous Decoration—Naval Man the First Recipient.

Who would suspect that our unique decoration, "For Valor"—a few pennyworth of bronze as to intrinsic worth—has a saleroom value of £50 or more, when one comes into the market? asks a London weekly. Where and how is the famous Cross made —the sovereign symbol of the superman, singling him out from the rest in sheer self-sacrifice, and braving of imminent death in truly terrifying surroundings?

Well, the most glorious and democratic of badges is made in New Bond street — of all aristocratic places — and not at the Royal Mint at all, as is popularly supposed. There are a few ancient and historic jewellers in this quarter of London, who for centuries have specialised in the making of orders and chivalric regalia of all sorts. Crown goldsmiths like Garrard's, who supply the gorgeous Star of the Garter once in a blue moon.

Messrs. Hancocks & Co. make the Victoria Cross to War Office orders, and have hitherto been supplied with scraps of bronze from Russian guns. But this year Russian metal is withheld, and archaic Chinese pieces are drawn upon for the making of this famous decoration. Strange as it may seem, the sovereign pitch of human courage was once without its regular badge. The Cross bears Queen Victoria's name, and owes its origin to that high-spirited lady, who bestrode her own charger, decked in martial scarlet and gold, for the inaugural ceremony on the Horse Guards Parade. This was in 1857.

The First Cross.

Prior to that year, signal acts of heroism either went unrecorded, or else got a crude medal, of which examples are now extremely rare, and highly prized by the numismatist. The Crimean War drew to a close with many a record of stoic endurance. "General Winter" was the worst foe our men faced in that dreary campaign. And then it was that Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort decided on the Cross as the highest possible tribute to naval or military heroes "who should perform, in the presence of the enemy, a supreme act of valor, or devotion to their country."

The very first recipient was a naval man — young C. D. Lucas, who rose to an Admiral. He was on board the Hecla in the Baltic when a live shell crashed on board amid a group of terrified tars. Without a moment's hesitation, Lucas dashed upon the terrible thing and hurled it overboard.

Perhaps 650 V.C.'s have been awarded to men of all ranks and origins. Some families have more than one. Thus the famous Goughs (distinguished also in this war) have as many as three. Admiral Sir George Sartorious won the V. C., so did both his sons, Generals Reginald and Eustace Sartorious.

One "education" is not only the worst in the world, but the most expensive, and what we need is not "stuffing" children with dates, but teaching them their duties! The school master should be scoutmaster also.—Mr. Harold Soames.

OVER 700 REBELS TAKEN PRISONERS IN DUBLIN RIOTS

Victory the Lone Aim The British Secretary Tells Allied Conference

Defeat of Enemies the Only Objective Now, Mr. Law Says of Economic Parley---Urges Delegates to Keep Views in Line.

PARIS, May 1.—"There is only one objective at the present moment to which we must concentrate all our energies and our wills—to end the war victoriously," said Mr. A. Bonar Law, British Secretary for the Colonies, in discussing the economic conference of the Allies here with a representative of Le Journal.

"Consequently it is our duty to avoid as much as possible in these hours of trial any discussion which might give birth to controversies, to the resumption of struggles between holders of different economic views. The fact that all the Allies, whose economic theories are necessarily most divergent, will be represented at the conference greatly increases the difficulty of arriving at an immediate solution of the questions at stake."

The interviewer asked if it would not be possible for the Allies to sign a pact banning German imports until such a time arrived when the problem could be examined under more favourable circumstances, to which the Secretary only replied by an enigmatic smile.

The present conference is one of three among the Allies regarding which there appears to be much misapprehension. The first one, held early in April, dealt with united military measures. The second, deals with many commercial and economic questions and is called interparliamentary, although the allied Parliaments are not directly responcible. The third will be held later with important Cabinet members attending, including Mr. David Lloyd George, the British Minister of Munitions, and Mr. Walter Runciman, President of the Board of Trade, to consider economics, particularly the tariff.

Total Number of Dead And Wounded In Dublin Riots Is Placed at Two Hundred

LONDON, England, May 1.—A large force of Sinn Feiners at Enniscorthy, eighty miles south of Dublin, has surrendered to the Government forces, after a thirty-six hour truce, according to despatches received here to-day.

More than 1,200 rebel prisoners have now been taken in Dublin and other centres of rebellion. The latest estimates place the total number of dead and wounded in the seven days' fighting at about 200, and the property loss at more than ten million dollars.

No intimation has come from official sources as to the punishment to be meted out to the rebels now in the hands of British troops, including Countess Markiecicz, the sister of an Irish Baron.

One report brought here early to-day said that the Countess had been wounded while encouraging the Sinn Feiners from behind a barricade.

LOYAL TO THE CORE.

LONDON, Ontario, May 1.—The executive of the London Irish Benevolent Society Saturday instructed President Ranahan to cable King George that the whole organization is solidly behind the British Empire and loyal to the core. To-day a cable of thanks was received from the King.

Number of Women And Children Are Burned To Death

In Fires Started by Rebels on Saturday and Which Are Still Raging

DUBLIN, May 1.—A number of women and children were burned to death in fires started by rebels on Saturday. The post office was partly destroyed. The music hall and several wharves were also destroyed as well as part of the business district. The fires are still raging.

WINNIPEG, May 1.—Several Germans have escaped from an internment camp in Lethbridge by tunnelling through a large hill.

NEW YORY, May 1.—In the United States to-day five hundred thousand workers are due to strike and seven hundred thousand to receive higher pay.

WED FRENCH GIRLS.

Hundreds of British Soldiers Fall in Love at Front in France.

On the British front France, April 27.—Army officers along this front say that many hundreds of British soldiers have married French girls since the expeditionary force landed in France, and hundreds of others have become engaged, a fact not generally known even in London. Some of the Tommies plan to take their wives back to England, but the majority have declared their intention of settling in France when the war is over.

The love affairs of Tommy cause his superiors considerable amusement, for he knows no French, excepting the little that he has picked up since he came to France, and his sweetheart knows no English, save what he taught her.

CONGRESS GETS 50,000 PROTESTS AGAINST WAR

Washington, April 28. The telegraph offices were overwhelmed to-day with a flood of protests against war, directed to Senators and Representatives. It is estimated that more than 50,000 telegrams have come in thus far. Some recipients were forced to employ extra forces of clerks.

Senator Husting announced to-day that he would discuss the propaganda in the Senate to-morrow, and was considering proposing an investigation either by Congress or by the Department of Justice.

All Leaders of the Irish Insurrection Have Now Surrendered Unconditionally

LONDON, May 1.—German gas attacks against the British opposite Hulluch blew back on the enemy causing heavy casualties.

LONDON, May 1.—The force under Gen. Townshend consisted of 2,970 British troops and some six thousand Indian troops.

TELLS HOW SERBIA IS BEING REBUILT

Father Byelik, an Apostolic Vicar, Describes Reconstruction Work of Central Powers.

BERLIN, Friday (via wireless to Sayville).—A report on the work of reconstruction done by the Central Powers in Serbia since its occupation by them is given by Father Byelik, an Apostolic vicar, whose field includes Serbia, to the Overseas News Agency, as follows:

"The retreating Serbian army has forced the civilian population to follow the troops. The result was that the roads were lined with men, women and children dying from hunger, cold and exposure. Those who remained in their homes also were on the verge of starvation, while everywhere epidemics like cholera, spotted typhus, scurvy and dysentry threatened the population.

"The military authorities, therefore, established soup kitchens, rebuilt school houses and founded workshops. A majorty of the children had not been in school since the Balkan War. Ten thousand orphaned children were lodged in an especially established asylum. The instruction everywhere is free and text books are distributed free of charge. The authorities feel certain they will thus be able to diminish the appalling total of illiterates among the Serbian population. A soup kitchen for the distribution of meals free of charge is conected with every school."

IS LOST RIVER FOUND?

Indiana Driers Strike Powerfu Underground Stream.

Drillers engaged in sinking wells for the new waterworks system at Orleans, Ind., struck a powerful stream of water at a depth of 70 feet.

It is believed the men drilled into a branch of the historic Lost River or an underground cavern. The roar of the flowing water can be plainly heard for some distance, and despite the fact that it is only a hundred feet from another well, which is 115 feet deep and throughg solid rock for more than 90 feet, the water appears to be of the same quality and flavour as in the deep well. The phenomenon is creating much excitement.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Howson Honoured by Their Neighbours

A number of people of Mather's Corners, Otonabee, and vicinity, gathered unexpectedly at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Howson on the evening of the fourteenth of April. An enjoyable time was spent, and during the evening the following address was read:

Mr. and Mrs. Howson.

Dear friends,—It is with feelings of deepest regret, that we, your neighbours, and friends, have assembled here to-night, on this the 14th day of April, 1916, to bid you farewell before your departure from among us.

Your many friends of the vicinity desire to show this appreciation of your presence and the valuable services which you have rendered to us individually, and also to the community in general.

Your interest in the welfare of others has been unquestioned. Your cheerful dispositions have been an inspiration to us all during the many years you have been our neighbours.

We cannot allow you to depart without expressing our appreciation to you in some way. We, therefore, would ask you, Mr and Mrs. Howson, to accept these chairs as a slight token of the esteem with which you are held.

We regret your removal from our midst, realizing as we do the difficulty of filling your places, but you go with our best wishes for prosperity in every way. We trust your memories of Otonabee, and your many friends here, may ever be pleasant to you.

Signed on behalf of your neighbours.

Mr. Howson then responded briefly in appreciation of the kindness shown by the neighbours to him and Mrs. Howson.

Britain Makes Concession in Purchase of Wagner Vessels.

London, May 1.—The British Government has given its consent to the purchase by an American company of the Wagner steamships. The consent is given on condition that the American buyers will lease the vessels for a time to an English company.

The "Wagner steamships" probably are those of the American Transatlantic Company. Richard G. Wagner is president of the company. These ships were placed on the English blacklist on account of possible German control after they had been admitted to American registry in July, 1915.

EASTER FINDS MEAT SCARCE IN BERLIN.

London, April 28.—The Vorwaerts, of Berlin, says the most significant development of the Easter holidays for the people of Berlin was the steadily growing scarcity of meat.

Housewives rushed from shop to shop to obtain at least a piece of meat. Those who were able to buy pork, which is sold by the municipality at a cheap price went home happy but there was dissatisfaction on the part of those who were compelled to buy the meat which sells for three marks a pound.

PERSONALS.

Well-known Women.

Chatham, Ont.—"I was sick for about four years. Got very weak, could not eat to amount to anything. I got very thin and had no strength at all. I was very much discouraged at times—thought I was never going to get better. I could not walk a block without feeling all tired-out. I took different medicines but did not get the help I needed. A friend of mine advised me to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I began to take it with the 'Pleasant Pellets' and by the time I had taken two bottles I was well on the road to recovery, and in six months I was entirely well. My appetite came back and I gained in flesh. Now I am as strong and healthy as any one could wish to be. I owe it all to Dr. Pierce's medicines and I am glad of the opportunity to give testimony in their favor; they have done wonders for me."—Miss THELMA PARKER, 141 E. King St.

Chatham, Ont.—"I have taken Dr. Pierce's medicine with good results. I was weak and run down, lost my appetite and got very thin. I took 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Pleasant Pellets' and these two medicines built me up in a very short space of time so that I felt as well as ever. I found them to be all that is recommended of them; they are good."—Mrs. WM. WEEKS, Cor. Taylor & Grand Ave., E., Chatham, Ont.

OUR SERIAL STORY

"THE HARBOUR OF DOUBT"

BY FRANK WILLIAMS

Instinctively and naturally Code Schofield ran, just as he had run from his father's house since he was ten years old. His long easy stride carried him quickly over the ground and he passed two or three of those ahead with lanterns. They shouted at him.

"Hey, what is the trouble?" panted one. "Know anything about it?"

"No, but it might be the wharfs," he replied, without stopping. He veered out to the edge of the road so as to avoid any more queries. He looked with suspicion now on all these men.

Who of them, he wondered, was not in his heart, convicting him of those things Elsa Mallaby had mentioned? His straightforward nature revolted against the hypocrisy in men that bade him treat him as they had done all his life, and yet think of him only as a criminal.

Suddenly the dull red that had glowed dimly against the sky burst into rosy bloom. A great tongue of fire leaped up and licked the heavens, while floating down the brisk breeze came the distant mingling of men's shouts. As he passed a white wooden gate he heard a woman on the porch crying and a child's voice in impatient question.

Then for the first time he lost sight of his own distress and thought of the misery of the whole people. It was August and the Indians would soon be coming from the mainland to spear porpoises.

The dulce pickers on the back of the island reported a good yield from the rocks at low tide but outside of these few there was wretchedness from Anthony's Nose to Southern Cross.

The fish had failed.

A hundred years and more had the Grande Mignon fishermen gone out with net and headline and trawl; and for that length of time the millions in the sea had fed, clothed and housed the thousand on the island. When prices had been good there were even luxuries, and history tells of men who in one haul from a weir have made their twenty-five thousand dollars in an hour.

This was all gone now. The fish had failed.

Day after day since early spring, the men had put to sea in their sloops and motor-dories, trawling and handlining from twenty miles out in the Atlantic to four and a half fathoms off Dutch Edge. The result was the same. The fish were poor and few. Even at Bulkhead Rip, where the sixty-pounders played among the racing tides, there was scarcely a bite.

A fisherman lives on luck, so for a month there was no remark upon the suddenly changed condition. But after that as the days passed and not a full dory raced up to Bill Boughton's fish stand muttered whispers and old tales went up and down the island.

It was recalled that the fish left a certain Norwegian coast once for a period of fifty years, and that the whole occupation of the people of that coast was changed. Was that to be the fate of Grande Mignon? If so, what could they do? Extensive farming on the rocky island was impossible and not one ship had ever been built there for the trade. Where would things end?

So it had gone until now in the middle of August, the people of Freekirk Head, Seal Cove, and Great Harbor, the main villages along the front or Atlantic side of the island, were face to face with the question of actual life or death.

So far the season's catch was barely up to that of a good month in normal times; credit was low, and salting and drying were almost useless, for the people ate most of their own catch. Things were at a standstill.

And now the fire on top of all!

Captain Code Schofield though of all these things as he ran along the King's Road toward the fire. Now, he was almost upon it and could see that the fishstand and wharf of the two wealthiest men in the village were burning furiously. The roar of the flames came to him.

A hundred yards from the water stood Bill Boughton's general store, and next it, in a row, dwellings; typical white fishermen's cottages with green blinds and a flower filled dory in the front yard.

The King's Road divided at Bill Boughton's store, the branch leading down to the wharfs, while the main road went on to Swallowtail Light. Schofield plunged down the branch into the full glare of the fire, where the crowd of men had already gathered.

As good luck would have it there was not a vessel tied up at the stand, the whole fleet being made fast to its moorings in the bay. Code's first duty when he started running had been to make sure that his Laughing Lass was riding safely at her anchorage.

The burning wharfs faced south. The brisk breeze was southeast and bore a promise of possible rain. The steamer Grande Mignon, after giving the first warning had steamed away from her perilous dockage to a point half a mile nearer the entrance to the bay, and now lay there shrieking until the frowning cliffs and abrupt hills echoed with the hideous noise.

"How'd it happen?" asked Schofield of the first man he met.

"Dunno exactly. Cal'late some tanks in the oil room caught first. Cant' do much with them wharfs, I guess."

"Who's in charge of things here?"

"The squire."

Schofield hurried away in search of Squire Hardy, the head man of the village and local justice of the peace. He found him working like a Trojan, his white whiskers ruffled into a circle about his face.

"Lend us a hand here, Code," yelled the squire, who with three other men was attempting to get a great circular horse trough under a huge pump with a handle long enough for three men to lay hold of. Schofield fell to with a will and helped move the trough into place. The squire set the three men to the task of filling it and then went to Code.

"Any chance to save those wharfs, d'ye think?"

"No, squire. Better leave them and the fish houses and work on Boughton's store and the cottages. They're right in the path of the wind. It will be tough on Nailor and Thomas to lose their stand and houses, but you know what will happen if the fire gets into the dwellings."

"I thought so all along—curse me, if I didn't yelled the judge, and then turning toward a crowd of men who looking apprehensively here and there he shouted:

"All hands with the buckets now, lively!"

Suddenly the basement doors of Boughton's store were thrown open and a huge, black bearded man with a great voice, appeared there.

"Buckets this way!" he bellowed in a tone that rose clearly above the roar and crackle of the fire. As the men reached him he handed out the implements from great stacks at his feet: rubber buckets, wooden buckets, tin and iron buckets, new, old, rusty and galvanized. It was Pete Ellinwood, the fire marshal of the village and the custodian of the apparatus.

Because in the hundred or more years of its existence there has never been water pressure in Grande Mignon, the fighting of a fire with primitive means has become an exact and beautiful science.

A few bold spirits had disputed the wisdom of Squire Hardy's orders to let the wharf and fish house burn, and had attempted to give them a dousing. In less than five minutes they had retreated, singed and hairless, due to a sudden explosion of a drum of oil.

"Play on Bill Boughton's store," came the order.

Already an iron ladder reached to the eaves of the building. Two men galloped up its length, dragging behind them another ladder with a pair of huge hooks at the end.

Clinging like monkeys, they worked this up over their heads and up the shingles until the hooks caught squarely across the ridge-pole of the house. Then, on hands and feet, they trotted up this and sat astride the ridge-pole. One of these was Code Schofield.

Other men now swarmed up the ladders, until there was one on every rung from the ground to the top of the house.

Below, a line of men extended from the foot of the ladder to the great circular horse-trough. Another line extended from the opposite side of the store also to the horse-trough where three men worked the great pump.

Back twenty yards along the King's Road, a white-faced row of women and children stood, ready to rush home and move the furniture into the fields.

Code, looking down, made out his mother and returned her friendly wave. Their house was across the road not a hundred feet away.

With a muffled roar another drum on the pier exploded. A great wave of molten fire shot out in the breeze and the shingles on Bill Boughton's store, parched with the drought of a month burst into quick flame.

The squire ran back to the water-trough.

"Dip!" he yelled. Big Pete Ellinwood, with the piles of buckets beside him, seized one and twitched it full.

"Pass!" screamed the squire as it came up dripping. Ellinood's great arm swung forward to meet the arm of the man a yard away. The bucket changed hands and went forward with out losing a drop.

Up it went swiftly from one to another, to the eaves, to the two men at the top.

Now the fire sent branches out from the burning wharf along the low frames where some of the season's miserable catch was drying in the pen air after salting. The fish curled and blackened in the fierce heat.

Only two men were not in the bucket brigade. They were Nailor and Thomas, who stood watching the destruction of their whole property. They knew the squire had done well in saving the village rather than their own buildings. It was the tacit understanding in Freekirk Head that a few should lose rather than the many.

Code Schofield, from his perch on the Boughton roof-tree, looked down again to where he had last seen his mother. Once more he distinguished the tall figure with its white face looking anxiously up at him, and he waved his hand reassuringly. Then his eye was caught by two other figures that lurked in the first shadow farther up the King's Road. A moment later he made sure of their identity.

Theye were Nellie Tanner and Nat Burns.

For years there had been a dislike between the Burnses and the Schofields. Old Jasper Schofield, Code's father and Michael Burns had become enemies over the same girl a quarter of a century before, and the breach had never been healed. Old Captain Jasper had won, but he had never forgotten, and Michael had never forgiven.

Quite unconsciously the feud had been passed on to the children of both (for Michael had married within a few years), and from school-days Code and Nat had been the leaders of rival gangs.

When they became young men they matched their season's catches and raced their father's schooners. They were the two natural leaders of the Freekirk Head young bloods, but they were never on the same side of an argument.

Schofield wondered why Nat Burns was not at the fire, as usual attempting to make himself leader of the battle without doing much of the work, and now the reason was apparent. He preferred to pursue his courting under the eyes of the village rather than to obey the unwritten law of service. And he was with Nellie Tanner!

Unlike most youths, there had never been a time in Code's life when he had passed the favor of his affections around. Since the time they were both five-Nellie Tanner had supplied in full all the feminine requirements he had ever desired. And she did at this moment. But Nat Burns had seen a great deal of her in the last three months, he rememberd, taking advantage of Code's desparate search for fish.

Once in this strain his thoughts bore him on and on. Memories, speculations, and desires crowded his mind, and he forgot that beneath him the roof of Boughton's store was burning more and more briskly.

Suddenly the man beside him on the ridge-pole shook his arm.

"Say Code!" he cried "What's that burnin' over these? I didn't know the fire had gone across the street."

Schofield looked up quickly and followed the direction of the other's arm that pointed through the trees to the opposite side of King's Road and a little to westward.

"Good Lord!" he cried excitedly; "it's my own place, and my mother is all alone down there. Quick! Send somebdy up here! I'm going.

CHAPTER III
THE TEST.

The man behind him climbed to the ridgepole and Code began the descent, necessarily slow and careful because the ladders were loaded with men passing buckets. When he reached the ground he started for home on the run.

Opposite Boughton's general store was another shop that made a specialty of fishermen's "oilers," boots and overalls. Two houses to the westward of that was the old Schofield place, a low, white house surrounded by a rickety fence and covered with ivy.

Once he reached the middle of the road Code saw that he had been mistaken in the location of the fire, for his mother's place was intact. The flame was coming, however, from the house next but one—Bijonah Tanner's place.

A crowd was gathering in the yard that was overgrown with dusty wiregrass, and the squire was pushing his way through to take charge. Code knew that only two days before Captain Bijonah and his wife had sailed in the Rosan to St. John's for lumber, leaving Nellie alone in charge of the three small Tanners. He wondered where they all were now.

Washington Park, Ill.—"I am the mother of four children and have suffered with female trouble, backache, nervous spells and the blues. My children's loud talking and romping would make me so nervous I could just tear everything to pieces and I would ache all over and feel so sick that I would not want anyone to talk to me at times. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills restored me to health and I want to thank you for the good they have done me. I have had quite a bit of trouble and worry but it does not affect my youthful looks. My friends say 'Why do you look so young and well?' I owe it all to the Lydia E. Pinkham remedies."—Mrs. ROBT. STOPIEL, Moore Avenue, Washington Park, Illinois.

We wish every woman who suffers from female troubles, nervousness, backache or the blues could see the letters written by women made well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's Old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

HAD SALT RHEUM ON HANDS.

Could Not Do Her Work.

Eczema or salt rheum is one of the most common of all skin diseases. It may centre itself on any part of the body, but there are certain places where it most usually begins, such as the bends of the elbows, the backs of the knees, the groove behind the ears, the scalp, on the palms of the hands, between the fingers, or on the soles of the feet.

It is, as a rule, not dangerous, but is very irritating and annoying to the sufferer on account of the terrible itching and burning sensation it causes.

It is impossible to eradicate this trouble from the system by external applications, as it is caused by the blood being in an impure state. What you need is a good blood cleansing medicine such as Burdock Blood Bitters. A medicine that will drive out all the foulness from the blood and make it pure and rich.

Mrs. Adelard Theriault, Theriault, N.B., writes: "Some time ago I was troubled with salt rheum on my hands, and it was so bad I could not do my work. I tried several medicines, but they all failed to help me. One day a friend told me to try Burdock Blood Bitters, so I got a bottle, and before I had taken it my hands were better. I am not afraid to recommend B.B.B. to anyone."

B.B.B. has been on the market for the past forty years, and is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Interesting Facts about CRISCO

Crisco is the best, the cream of vegetable oil.

Crisco is all vegetable. It remains of ideal consistency and does not separate.

Crisco keeps sweet and pure indefinitely because the parts of the oil which turn rancid have been eliminated.

Crisco is 100 per cent pure fat; butter contains approximately one-fifth water, salt and curd.

Crisco makes fried foods more digestible, because Crisco itself is perfectly digestible.

Try Crisco today. Grocers sell Crisco in ever increasing quantities. It costs less than half as much as butter.

ENGLAND NOT WILLING.

There will be no inter-league match in the old country this season. The Scottish League appealed to the Football League for a game to be played on some Saturday in April in Glasgow, for the benefit of the war charities.

"Football has been kept alive in England by players who have been hard at work each week, and they have played without any fee or reward, and many of them have been out of pocket in order to take part in the game that they love. Why should these men be asked to do more?" asks the Athletic News. "Why should they be taken off their work for two days or two nights to gratify a desire in Scotland to do something for war charities? The president of the league and his colleagues show no disposition to enter upon any such game. The clubs say frankly that it is a difficult matter to get attractive teams week by week.

"The players do not take kindly to any extra calls and we say with some show of reason and knowledge that no such game will be played."

GOSPEL PREACHING TWOFOLD OBJECT

First Relates to Church, Second to the World.

Conversion of the World Not God's Present Purpose—Special Design of Gospel Age the Calling Out and Preparing of the Church Class — Secondary Design the Witness to the World—The True Gospel is the Gospel of the Kingdom—Gospel Message Only for Those Having Hearing Ears—These But Few—Offer Now Made is the "Pearl of Great Price"—How the Church, the Bride, Makes Herself Ready for the Kingdom.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

Boston, April 30—Pastor Russell delivered here to-day a discourse of deep interest. His text was, "This Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." (Matthew 24: 14.) He said in part:

In the words of our text our Lord Jesus Christ makes a statement as to the purpose of the Gospel Message of the present Age. That purpose is quite different from what Christian people in general have thought it to be. Many have supposed that the object to be attained during this Age has been the conversion of the world. But not so, according to the Scriptures. The end mentioned in our text is not the end of the world, but the end of the preaching of the Gospel. After the preaching of the Gospel has accomplished its work, this kind of preaching will no longer be necessary. The work of this Gospel Age, as laid out by the Master, is not the conversion of the world, but the preaching of the Gospel as a witness to all the nations.

There is a distinction between the Gospel of the Kingdom and the Kingdom itself. The Gospel of the Kingdom is the Message concerning the Kingdom, the Glad Tidings of the Kingdom. When this Message shall have accomplished its work of gathering out a special class from amongst the people to constitute the Bride of Christ, then the Kingdom itself will be inaugurated and will begin its work, which will be for the salvation of the world at large. So we make the distinction between the Gospel of the Kingdom and the Kingdom. The Gospel is the announcement beforehand that the Kingdom is coming. When the Kingdom comes, of course the preaching that it is coming will be at an end; for the entire object of this preaching is to prepare for this coming Kingdom.

Why But Few Have Hearing Ears.

The Scriptures inform us that since our Lord's ascension to the right hand of the Majesty on High, He has been waiting until the time shall come for the Heavenly Father to make His enemies His footstool. (Hebrews 10:12,13; Psalm 110:1.) In other words, He is waiting until His glorious Kingdom shall be inaugurated for the blessing of all the families of the earth. Meantime, those who hope to reign with Him have an important work to do in themselves, co-operating with their Lord in the preparation of themselves for their great future exaltation. Additionally, they are to proclaim the Gospel Message, preaching it to every one who has an ear to hear, in order that the full number of the Bride class may be gathered in and fitted for their positions in the Kingdom.

But not many will hear this Message of the Kingdom. The great majority of people are filled with their own ideas. Some are engrossed in money making, in pleasure seeking, in art, in music, etc. As a result, comparatively few have an ear to the Truth of God, the Message of the Kingdom. But upon the few who have the hearing ear, this glorious Message has a marvelous effect; for it transforms their entire lives.

In calling out this class God uses no force, no coercion. It is strictly a voluntary matter. The Gospel Message is only for those who appreciate it; and they will receive a great blessing. As the Master said to His disciples, "Blessed are your eyes, for they see; and your ears, for they hear." (Matthew 13: 16,17.) When our Lord was preaching in Palestine, comparatively few had an ear to hear. The majority were too full of their own ideas and projects. And thus it has been all down the Gospel Age.

However, God is not blaming those who have no ears to hear the Message of the Gospel; and neither should we. We do not smite a blind man, because he does not see. On the contrary we sympathize with him. So we should do with those who have no spiritual sight. There are very many who lack spiritual sight, many who cannot exercise faith in what they cannot see; and according to the Scriptures they are not responsible for their failure. As the Apostle Paul says, "The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not." For this reason they cannot see. (2 Corinthians 4:4.) Later on, under the Messianic Kingdom, these blind eyes will be opened.—Isaiah 35:5-10.

So then, we perceive that this Message of the Kingdom was never designed to reach those now blinded by the Adversary. And this class forms the great majority of mankind. God never purposed that the Kingdom Message should convert the world, but that the Kingdom itself should do this work when it is established in the earth. The Message is designed for only a "little flock." "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom," said the Master. (Luke 12:32.) Only the Royal Family will get the Kingdom. All others will be the subjects of the Kingdom.

The earth is the one rebellious province in God's Universe. There are only a few members of Adam's race who are inclined to listen to the Word of God and to follow its instructions. By nature our minds are all more or less twisted through the Adamic fall, and not one is fit to be a member of God's Royal Family. But there are some who have a disposition of heart to do right, who hunger and thirst after God and righteousness. It is to such that the good Message of the Kingdom appeals. The Gospel attracts those who have an interest in the things of God, but passes by those who lack such interest.

God is seeking for those who, when they learn of His wonderful Plan for human salvation from sin and death, will become so thoroughly engrossed in it that they will practically forget everything else. Thenceforth His Plan will be the only thing of special value to them. Some of us have found it even so in our own cases. All other things are but secondary—eating, drinking, the kind of clothing we wear, whether we are poor or rich, etc. We desire merely to be neat in person and to have sufficient food to give us the strength required for what our Lord has given us to do.

With us the main object in life is the attainment of the great Heavenly treasure to which the Gospel called our attention. We are like the merchantman who was seeking goodly pearls, and who, when he had found one pearl of great price, sold all that he had and bought that pearl. (Matthew 13: 45, 46.) The Kingdom of Heaven, the Messianic Kingdom, with its glory and honor and with its privileges in connection with the world's uplift to human perfection, constitutes the great prize peculiar to this Gospel Age. Never before this Age was this prize possible of attainment; and the opportunity to attain it will end with this Age.

Everybody is seeking something in life. The vast majority have before their minds some object or aim, to the attainment of which they expend their energies. Some are seeking the pearl of large financial influence in their community. Others seek the pearl of great wealth, the finest house in town, etc. Still others bend every effort to become famous musicians or great singers. A young woman may have before her mind the pearl of a cosy home, with a kind husband and little children. So there are pearls of many kinds and sizes. Whoever has no worthy object in life, no high ideal before his mind, is indeed a pitiable creature.

But the Pearl of great price presented to us in the Scriptures far eclipses all other pearls in value. Whoever possesses this Pearl will be in harmony with God. The majority of mankind have no God, although everybody really needs Him; for we were created so. The highest organs in the human head show that worship of our Creator is a natural requirement of man's being. But the race is so fallen from its original perfection, and our God has been so grossly misrepresented to us, that few realize their need. What we were told concerning Him was so terrible that we did not care to know anything more about Him. Contrary to our nature, we turned aside because of these misrepresentations of His character. Nevertheless, the first step is to come into harmony with God, to become His child, and to learn that "like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that reverence Him."—Psalm 103: 13.

How to Secure This Great Pearl.

As we examine this Pearl more closely, we see a marvelous beauty that we had not noticed before. We see that God has made a wonderful offer to those who will renounce the world and consecrate themselves fully to Him, to follow in the footsteps of their Redeemer, faithful even unto death. For these the Heavenly Father has in reservation great glory, high honor, and a change of nature from human to Divine. (2 Peter 1:4.) These constitute the Church of Christ, and the Church will be joint-heir with Christ Jesus in His Kingdom, through which God has purposed to bless the world.

Whoever gets the Pearl will have the privilege of being associated with our Lord Jesus in the work of helping the world up out of ignorance, superstition, and sin. For a thousand years this wonderful privilege will be afforded to Christ and His Church—the privilege of raising to human perfection and everlasting life all of the poor, fallen, race of Adam who will accept the offer. Who would not rejoice at the prospect of uplifting the world from sin and death conditions to perfection and life! What would not we give thus to bless and uplift all our relatives and friends who are not now interested in the Kingdom. How glad we are that all mankind will have the privilege of hearing and knowing about God.

But this is not all. After Christ and the Church shall have brought the poor world back to perfection, righteousness, and life, the Church will be forever associated with her Lord, to show forth the riches of Jehovah's grace throughout the ages of eternity. (Ephesians 2:4-7.) Surely this is "a pearl of great price."

Are we asked what we must give to secure this pearl? In the parable, the merchantman sold all that he possessed to obtain that pearl; and so must we. It makes no difference whether we have much or little, we must give our all. We must yield ourselves wholly and unreservedly to God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. In one sense the pearl is very cheap—practically a gift; for the most that any of us may possess is as nothing in comparison. Yet in the sense that in order to purchase it we must submit ourselves fully to the Lord, henceforth to have no will of our own in anything, to suffer reproach, scorn, persecution, loss of friends, tribulations—all necessary to our preparation for future service—the cost is considerable. But whoever has once gotten a glimpse of the Pearl will gladly pay the price.

Conditions for Obtaining the Pearl.

Whoever accepts this wonderful offer which God has made must enter into a Covenant of Sacrifice with Jehovah. (Psalm 50:5.) Day by day he must thereafter carry out his Covenant. He must study the course followed by our Lord Jesus Christ, who is our great Exemplar; then he must walk in the Saviour's steps. He must deny himself—put himself fully into the hands of our Lord—and enter the School of Christ, learning daily lessons of faith and obedience.

After we have consecrated ourselves fully to the Lord, all that we have is His; and we are only His stewards, who must render to Him an account for our use of time, influence, means, strength, and all. We have very little to render to the Lord at best. When the time necessary for eating, sleeping, earning a livelihood, etc., is deducted, we have not much left for active service for God. Therefore we are, so far as we are able, to redeem the time from earthly affairs, spending as little as possible commensurate with duty and necessity in housework, business, etc. Some of the earthly treasures can be relinquished in the interest of the Heavenly treasures, that more time may be given to the study of God's Word, in helping the brethren along the good way, and in proclaiming the Message of grace to others, that they may be blessed.

The number who will obtain this Pearl is limited. During the entire Gospel Age only 144,000 are to be selected to form the glorified Church class. This number, we believe, is very nearly complete. Therefore if we wish to be winners of the prize we must be up and doing. The time is short; and we must be about our Father's business. It is the Father's business that we cultivate the fruits of the Holy Spirit—putting away malice, hatred, strife, and putting on meekness, gentleness, patience, brotherly-kindness, love. This is the Father's business; and by so doing we are getting ready to carry on His business by and by. He wishes us to attend to our own education now, and to do all that we can to help others to get their education also. This is not the time to attend to the interests of the world.

This does not mean that we shall do nothing for the world, however; for we are to do good unto all as we have opportunity, especially to the Household of Faith. Seek first the Kingdom of God for yourself; and afterward look after the brethren and those needing your assistance. Be kind and considerate toward all. Watch for opportunities to give a pleasant word or a smile—to your grocer, your iceman, your milkman, your butcher, etc. Do kindly by them. They will see that you are different from others, and that you are not trying to pick a flaw in everything that they have. This does not mean that you are to be willing to be taken advantage of, but that you are showing a kindly spirit towards them. By so doing, you may pave the way for speaking the Gospel Message to them afterwards.

With the majority, the sole object in life seems to be something to eat or to drink, a little pleasure, some attractive apparel, etc. Comparatively few know for what they are living or why they are in the world. To live in this way is to live like an animal. Rather than to have our mind in such a state we would prefer to be blotted out of existence. But how glorious it is to lift our thoughts and minds to things above, to live for God and for the eternal future. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the glories which God has prepared for them that love Him above all else.

Gospel Witnessing Almost Completed

The Gospel of the Kingdom has been preached in all the world as a witness unto all nations. The end of the present Dispensation is at hand. The shaking process, which is to remove everything not in full harmony with the incoming Messianic Kingdom, is progressing. Soon the Bride of Christ will be complete beyond the veil. Let us, then, be faithful unto death. Let us prove our absolute loyalty to God.

Even in the midst of the present world-wide tumult the Lord's people have a peace and a joy that no man can take away. Day by day we are learning patience, cheerful endurance, submission to the will of the Lord. All this is shown in the faces of the people of God. They have a peace, a joy, a restfulness of countenance which the majority do not have, and which distinguishes them from all others. Such faces preach powerful sermons on the efficacy of the grace of God, especially in such times as these in which we live.

The assurance that we are the children of God is a better insurance policy than that which any insurance company in all the world can possibly give us. It assures us that all things are working together for good to them who love God and who are trying day by day to make their calling and election sure. Of course we must suffer persecution. If we escape the persecution, we shall miss the crown. But with the persecutions, misunderstandings, disappointments, trials, and sufferings of life, we have the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, ruling in our hearts. The time of our deliverance is not far away. Let us, then, continue to let our light shine; and soon, we trust, we shall gain the Pearl of Great Price—in the Kingdom.

A PAIN IN THE BACK

COMES FROM THE KIDNEYS.

When a pain asserts itself in the back you may rest assured that it comes from some derangement of the kidneys, for were there not something wrong with the kidneys the back would be strong and well, and would be without a pain or an ache.

RUSSIANS WHO ESCAPED

Worn Were Prisoners of Hune Who Reached France

A French officer-correspondent narrates the following: One night, as I was writing a telegram in the Hotel Le Coq Hardi with several other correspondents, our guide, Count de Ganay, came up to us and said that he wanted to show us three new prisoners and with a motion of his hand he invited three men to sit down at our table. They did so in a timid, furtive manner as if they were afraid of sitting on the chairs! All three were peasants, from different parts of Russia, who had met each other for the first time in a German war prisoners' camp after a battle near the Mazurian swamps.

The youngest of them, Dimitri, was their spokesman and as he knew a little German and I remembered some Russian I succeeded in interpreting the tale he told. They nearly died with homesickness in their prison camp, he said. The food was scarce and inedible, even to these poor Russian peasants. One night they succeeded in making their escape. They were seven then, but four were shot down. For six weeks they tramped through Germany, walking only during the night and living on turnips and nuts they found in the woods, until at last they reached the German trenches. They knew that if they kept on going west they would reach friends. It was too far to go back to Russia.

The German lines from Belfort to Dunkirk were considered impenetrable, but these men did the impossible thing. They got past sentries and barbed wire, trenches and patrols and at last only the dangerous strip of "no man's land" separated them from the French, a strip merely fifty yards wide. Here, too, luck favored them. The French observers on the listening posts did not hear them until they were close enough to whisper "Russi, Russi!" and they interrupted a nightly game of cards as they dropped into the trench. The following day they were to be sent to Paris to the Russian military attache Colonel Ignatieff, who would see that they were sent back to fight on the French front.

Never have I seen uniforms so dirty and tattered, never faces so thin and emaciated as these under the unkempt beards. An entire day spent cleaning themselves had not been able to obliterate the traces of months of dirt, rain, snow and starvation. A whole year in ease and luxury would not have been able to give them back their lost youth, and still, none of them was ever twenty-five.

SENTENCED TO DEATH

French Soldier Could Not Understand the Need of Discipline

A French officer, in charge of a court-martial, was induced to talk of his duties as follows: Strangely, it is not the 'bad eggs'—of whom there are, of course, a few in every regiment—who give us this trouble, but rather the better sort of young fellows, who cannot understand the military necessity of so harsh a discipline. I well recall our first court martial of a case of this kind. We were new to the business ourselves, but it was a flagrant breach, and to check its repetition it had to be dealt with according to the code of war. The man was duly tried and sentenced. I went to his lock-up and read the death sentence to him. He listened without seeming to understand what had taken place and that he was condemned to die. That night I instructed an officer to call for a firing squad. Our firing squads are always composed of volunteers—twelve men. Not a man volunteered for the task. We had to commandeer a squad.

"The prisoner was marched out at dawn, stood quietly facing the levelled rifles, and died without faltering. I am sure he never realized the gravity of his offence. But war is war. Now it is different. The men know the value of discipline, know that a breach of discipline will endanger the lives of their comrades, or even the safety of France, and though breaches of this kind still occur they are met in a different spirit. Now if I call for a firing squad fifty men at once volunteer to do the work. Fortunately the occasions are rare.

"Is the family notified that a man has been executed?" the interviewer asked.

"Yes and no," the officer replied. "The French code is peculiar. Notification of death is sent to the family soon after the execution as though the man had died in action. Then three months later the family receives a notice from the local military authorities demanding the payment of the sum of twelve francs fifty-five centimes—the expenses of the execution. But otherwise there is no publicity. The grave is not marked officially, but a record is kept, so that it will not be difficult to locate it later on.

$1,000 Reward Forfeited If Remedy Fails

We hope this notice will reach the eyes of people who are troubled with constipation and bowel trouble. Dr. Hamilton's Pills have been guaranteed to cure any case within three days, and the above reward will be paid for any case resisting this greatest of all remedies.

RUPTURE

SPECIALIST HERE

J. Y. Egan, the Canadian rupture appliance specialist, will visit towns mentioned below. Mr. Egan's latest inventions, the "Curatrus" and the "Curative" forms, retain rupture perfectly and are intended to aid nature to close the opening in the shortest time known without an operation. These new appliances (entirely different from anything else in the world) have received the highest awards wherever exhibited. Testimonials from men, women and parents. Results are accomplished without inconvenience or loss of time. Why continue to experiment with so-called mail order cures when you can obtain better service right here at small cost? Never mind past failures—as there is a reason for such. There are many wrong ways—but only one right way. It costs you nothing to investigate my way. Delays may be dangerous. Now is the time to make yourself physically fit for your season's work. Tear off coupon now.

MAJOR AT NINETEEN

English Footballer, Poor Soldier, Suddenly Made Good

Although barely nineteen years of age, Henry Pattinson, of Ruckington, Lincolnshire, has been promoted to be a major in the British army. He has risen by sheer merit from a private in a schoolboy battalion. Pattinson's father is a minor town official in Ruckington. When the war opened the boy was at Haileybury School, where he had a greater reputation as a football player than as a scholar, although he was regarded as too young for a place on the school's first eleven. In the military battalion his superiors reported that he "shows no special aptitude for military duties," but as soon as the war broke out he offered his services.

He was rejected on his first two applications, but he persisted, and the authorities finally stretched a point, and he won appointment as second lieutenant in a competitive examination in September, 1914. When he became a captain he was the youngest captain then on active duty in France. His regiment saw severe fighting at Loos, and after the series of battles there, he found himself the senior surviving officer. Until a new colonel was appointed he was in charge of his regiment, and he acquitted himself so well that he was in due course rewarded by promotion to major.

KUBELIK BUYS ESTATE

Violinist Who Made Fortunes Settles in Hungary

Jan Kubelick, the violinist, has bought an immense estate in Hungary. The purchase price is 1,200,000 crowns ($240,000). The property is situated at Zigmond-Hasa, in the Slowakei. Besides a magnificent feudal castle, the property includes vast areas of land, chiefly forests. It has been the ancestral home of a branch of the great Hohenlohe family, one of whom, Prince Chlodewig Hohenlohe, sold it to Kubelick. The castle is famous for the number of windows, 365, one for each day of the year.

Hopes Women Will Adopt This Habit As Well As Men

Glass of hot water each morning helps us look and feel clean, sweet, fresh.

Happy, bright, alert—vigorous and vivacious—a good clear skin; a natural, rosy complexion and freedom from illness are assured only by clean, healthy blood. If only every woman and likewise every man could realize the wonders of the morning inside bath, what a gratifying change would take place.

Instead of the thousands of sickly, anaemic-looking men, women and girls with pasty or muddy complexions; instead of the multitudes of "nerve wrecks," "rundowns," "brain fags" and pessimists we should see a virile, optimistic throng of rosy-cheeked people everywhere.

An inside bath is had by drinking each morning before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of lime stone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour fermentations and poisons, thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Those subject to sick headache, biliousness, nasty breath, rheumatism, colds, and particularly those who have a pallid, sallow complexion and who are constipated very often, are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store, which will cost but a trifle but is sufficient to demonstrate the quick and remarkable change in both health and appearance awaiting those who practice internal sanitation. We must remember that inside cleanliness is more important than outside, because the skin does not absorb impurities to contaminate the blood, while the pores in the thirty feet of bowels do.

TAKE "CASCARETS" IF HEADACHY, BILIOUS AND CONSTIPATED

Best For Liver And Bowels, Bad Breath Bad Colds, Sour Stomach

Get a 10-cent box.

Sick headache, biliousness, coated tongue, head and nose clogged up with a cold—always trace this to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months.

OLD-FASHIONED WAR

Given Frederick the Great More Humane Than Sane

Frederick the Great, who combined supreme military gifts with freedom from scruple in policy, and was at the same time a great representative German, declared that the ordinary citizen ought never to be aware that his country is at war. Nothing could show more clearly the military ideal, however imperfectly it may sometimes have been attained, of the old European world. Atrocities, whether regarded as permissible or as inevitable, certainly occurred. But for the most part wars were the concern of the privileged upper class; they were rendered necessary by the dynastic quarrels of monarchs and were carried out by a professional class with aristocratic traditions and a more or less scrupulous regard to ancient military etiquette.

There are many stories of the sufferings of the soldiery in old times, in the midst of abundance, on account of military respect for civilian property. The legend, if legend it is, of the French officer who politely requested the English officer opposite him to "fire first" shows how something of the ancient spirit of chivalry was still regarded as the accompaniment of warfare. It was an occupation which only incidentally concerned the ordinary citizen. The English especially, protected by the sea and always living in open undefended cities, have usually been able to preserve this indifference to the continental wars in which their kings have constantly been engaged, and, as we see, even in the most unprotected European countries and the most profoundly warlike, the great Frederick set forth precisely the same ideal of war

REBEL FLAG WAS HOISTED OVER BUILDINGS IN DUBLIN

LONDON, April 29.—The following dramatic account of how the Sinn Fein revolt began was given by Herbert Goodwin:

Just upon the stroke of noon on Monday a mob of armed men, young fellows, most of them, with fixed bayonets, bandoliers slung across their shoulders and soft felt hats as the nearest approach to uniformity in dress, burst into the General Post Office and brusquely told some 300 workers to clear out. Thus began the Sinn Fein rebellion, which, when I left the city, had its headquarters in the postal building overlooking Sackville street. The rebels followed up their coup by taking possession of St. Stephen's Green and several corner public houses commanding strategical positions dominating the various approaches. Immediately they captured a point they hoisted the rebel flag of green, white and yellow, emblazoned with the harp.

Three Bodies of Rebels.

The rising, so far as Dublin was concerned, was in the main restricted to the compact area in the heart of the city, with the rebels in three main bodies, which covered the important approaches. The whole plan bore evidences of having been carefully thought out, alike in the positions seized and in the manner in which they were rushed. There was little or no street fighting of a set, definite character or between the compact bodies of soldiers and rebels in the open. The belligerents took cover a good deal, engaging in much shooting from the house-tops and other vantage points. Volleys rank out from unseen sources. Independent firing came from hidden marksmen. One of the aims of the rebels at the early stage was an attack on Dublin Castle, which started late Monday afternoon and led to continuous fighting. They seemed to have massed in strength.

Raid Newspaper Offices.

They raided the newspaper offices, which gave them a stronghold, and it became impossible for a stranger to venture into the street. With a wild dash the rebels swept up the roadway and made a bid for the castle, but their progress was checked. The rebels bivouacked on St. Stephen's Green, where they threw up entrenchments surmounted by sandbags and wood material. Within twenty-four hours they had established positions at Kelly's corner, at the Davis public house, a good point for checking any advance along the canal.

Motor cars of every description which happened to come near St. Stephen's Green were seized by the rebels and dumped upon the camp boundaries as a barricade. In all, some 40 or 50 were heaped together. At one time one driver was shot in the head and lies in the hospital dangerously wounded. Wire was used in some places to bar the streets. Desultory fighting at various points continued far into Monday night, and after a lull for a few hours resumed on a more extensive scale early the following day. On Tuesday night there was a terrible fusilade at each of the three rebel centres and rushes were attempted. The rebels consistently avoided anything like a challenge in the open, but through districts in which they wer c.ncentrated they lurked at all hours behind doors and windows, where they ventured in force into the streets. It was around the quay where they looted a number of little shops.

For the most part the rebels were armed with old-fashioned rifles and a wonderful collection of bayonets of all ages. There was hardly a modern rifle to be seen. Some of the bullets were of a type that inflicts terrible wounds. Troops brought machine guns which were used at such points as Davis' corner on Monday night and Kelly's on Tuesday, and in Camden street on Wednesday. The frontages of premises held by the rebels were of a type that inflicts terrible them out, but the buildings themselves were not demolished. Dislodged from Kelly's and driven down Camden street, the rebels had to scurry off, and then they were got out of Delahunt's, but on Wednesday they were still holding the public houses on the corner of the Green dominating Grafton street, and they maintained their ground at the post-office. On the following morning the invaders made a breakfast-hour descent on the Gresham Hotel across the way and commandeered all the food supplies they could lay hands on. Besides, in bravado they ventured on a little march in Sackville street. There was a similar show of truculent humour at other strong holds where they had made forcible entry into buildings, and they seized flour and other foodstuffs.

Cause Bread Shortage.

There was a shortage of bread through the city as one of the immediate results of the rebellion. Rebels in their exploits rushed to Guinness' Brewery, on the quay, but were got out of it. They seized a mill on the quay, one of the largest in the city, but were ejected after a lot of damage had been done, and Monday night some of the poorer quarters were sacked when the fighting was at its height. Tuesday night fires broke out in Sackville street, whether by accident or design one could not say, and several large shops were burned down, but still more lamentable was the loss of life and casualties to civilians as well as the military and police.

A Gallant Girl.

The Daily Telegraph prints the following story by W. A. Reid of a scene in Dublin:

"An Irish girl not more than 16 dashed out of a house and ran like a deer in the face of a hail of snipers' bullets, grasped a wounded soldier under the arms and dragged him to where the others were ready to carry him to a hospital. She then went back for another stricken man.

"Her example inspired all the nurses and doctors of a hospital near by, and with clergy and civilians we joined in the rescue. But that young girl led us all the time with loud cries. She deserves the Victoria Cross.

"As far as I know, when I left the rebels were still holding Sackville street, West Landrow station, the post office and a number of big houses. Nobletts confectionery store at the corner of Grafton street was ransacked, as were a number of other establishments by riff-raff, who took goods.

"It appears that the advance guards of the troops from England were allowed to enter Dublin without mishap. The heavy firing was reserved for the later bodies.'

Rids Poisons From the Blood Clears Up the Complexion

Sallow Skin, Pimples, Pains and Aches Are Soon Gone When Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills Are Used

The doctor feels your pulse and looks at your tongue, but at the same time he is reading your condition in your face. The sallow complexion tells him that your liver is not doing its work, the pimples tell him that the kidneys are not properly purifying the blood, he realizes that the bowels are constipated and the system overloaded with poisons.

You can apply this test in your own case and may be able to add other symptoms, such as headaches, pains and aches through back and limbs, spells of biliousness and indigestion.

If you have not used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you will be surprised to find how quickly they will rid your system of poisonous impurities and thereby remove the cause of pains, aches and skin troubles.

Mrs. F. N. Hall, 102 Queen street, St. John, N.B., writes: "I am glad to say I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills with splendid results. I was greatly troubled with constipation and pimples on the face. I tried other remedies and used liquid arsenic three times a day for a year to get rid of the pimples but received no benefit. I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and it was not very long before I was completely cured. The pills acted on the bowels, kidneys and liver and cleansed them of all impure matter. I think they cannot be beaten as a means of ridding a person of that tired aching due to weak kidneys, and I would not be without them in the house for any money."

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S SHIRT WAIST.

By Anabel Worthington.

There is, about a shirt waist that which will hold us to it as a garment fit for wear at any time of day and any place. So, while simplicity must mark us "fashionable," we must have variety in the designing of our shirt waists, for new fashions are born so that they'll be worn. In the illustration, No. 7,668, we have an attractive, plain waist with the closing down the front. The neck is finished with a collar that is notched as it rolls open, with the waist front forming neck revers; these are finished with stitching. In keeping with the prevailing fancy, the blouse has the necessary fulness, and the button closing deftly outlined with a row of insertion either side, so that inset vest is suggested. The sleeves may be long, finishing with a band cuff, or short, finished with a turn back deep cuff in pointed effect. If the high standing collar is used, the result will be as shown in the small illustration. To give shapeliness to the waist at back there are gathers tacked either to a tape or to the material.

The pattern is cut in sizes 36-44 bust measure. For size 36, using material 36 inches wide, it will require 1¾ yards.

To obtain the pattern of this waist send only 10c to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 10 cents, or 2 for 25c.

AVIATORS' RUSES

That the use of aircraft has changed the whole art and science of warfare is now an accepted fact. We have yet to see a pitched battle between airships and aeroplanes, to settle the question of supremacy and utility, but the value of both for reconnoitring purposes, directing artillery and troops, for naval scouting and deadly raids, is indisputable. With the aid of aeroplanes it is possible, for instance, for a commander to thoroughly survey the enemy's position over the whole of his military zone, which stretches back, perhaps, for a distance of thirty miles or so, from the first line trenches. In his reconnoitring search for hostile artillery the aviator naturally runs great risks; but he displays remarkable resource. Time after time the guns of the enemy have been so cunningly concealed from observation as to pass unnoticed. Accordingly he adopts a daring procedure. "He swoops down," says Mr. Frederick A. Talbot, "over suspicious places where he thinks guns may be lurking. The ruse is invariably successful. The aviator makes a sudden dive towards the earth, and the soldiers in hiding at once open a fusillade in the hope of bringing him down. But their very excitement contributes to his safety. The shots are fired without careful aim, and expend themselves harmlessly. Sweeping once more upward, the airman regains the predetermined level, performs a certain evolution in the air which warns the observer at his base that he has made a discovery, and promptly drops his guiding signal directly over the point from which he has drawn fire."

HOW FRANCE MOBILIZED TO WITHSTAND HORDES

Marvellous System Which Brought Armies to the Field—Secrecy and Speed Achieved

The plan under which the French army was mobilized in 1914 was the seventeenth that had been elaborated since the war of 1870. From the annual census of the resources of the country in men, horses and material, the general staff had figured out the number of elementary units it could create and the theoretic organization that they might give them. Every corps charged with mobilization possessed its table giving details of all the elements that it was called upon to furnish, where to find its men, from where would come the horses and material necessary for the constitution of new units; every man had his mobilization sheet indicating the corps that he must join; the staff of that corps had his name and address on its rolls and expected him on the day that he arrived.

Every mayor of every commune of France under this system knew exactly where to take the horses of his commune in order that they could be requisitioned. Every president of requisitioning commissions knew the horses that he must choose and the point to which he must take them. This plan not only involved the uniting of these elements and their proper distribution, but every horse and every man found what was necessary for him at the spot where he was to be taken. The troops of such a corps, with their horses and all accoutrements, all equipped and ready, found the train ready for them at the point of their concentration, corresponding exactly in capacity to the number of men, horses, baggage wagons, artillery, ambulances, and so forth, of the corps to be transported secretly over France and disembarked at a point where other trains from other points were bringing other troops to form the division, the army corps, or an army itself. The necessity of secrecy imposed as much care as the necessity of prompt concentration, a single accident being susceptible of creating confusion and disclosing the movements of the corps.

SAVAGES MORE HUMANE

Sack of Rome by Goths Was Not Kultured War

The sack of Rome by the Goths at the beginning of the fifth century made an immense impression on the ancient world as an unparalleled outrage. St. Augustine in his "City of God" written shortly afterward, eloquently described the horrors of that time. Yet to-day, in the new light of our own knowledge of what Hun war may involve, the ways of the ancient Goths seem very innocent. We are expressly told that they spared the sacred Christian places, and the chief offences brought against them seem to be looting and burning, yet the treasure they left untouched was vast and incalculable.

RAIDING GERMAN SOIL

Bright Description of Aeroplane and Destroyer Activity

A British sailor gives the following details of an aeroplane raid on German hangars in Schleswig-Holstein: "We had been itching for a scrap for a long time, and when the word went round that we were going for the German coast we rubbed our hands, danced on the deck, and sang 'Now we shan't be long.' In order to reach the German coast we had to feel our way through many mine fields. It was terrible work; but Commodore Tyrwhitt knows every inch of the North Sea. We managed to steer through all the hidden dangers successfully, and about three o'clock a.m., the curtain went up on the strangest vision which has ever been seen in the North Sea.

"The weather, as I have said, was none too promising in the beginning. It quickly grew worse, and just as the show was about to begin a terrible gale sprang up. Battle cruisers, destroyers, and other craft were tossed about like so many corks. To make matters worse, a terrific snowstorm came on, and the North Sea seemed to undergo a complete transformation. The moment was hardly opportune to carry out the seaplane raid, already deferred on account of the weather. The conditions, however, did not improve, and it was decided to let loose our flying men immediately. Five of them went up, young Lieut. Reid leading the way. I shall never forget the scene as they soared amongst the snow clouds right over Schleswig-Holstein. The German aviators came over in advance to meet us, and our gunners quickly set to work on them. They exploded shell after shell about the aeroplanes, and two of them at least were badly hit and promptly retired.

The Germans had had plenty of time by now to realize what was going on, and they tried hard, but unsuccessfully, to coax us into their mine field. We swooped round to give the enemy the impression that we were beating a hasty retreat. This little manœuvre was quite successful and effective for us. German cruisers and torpedo destroyers started to chase us at top speed, but suddenly the order was given to swing round, and, to the surprise of the Germans, we went back to meet them. I may remark that the German gunnery was an improvement on that of a year ago, and the enemy certainly landed us one or two disturbing shots.

The Cleopatra made a desperate dash, during which a German destroyer was absolutely cut in two and went to the bottom. We made the return journey in the most abominable weather, and all our boats excepting the Medusa returned to port little the worse for the scrap. The crew of the Medusa had a very narrow shave. How they escaped was miraculous for when she collided with the Daverock it was odds against anybody being saved."

Bohemian Leaders Shot

The Vienna correspondent of the "Neue Zuericher Zeitung" reports that five Bohemian leaders have been secretly tried by court-martial, sentenced to death and shot. The names of the executed men are kept secret, but it is rumored that at least two of them were members of the Austrian Parliament. They were accused of espionage and revolutionary agitation on behalf of the Slavs of Bohemia.

At the beginning of the war France had 1,400 certificated airmen, and Great Britain and Germany 700 each.

Winsted Man Steals Crow's Eggs, Hangs Coat Near Fire, Presto! They're Hatched.

WINSTED, Conn., April 28.—Discovering a crow's nest a-top a hemlock tree, Fritz elmer climbed skyward sixty feet and got the three eggs in the nest.

He placed the eggs in the pocket of his coat and on reaching home hung the coat near the open fireplace in which large chunks of wood are burned all night in sour weather.

This morning he heard a peculiar noise proceeding from his coat and on investigation found two young crows in his pocket. The third egg did not hatch out.

Canadians' Smart Salute.

English officers declare that in France the Canadian soldier can be told by the promptitude and smart cut of his salute, but that in England, after 7 p.m., Canada's Tommy considers himself somewhat of a free agent and fails to see the officers he may pass in the street. "And if you are wise," concluded the speaker, "you don't see him, either."

GERMANS LOSE HEAVILY IN VERDUN ATTACKS

ALL THE DUBLIN REBEL LEADERS SURRENDER

GERMANS SUFFER TERRIBLE LOSSES IN TWO FRUITLESS ATTACKS ON VERDUN FRONT

Attempts on Dead Man's Hill and Other Points Although Preceeded by Terrific Artillery Bombardments, Resulted in Total Failure---French Aviators Show Great Activity at Several Points on the Line.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

PARIS, May 1.—(French Official Communique)—Following a violent bombardment the Germans last night launched what the War Office described as a "powerful close formation attack" against the trenches recently gained by the French north of Dead Man's Hill.

The assaults broke down under French fire, the enemy suffering enormous losses. Another German attack on the Gumieres sector was also repulsed.

@

The German attack was delivered with more violence than were the blows last Friday that marked the resumption of the Crown Prince's drive on Verdun. Guns of all calibre first assailed the French positions northeast of Verdun, cannonading not only the Dead Man Hill but Hill 304, and even extending the bombardment east of the river to Vaux.

A curtain of French mitrailleuse fire swept the advancing Germans and mowed them down by the hundreds. The stroke against Cumieres was beaten back in similar fashion with enormous losses.

The French air squadrons have been very active throughout the last thirty-six hours. One squadron early yesterday raided the Sebastopol station near Thiaucourt. The railways at Etaine, and German bicouacs at Suincourt and other stations were treated to liberal bomb showers.

Lieut. J. G. Weir—Of the 19th Canadian Battalion, mentioned by the official eye-witness as showing great courage while in charge of machine guns in the recent heavy fighting at St. Eloi.

German Offensive On East Front?

Special to The Examiner.

PETROGRAD, May 1.—Von Hindenburg is bringing up a large number of heavy guns against the Russian northern front, according to despatches received here to-day, forecasting a German offensive against Gen. Kuropatkin's line within two weeks. Weather conditions are becoming more favourable for fighting on the Riga-Dvinsk front.

Conference Will Be Ended To-night

Special to the Examiner.

BERLIN, May 1.—Conferences at the Kaiser's headquarters at the front at which the character of the German reply to the American note is being finally determined, probably will be concluded to-night.

The American Embassy has had no word from Ambassador Gerard since he left for the conference with the Kaiser last Thursday night, but he is expected to reach Berlin late this afternoon. It is believed that following his talk with the Emperor the Ambassador was taken to the German front.

The Vos Sische Zeitung said editorially to-day that the continuance for the balance of the war of friendly relations between Germany and the United States rests entirely with President Wilson. Theodore Wolff, writing in the Tageblatt reiterated that everything possible must be done to avoid a break, and Count Reventlow in the Tages-Zeitung held first to his original declaration that Germany must yield nothing. The only news that has come from Grand Army Headquarters in several days was the announcement that the American Ambassador was the Kaiser's guest at dinner Friday night.

Lincoln Must Go Back To England

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, May 1.—Ignatus Lincoln, the ex-British M.P., confessed "International" spy, to-day lost his fight in the Supreme Court against extradition proceeds. While the British authorities have asked for the return of Lincoln on forgery charges, his counsel asserted the real purpose is to prosecute him as a spy. He must now go back to England and take his chances.

ANOTHER STEAMER SUNK.

LONDON, May 1.—The British steamer Lucknow, 3,669 tons, has been sunk.

LONDON, May 1.—All the Dublin rebel commanders have surrendered, it was officially announced this afternoon.

OPENING SALE POSTPONED

We regret being obliged to disappoint the large number of people who came to our door this morning, expecting we would be ready with the big bargains advertised.

We found it necessary to enlarge the store to enable us to properly display the two stocks which we will offer to the public below the present cost of production.

The carpenters are at work increasing the size of the salesroom, and we are at work reducing the prices. Only the Strictly First-Class Portions of The Fancy Dry Goods and Smallwares in Mrs. Byrne's stock will be retained here, the balance, together with the Hair Goods Department, will be removed to Toronto, where Mrs. Byrne will continue this branch of her business.

Our dry goods stock, now stored at 453 George Street, will be removed to the Byrne Store, ready for a regular SLAUGHTER SALE, to begin on Friday, May 5th, at 10 a.m., and last EIGHT days.

Now remember three things: 1st, date and place, Friday next, 10 a.m. at 494 George Street.

2nd. We need the money.

3rd. Our necessity is your opportunity.

Yours for bargains.

Y. W. C. A. NOTES

The first observation trip of the season will be held Wednesday afternoon to the Armouries to witness the barracks life of the soldiers of the 93rd Battalion. By kind permission of Lieut. Col. Johnston, the boys will be shown the complete organization of a Battalion in barracks. Lieut. Crisp has kindly consented to explain the workings of the Machine gun to the boys, and altogether this visit will be both instructive and profitable. Every member of the Y. M. C. A. is invited to visit the armouries Wednesday afternoon at 4.30.

Saturday morning the boys will have a bicycle trip to Chemong Park. All who intend to go on the trip will report at the building Saturday morning at 9.30.

From May 8th to 13th the members of the Boys' Department will have the privilege of learning the art of swimming. The Physical Director is anxious that those who wish to learn will have their names at the office not later than Saturday, May 6th.

To save the top of a stocking from being worn by suspender clasps, sew a piece of tape on the stock where the clasps come, and sew small tape loops on the pieces; then fasten the suspenders through the loops.

FINE PROGRAMME FOR BAND CONCERT IN VICTORIA HALL

Band of 93rd Battalion and Mr. Asa Huycke Will Be Heard in Choice Numbers at Popular-priced Entertainment To-night

SHOULD BE BIG CROWD

The concert by the band of the 93rd Battalion assisted by Mr. Asa Huycke in Victoria Hall to-night, promises to be one of the most enjoyable of the season and no doubt there will be a crowded house. A choice programme has been prepared, the offerings by the band including the selections from "Faust," the overture to "William Tell" and the grand selection, "Verdi," two descriptive numbers, 'Forest Scenes' and 'An Indian Ride,' and Mr. Asa Huycke's new march, "Irresistible." Mr. Huycke will sing, "Sons of the Empire," a new patriotic song written by Bandmaster Hughes, and will also give a piano improvisation on "The Spring Song." Popular prices will reign, 10 and 15 cents, and the concert will commence at 8.15 o'clock. As this will be one of the last opportunities of hearing the 93rd Band, Bandmaster Hughes and his men should be warmly received.

POTATOES MADE NEW BY LYE

State Food Inspector W. J. Mikel, of Hastings, Mich., by experiment has proved that old potatoes treated to a solution of lye, can be made to appear like genuine early potatoes. The resemblance is so close that even experts cannot tell the difference. The experiment towwod oidyl from Illinois that such potatoes were in the market in the middle west.

THE 93rd BATTALION MADE GOOD SHOWING IN RECENT RECRUITING

For the Two Weeks Just Closed the Peterborough Battalion Stood Second in the Division, Being Only Beaten by the 155th of Belleville, Which is Now at Full Strength ---Lakefield and Apsley Soldiers Will Not Arrive Until Thursday---To-day's Orders and General Military News.

The 93rd Battalion secured 46 recruits during the two weeks just closed, standing second among the battalions in the division for the number of recruits taken on during that period. The only battalion to do better was the 155th of Belleville, which signed on 56 men, and is now at full strength. Nearly all the recruits gained by the 93rd were taken on last week, as the week before was a very slow one from the recruiting standpoint. Here are the figures:

80th, Belleville—13 recruits; total strength, 1,133.

93rd Battalion—46 recruits; total strength, 953.

136th Battalion, Port Hope—17 recruits; total strength, 776.

139th Battalion, Cobourg—35 recruits; total strength, 967.

Notices—

The following is an Order-in-Council P. C. No. 702 of 1916, published for all concerned.

Appended herewith is a copy of an Order-in-Council, dated the 11th of April and forwarded for your information, and the information of all concerned.

Copy Privy Council, Canada, at the Government House at Ottawa, Tuesday the 11th day of April, 1916:

Present, His Royal Highness the Governor-General in Council.

His Royal Highness the Governor-General in Council is pleased to order that the following Order and Regulations shall be and the same are hereby made under the provisions of the War Measures Act, 1914.

(a) Every person who attempts to take or assists in taking any matches into any explosives factory or into any building, enclosure or place wherein the manufacture of explosives is carried on; or

(b) has matches in his possession while in any such factory, building enclosure or place, is liable upon summary conviction to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months, or to both fine and imprisonment.

(Signed) R. Boudreau.
Clerk of the Privy Council.

J. E. R. MUNRO,
Captain.
Adjutant, 93rd O.S. Battalion.

Mr. F. C. Cressman, secretary of the Cressman Co. Ltd., leaves to-day for Newport News, V.A., to take a course in aviation preparatory to going overseas.

Mr. Cressman has spent the past week in the Canadian and American markets purchasing for the departments of the Cressman Co. that he is most particularly identified with.

This makes twelve enlistments from this company, quite a number of whom are now on the firing line. Practically every eligible young man who was with the company when war broke out, has joined the colours.

The Lakefield and Apsley platoons of the 93rd Battalion will not arrive in Peterborough to-day as announced on Saturday, but instead will march in on Thursday. The change in the plans was made at the request of the people of Lakefield, who have arranged a big farewell demonstration for Wednesday night. The Havelock and Norwood platoons will therefore be the first of the outside detachments to report, as they will arrive on Wednesday.

The employees of the Calcutt Brewing Co. on Saturday presented Robert Donaldson, until recently one of their number, with a wrist watch on his joining the ranks of the 93rd.

Private Donaldson formerly belonged to the Black Watch, and served through the South African war, as a member of the second volunteer battalion of the Royal Highlanders.

OTTAWA, April 30.—It is officially announced through the chief press censor's office that the troopships Scandinavian, which sailed from Canada on April 17th, and the Missanabie, which sailed on April 18th, have arrived safely in England.

On board the Scandinavian there were: 69th French-Canadian Battalion, 34 officers and 1,023 of other ranks; Army Service Corps draft, 11 officers and 190 of other ranks; Royal Navy, 1 officer and 6 of other ranks; details, 1 officer and 13 of other ranks; 2 nurses.

On board the Missanabie there were: 51st Edmonton Battalion, 37 officers and 1,055 of other ranks; 3rd Divisional Ammunition Sub-park, 3 officers and 163 of other ranks; detachment 224th Lumbermen's Battalion, 16 officers and 378 of other ranks; draft Canadian Dental Corps, 15 officers and 30 of other ranks; details, 16 officers and three of other ranks.

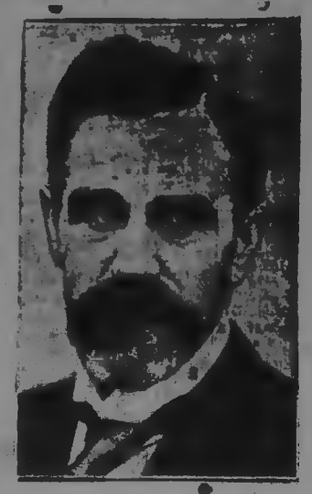
"IRISH REPUBLIC" NOW AT AN END

Rebel Leaders at Headquarters Have Surrendered and Their Followers Are Urged to Lay Down Their Arms—Back of Rebellion Broken.



Sir Roger Casement—Arrested in connection with an abortive attempt to land arms in Ireland. He is now under arrest in London.

PRISONERS NUMEROUS

LONDON, April 30.—With the setting of the dusk of the last Easter-week day upon the city of Dublin the "Irish Republic" passed int ohistory. It had lived a little more than 120 hours. Proudly, triumphantly, it set out on its short-lived career last Monday, defying everything and everybody, making the world sit up and take notice of "ourselves alone". Unconditionally it resigned last night to its pre-destined fate of failure.

From the tops of a few isolated houses in the Irish capital there still flies the flag of the "Republic" amid the clatter of snipers' rifles holding to the last. But the banners are battered with bullets and reduced to mere rags, and the snipers are at bay. Small fires are still smouldering in various parts of the city. Otherwise Dublin experienced an almost perfectly normal Sunday.

The "army of the republic" has unqualifiedly surrendered; the "seat of James Connolly, is dead, and the "president," Peter Pearce, a prisoner in the hands o fthe Government troops. The republic's newspaper, the Irish War News, has suspended publication—as such at least—its day-dream of "our allies in Europe," the Germans, "conquering England" having failed to become a reality.

THE PROCLAMATION.

A despatch from Kingston, Ireland, dated 8 p.m. to-night (Sunday) says:

The proclamation issued by "Provisional President" Pearce advising the surrender of all the rebels follows:

"In order to prevent the further slaughter o funarmed people, and in the hope of saving the lives of our followers, who are surrounded and hopelessly outnumbered, the members of the provisional government at head quarters have agreed to unconditional surrender, and the commanders of all the units of the republican forces will order their followes to lay down their arms."

(Signed) "PEARCE"

"The main body of the Sinn Fein rebels in Dublin surrendered during the course of the day.

"There, was, however, considerable fighting throughout Sunday in Dublin and the suburbs. It was especially severe at Ball's Bridge, outside Dublin.

"The rebels in the College of Surgeons surrendered this mofning. One of the prisoners taken here was the Countess Markievics."

OFFICIAL STATEMENT.

An official statement issued to-night by the Official Press Bureau regarding the siutation in Ireland says:

"The general officer commanding-in-chief, the Irish commander, has reported the situation in Dublin much more satisfactory. Throughout the country there was still much more to be done, which would take time, but he hopied that the back of the rebellion had been broken.

"Last night messengers were sent out from the rebel leaders in Dublin to the rebel bodies in Galway, counties, ordering them to surrender,

Scandinavian and The Missanobie Have Arrived

OTTAWA, May 1. It is officially announced through the Chief Press Censor's Office that the troopships Scandinavian, which sailed from Canada on April 17, and the Missanabie, which sailed on April 18, have arrived safely in England.

On board the Scandinavian there were: 69th French-Canadian Battalion, 34 officers and 1,023 of other ranks; Army Service Corps draft, 11 officers and 190 men of other ranks; Royal Navy, one officer and six men of other ranks; details, one officer and 13 of other ranks; two nurses.

On board the Missanabie there were: 51st Edmonton Battalion, 37 officers and 1,055 of other ranks; Third Divisional Ammunition subpark, three officers and 163 of other ranks; detachment 224th Lumbermen's Battalion, 16 officers and 378 of other ranks; draft Canadian Dental Corps, 15 officers and 30 of other ranks; details, 16 officers and three of other ranks.

COLLEGE BOYS SAVE IRELAND'S BANK

LIVERPOOL, May 1.—How Trinity College students saved the Bank of Ireland is told by a resident of Liverpool, who has just arrived from Dublin.

"It was the intention of the Sinn Feiners," he said, "to take this institution and its valuables contents, and a body of rebels came along with the express purpose of spoiling their intention into execution. Opposite the bank stands famous Trinity College, where an officers' training corps of students is stationed, and the young officers had a warm reception in readiness.

"The rebels came along in great style, anticipating no trouble and shooting down the half dozen soldiers always on guard at the bank. But as they advanced there was a rifle volley and some of the attacking party dropped to the ground.

"The college had been transformed into a veritable fortress. In the windows were sandbags, loopholed, behind which the officers were waiting to give battle. The insurgents were stupefied, and for a moment hesitated as to what they should do. Then several sprang forward, shouting to their comrades, and the rebels pressed on.

"Again came a volley from the windows of Trinity College. More men fell, and the rebels broke in disorder and fled."

TWIST LION'S TAIL NOW.

U. S. to Again Demand Release of Seized Alians.

Washington, April 29. Secretary Lansing announced that the United States had sent another note to Great Britain, demanding the release of the 38 Austrians, Germans and Turks taken from the American steamship China by a British cruiser offShanghai. The note will be given out for publication later.

Great Britain has already contended that the 38 were engaged in hostile enterprises, and as such, were liable to seizure.

Great War Picture

The Royal Theatre has managed to secure for to-night the celebrated war drama, in five reels, entitled, "Shannon of the 6th." Don't miss this as it is the best war picture ever produced. Also good comedies and others. Prices, matinee 5c. for all; evening 10c and 5c.

MONDAY, MAY 1, 1916

THE IRISH UPRISING.

It is a misnomer to call the ruction in Ireland an "Irish uprising." The real Ireland is not behind it, but was, and is, active in the measures necessary to stamp it out. In the first place the little blaze was kindled by German plotting and its influence upon an irreconcilable element, always ready for a shindy for a fight against somebody—if against no other than their country and kin. The misguided and silly bodies that were drawn into the German scheme, are constitutionally and chronically against law and order; they are like the newly-landed Irishman, in New York, who, asked how he would vote declared he was "agin the government anyway." These misguided and silly men who broke out lately, had the natural instinct of an Irishman to fight. And while they were fighting against their fellow citizens, against Ireland and its best interests, that constituted only an incident—only an emphasis of the splendid part Irishmen are taking in the war for human liberty, involving Irish liberty of course. While a misguded few are striving to fasten upon Ireland and the world the odious and inhuman tyranny of Germany—the relation of all human liberty, thousands of loyal Irishmen—loyal to their empire, loyal to Ireland and their fellow citizens—are fighting in the ranks of the British army in the ranks of the French army, too, to preserve the liberty that is alone worth preserving. What is the issue between Irishmen and the Sinn Feiners? The latter are fighting in the interests of Germany to fasten upon Ireland and the world the fetters of Prussianism. The others are fighting for real liberty, and as far as Ireland is involved, for the interests of self government which Great Britain after long and culpable delay, has conceded the Irish people, and which is at stake in this great war. If Britain and her allies win, Ireland will have home rule of the right kind. If Germany wins, as Casement and his dupes are trying to help her do, Ireland will have Kaiser rule, a tyranny a hundred times greater than ever the "hated Saxon" imposed in the bad days now happily passed by forever. A handful of denatured and duped Irishmen want the grinding rule of Prussian militarism; a nation of Irishmen want the rule of real liberty; what British freedom means, self government, Home Rule.

MID-WEEK SHOPPING.

To-day is Monday, and after the lapse of four more days, Saturday will be here. In the meantime—during the mid-week—there is a duty incumbent upon Peterborough citizens, in their own interests, in the interests of their country cousins, and in the interests of our merchants. Our merchants are short-handed these days, the war has weakened their shop staffs, and they are not as well prepared to deal with a Saturday rush of customers, to give as effecti e service as if the shopping—the purchasing—were distributed through the week. Under the circumstances and coiditions that obtain, Saturday is the natural day of shopping of the people from the country. During the week they are busy with their farm and farm house duties. They require the greater part of the week to get their products ready for the Saturday markets, to supply city tables on Sunday, and naturally the country people have no other day so suitable for selling and buying as Saturday. They sell their produce on the market, and when they want to spend their gains with our merchants they find the stores crowded with city shoppers and the lessened staffs of the merchants unable to satisfactorily "wait on" everybody. There is bound to be inconvenience and dissatisfaction all round For this the city people are largely to blame. There is nothing to prevent them, or the most of them, from doing their shopping on mid-week days. They will, by doing this, be acting in their own interests, for they will get better serving and have better opportunity for selection, and get their goods more promptly delivered. City people by shopping through the week, will thereby not only be preventing overwork and impaired service, by lessened shop staffs, and be leaving the shops of the city more free for the benefit of country patrons, and for those of their fellow-citizens who only get paid for their work on Friday, and only on Saturday, have money to make their purchases, but they will be preventing cruelty to animals and men.. People from the country take their parcels with them, but the parcels of city people bought on Saturday have to he delivered before Sunday; and when as is a very bad custom, much city shopping is so late on Saturday night, that delivery keeps men and horses busy late at night, and in many cases, early on Sunday morning—a circumstance that explains many empty pews in our churches on Sunday morning. If the people of the city want to be good citizens, good Christians — do to others as they would have others do to them—they will fall into the practice of mid-week shopping. We should all be better men and women if we had more thought for the rights and convenience of others, and did not, at the expense of others, thoughtlessly think so much of ourselves.

NO CANADIAN CONSCRIPTION.

Canada might well, to a degree, apply to some of her citizens the Scripture—"The zeal of thy house hath eaten me up"—to the agitations for the impossible in Canada, conscription. We have official notification of the harm the proposal to place Canada on a level with Germany, in regard to filling the ranks of an army has done. We have before us a memorandum of the Dominion Government Superintendent of Immigration. The Department, owing to the shortage of farm labourers, is making strong efforts to bring in from United States settlers for the west and farm labourers to assist in planting the crops of Ontario and the west. In spite of all the efforts made, the result is disappointing. The cause of the lack of success is given as the rumours of conscription in Canada. These rumours are based upon reports of meetings held in Canada to urge the government to adopt conscription in Canada. German agents, or German sympathizers seize upon these rumours and "work them" to the full to discourage emigration to Canada; that is Canadians, good loyal Canadians at heart, and in object—make the bullets and the Germans fire them against Canada. The Department requests editors, to give no prominence to the reports of such meetings, if published, and to emphasize, at every opportunity, the fact that there is no prospect whatever of any form of conscription being adopted in the Dominion.

Accordingly, emphasis is placed upon the statement that there is not the remotest possible prospect of conscription being adopted in Canada.

RAILWAY EARNINGS AND TRADE.

Associated with the trite expression of the importance of transportation is the almost equally trite recognition of the importance of our railways in national transportation interests; and proof of the ability of management only emphasizes their importance. As was to be expected, the conditions created by the war had an adverse influence upon gross railway earnings, but the capacity of the management for readjustment provided for a lesser falling off in net earnings. According to statistics compiled by Mr. Payne, comptroller of railway statistics, Ottawa, and published in the Monetary Times, the gross earnings of Canadian railways last year fell off, as compared with those of 1914 by 43. and a quarter millions, chiefly caused by a decline of freight tonnage from 101 millions to 67 million tons. Here came the test of management. A reduction was effected of operating expenses from 178 millions, in 1914, to 147 millions, in 1915; that is to say, while earnings shrank by 17.8 per cent. operating expenses, due to retrenchments in various directions, were reduced by 17.5, bringing the related conditions of profit to a virtual parity. With all this retrenchment, the operating efficiency of our railways were not allowed to deteriorate. This accomplishment by the railways was due to management prevision, for the railways had warnings of the slump in traffic that would have come—though to a lesser extent—without the war. Railway earnings have a close relation to the business life of the country, and the sensitive barometer held by the railways, unfailingly indicates the upward or downward tendency of traffic and trade. The railways had warnings of the slump which started in 1914, and continued till September, 1915. Then the bountiful harvest of last year and the war orders traffic, like the Canadians at St Julien, "saved the situation." In connection with this the deductions of Mr. Payne are interesting:

The upward movement in railway earnings has continued with more or less steadiness since last September. Therefore, without any corroboration from the banks or any other quarter, we know beyond a preadventure that the commerce of Canada has been actively growing. A very substantial part of the losses in gross receipts incurred between March, 1914, and September, 1915, have already been retrieved. This recovery is not wholly attributable to the movement of grain and war materials. Trade in general has answered to the impulse of confidence — that subtle, yet potent, force beneath all enterprise. It is well this change took place. It concerns us all. When earnings are pouring into the coffers of the railways, everybody should rejoice; for railway earnings are invariably and necessarily the reflex of trade. Let nobody grumble when the railways are doing well; the people at large are also doing well. Of course, the fall in earnings last year smashed practically all the nice-looking and encouraging averages which had been built up in railway statistics year by year since 1902. It looks at this moment, however, as if many of them would soon be restored to former levels. All the conditions are favourable.

ADVANTAGES AND DISADVANTAGES OF SHIPBUILDING IN CANADA

While a shipbuilding industry may prove an expensive enterprise for Canada the extraordinary tonnage situation created by the war makes the subject one for serious consideration by the federal government. Colonel W. I. Gear, of Montreal, a practical shipping man, advanced strong reasons the other week against the institution of such an industry here. He pointed out that it was impossible to compete with British firms either in the cost of building or in the cost of operating ships. In the past, he added, British built boats had been cheaper by 30 per sent. because the cost of material; of wages, of outfitting, and of the yard permitted the difference. At the same time, there are far more substantial reasons favouring the establishment now of a shipbuilding industy than there were for the construction of certain transcontinental railroads whose debt charges are constituting an acute problem.

Since the outbreak of war to the middle of October last 1,500,000 ocean tonnage had been sunk. Such losses have continued and one of the matters giving greatest concern to-day, especially to the British authorities, is the increasing shortage of tonnage. It affects not only the conduct and the length of the war, but it will prove an important factor in the commercial campaign to follow the war. To transact the large volume of business which we should when hostilities cease, the British Empire must have the maximum possible tonnage. The neutral nations which have managed to keep out of the war to date, and the largest of them which will probably be able to keep out of the struggle altogether, are amassing wealth as a result of the war. They will be outstanding rivals in the British Empire's campaign for business. To retain our markets and to obtain new business, we must have boats. From that angle alone, it would seem to be worth while for Canada to do its share in supplying tonnage. From the purely Canadian viewpoint, with our determination to increase production and exports, tonnage upon which we have first call is obviously an advantage and the sooner it is off the stocks, the greater the advantage.

Colonel Cantley's speech to the Canadian Manufacturer's' Association at Montreal last week, cited strong arguments for the institution of such an industry. Mr. W. G. Ross, chairman of the Montreal harbour commission, stated at the same meeting that the farmer is as much interested in ocean transport as in the manufacturer. The experience of the past few months has proved that. We can afford to shelve many ambitious construction schemes of which politics have been the parents and which have compelled the authorities at Ottawa to take notice. Shipbuilding may cost the country something to establish, but is it worth while in view of the commercial conditions to follow the war?—Monetary Times.

CANNOT DI MIRISH VALOR

The net result of Casement's conspiracy and the riots that are incidental to it will be to strengthen the hand of Carson and the Tory opponents of home rule. What is called an uprising against Great Britain is in reality an uprising against John Redmond and the Irish Nationalists who have remained loyal to the British Empire in the war with Germany. There are many thousands of such Irishmen, fighting not merely for Great Britain, but for France and Belgium and democracy. Their deeds are already written high in the roll of honor of their race. Casement's treason was treason to them, and can be regarded in no other light. It is easy enough to understand why Irishmen should hate England, but it is not easy to understand why they should hate themselves, and all this German conspiracy into which the Sinn Fein and the Clan-na-Gael victims have been plunged can have no other effects than to injure the Irish and the cause of Irish freedom. A man may be forgiven for being a traitor or a conspirator, but he can never be forgiven for being a fool.—New York World.

Old Country Football Clubs Officially Closed

Game Will Nol Be Resumed in England Until After the War ---A Few Interesting Facts About the Season Just Closed

Whilst football starts in full swing in Canada the game in the Old Country, officially closed down on Saturday for the season and is not due to be resumed until 15th August in Scotland and 1st of September in England. By special permission a few games will be played during May for charitable purposes, but to all intents and purposes the real business of the season shuts down this afternoon. The various league champions were decided some time ago, and the supplementary competition which followed in the London, Middlesex and Lancashire districts have no actual bearing on the honours of the year. The season will go down in history as a record for football's contribution to the war, patriotic and charitable funds. The players in England have given their services free, those in Scotland have performed at the nominal wage of £5 per week, and from all the gates in England a percentage has been deducted for charitable purposes.

Will it go On?

There are those who contend that the game will not be resumed in England until after the war is over, but the Athletic News remarks as follows:

"The English Football League is scanning the horizon with interest, and not a little concern. That the clubs and governors who faced the season with the determination to play the game acted wisely few will doubt. The attendance at the Saturday matches, so late on in the season and such a season, to watch games which many proclaimed would not be worth seeing, must have a marked effect on the views of those in authority when they come to consider next season's programmes. The league plan has been to keep the game alive, and so long as it is possible to pursue that policy we shall be loth to believe that the league will close its doors."

The Scottish League has already decided to continue its competition next season.

No Time for Luxuries.

That the present is not a time for players indulging in hydropathic luxuries is admitted and that the public resent any attempt to do so is evident. Some sort of enquiry was made into a report that one of the Scottish League clubs had had their players at the seaside, which would have been contrary to the provisional rules for this season. The result of the enquiry, the nature of which was not made public, was an instruction to the secretary to issue a statement to the effect that no clubs in the league had sent their team to the seaside. The Celtic admitted that they sent certain players to Seamill, but merely because they were injured and because they would have been in the doctors' hands in any case.

Facts Worth Knowing.

Although the brothers Goodall were of Scottish nationality, John played for England because he was born in London, and Archie played for Ireland because he was born in Belfast.

King George witnessed the Cup Final between Burnley and Liverpool in 1914. This was the first occasion that a King of England had attended a Cup Final.

When a player is in dead line with the two opposing backs and no more opponents other than the goalkeeper nearer the goal line, he is offside.

Aston Villa won the English Cup and the League championship in season of 1896-7. The team that won the Cup was: Whitehouse, Spencer, Evans, Reynolds, Cowan (James), Crabtree, Athersmith, Devey, Campbell, Wheldon and John Cowan.

Queen's Park did not have a goal scored against them during the first seven years of their career.

The collapse of one of the stands on the ground of the Glasgow Rangers' Club, at Ibrox Park, during the international match, England v Scotland, of 1902, caused the death of 25 persons, while 24 were dangerously injured, 168 seriously injured 153 injured, and 172 slightly injured, as classified by the police authorities.

On September 5, 1885, two Aberdeen clubs lost between them 71 goals in Scottish Cup ties. Bon Accord were defeated by Abroath by 36 goals to 0, and Aberdeen Rovers were defeated by Dundee Harp by 35 goals to 0.

The largest attendance at a football match was at Hampden Park, Glasgow, on 23rd March, 1912, when 127,307 persons attended the Scotland v. England game. The money drawn was £8,767 8s 3d—£5,077 8s. 9d. at the gates and £1,690 1s 6d. at stands and enclosures. The charge for admission was one shilling.

Joe Byrne Playing Great Ball in New Eastern League

Joe Myrne, who played third base for the Peterborough Canadian League team in 1913 and 1914, gets the following boost from the Philadelphia Ledger:

"Joe Byrne, the local boy who left the Brill team of the Delaware County League to join Bridgeport, of the new Eastern League, is playing brilliant ball. Joe has been assigned to the clean-up position in the batting order and has fulfilled expectations. There never was any doubt about Byrne's fielding ability, and if he continues to hit he should be a star in that league."

Fullerton Picks Both Boston Teams To Meet in Finals

Hugh S. Fullerton in the American Magazine makes the following prediction:

I have just telegraphed Amos Whipple, licensed victualler in Boston, to reserve for me a room with bath for the week of Oct. 6 to 13, and have asked Joe Lannin and Percy Haughton to hold for me seats in the press boxes during the world's championship series between the Boston Braves and the Boston Red Sox.

The "dope" declares that, for the first time since the civil war in Chicago resulting from the White Sox and Cubs playing for the world's championship, the big series will be played in one city. The Red Sox will win after a strenuous fight with the Detroit Tigers and the Chicago White Sox. New York Yankees, after being in the race up to the last month, will drop back and fight it out with St. Louis, which will be a contender during two-thirds of the season. In the National League the Braves will win rather handily, with Cincinnati the closest and hardest contended, the others in a close bunch, and Pittsburg trailing.

The first year I attempted this experiment I placed five of the eight clubs of the National League in the positions in which they finished. Next year, I placed Chicago second instead of third—otherwise the teams finished as I had figured them to do.

Peace Payments To Feds Held Up

NEW YORK, April 30.—Another phase of the Cincinnati peace agreement between organized baseball and the Federal League has come to light in the hitch over the payment of indemnity by the American and National Leagues to the Brooklyn, Newark, and Pittsburg Clubs of the independent organization. The attorneys for organized baseball have recommended that this money be not paid, because of Baltimore's repudiation of the terms of peace. It is understood that organized ball was to pay $350,000 to the Ward interests for Washington Park in Brooklyn, while Harry F. Sinclair was to receive about $75,000 for the Federal League establishment in Harrison, N.J., just outside of Newark. Edward W. Gwinner of the Pittsburg Feds was to be reimbursed to the amount of $50,000 for his losses in the Smoky City. The time is past when the first payments should be paid, and the reason for the delay is the action of the Baltimore Club in refusing to agree to the terms of peace, and also in bringing a suit in the Federal courts against organized ball.

In speaking about the situation yesterday, President John K. Tener of the National League said: "Each league understood that each of its clubs would carry out the terms of the agreement. The Baltimore Club was at that time one of the eight parts of the Federal League. In making the peace agreement the Federal League spoke for it and undertook to see to it that Baltimore should comply with the terms of the peace agreement.

"As is now well known," continued President Tener, "the Baltimore Federal League Club has not only refused to carry out the peace agreement, but has gone further and brought an action in the United States courts charging that the Federal League, by signing the Peace agreement, conspired with organized ball to injure and destroy the Federal Baltimore Club.

"It is apparent that the Federal League has not carried out the obligation it took in the peace agreement. The National and American Leagues naturally decline to pay for something that they have not received. Until the Federal League keeps its promises and secures from its constituent clubs an acceptance of the peace agreement, no payment will be made under the agreement.

"Is organized ball," asked President Tener, "obligated to pay for peace with the Federal League if one of the parts of the Federal League not only continues the fighting, but also attacks the peace agreement itself?"

BASEBALL

Frankie Smykal and Petie Powers were let out by Chattanooga after a month's trial because they "were too light." That reason might pass muster, but the real explanation is Kid Elberfield, an ex-big league player is manager of the club and has only won one game in the last seven starts, which means all the youngsters must go for older heads. There is not room for the kid ball player on a losing club with an old major leaguer in charge. He plays to experience every time. We cite the case of Joe Kelly at Toronto to verify the argument. Kelly had a club with a major league salary list for three years all old timers, and sacrificed youngsters to make room for them.—Ottawa Free Press.

CRUELTY OF GERMAN DOCTOR

NEW YORK, April 29.—After living for seven months in the German lines in Poland and being forced in that time to entertain in her home the Prussian officers, including von Hindenburg himself, Madame Laura de Turcynowicz, the Marquise de Gozdawa is back in New York, thankful that her former American citizenship obtained her rescue. She is the wife of a Polish agricultural scientist, who is now serving as Inspector of the Sanitary Service of one of the Russian armies, and as such might have had to remain a practical prisoner to the end of the war; but as she was Miss Laura Blackwell before she married, she was able with considerable difficulty to get permission to come back to this country.

Now she is planning to organize a society for the rehabilitation of her adopted land after the war. Her husband, who had been a professor of hydrotechnique at the University of Cracow, until he was recalled by the Petrograd authorities to takec harge of the agricultural work in the Governments of Suwalki and Lomza, is thoroughly acquainted with the wants of the peasants and small farmers, and she believes that if there are any Poles left when peace is declared, of which she is frankly skeptical, there will be the utmost need for assistance from this country to get Poland on its feet again.

At the outbreak of the war Mme. de turczynowicz was living at Suwalki, which is a town of about 30,000 people, a little to the northeast of the bulge which Poland makes in the western frontier of Russia. It is a great military centre with important barracks, and she lived with her husband and three children, a little girl of 6 and twin boys of 5, in a great rambling house on its own grounds not far from the outskirts.

The Marquise's Palace.

"They call it a palace; you would think it a great barn of a place," she said. "It had more than forty rooms and about twenty-six of them were habitable."

The imperial order against drink was issued and the Marquise described how the immense stocks of vodka wer taken out to a hillside. A regular ceremony took place, which she attended in her automobile, and as the casks were stove in and the fiery liquor ran down the hill the peasants knelt down and lapped, and when they could drink no more rolled in it.

So the miserabe swarm of peasants fled away to the east through mud and snow reaching to their waists, and Mme. de Turczynowicz was left in her great house with three children, sick unto death, and only a few servants to aid them.

"One night," she went on, "I heard a noise. I looked into our great salon, and found it packed with Russian soldiers. They were packed like sardines, and when I asked what they wanted, they kissed my hand and begged to be allowed to take shelter from the cold. I told them the cook would boil the samovar for them, and next morning the street outside was covered thick with soldiers, lying in every possible attitude.

"Murmur of Men in Distress."

"Then word came they were to retreat on a certain line. In a little while they were gone, not a man was to be seen. Two hours later there came a murmur, the murmur of men in distress. It was the same soldiers fixing back. The Germans had cut them off, and back they rushed through the storm to try another route, horse and foot and artillery, all mixed together, with just that murmur, the murmur of men in distress.

"When they were gone again the townspeople broke out. There were not many of them left, but they began to loot, breaking into the houses and shops and taking what they wanted. Suddenly the first of the 'pickelhauber' appeared. He came suddenly around a corner with his rifle ready, looking for a sniper. In a moment others seemd to spring up from all directions, and we were in the hands of the Germans. As an officer rode in, a Jewess stepped up to him and handed him a bundle of papers. It was a description of the town and all that was in it. She was a German spy."

The German troops were Prussians and Bavarians, and the Marquise did not seem to know which she disliked the more. She used to love Munich, she said, and its people, but somehow they seemed to be an altogether different people in wartime. Of her store of provisions she had given some to the Prussians in retreat. Nearly all the rest were taken by the invaders, and she does not know what she would have done if she had not secreted some in the room where her fevered children were.

"We had just one room," she said, "and Prussian officers occupied all the rest of the house. They began by looting it and packing up all the valuable antique furniture to send back to Germany. There was my portrait by a famous Polish artist. One officer cut it out of the frame, rolled it round a stick, and boxed up the frame, and then asked me whether I thought it would travel safely! As for the library, I cannot tell you how they treated that, how they pulled pages out of the books, and befouled everything."

A contribution of 200,000 rubles was levied on the town. Part of it Mme. de Turczynowicz paid; the rest was wrung from the people. For the next six months she was to act as the unwilling hostess of the enemy. She was dressed in her Red Cross uniform, and she held her own by her dignity and reserve.

"They are sometimes very stupid, those Prussians," she said, "and it is wonderful how you can keep them in their places."

For three or four days von Hindenburg was one of her "guests," and she, of course, saw something of him. When she was asked how he impressed her, she replied.

"He is just like his portraits. You can se for yourself. He is absolutely careless of the lives of his men. He is like the Crown Prince. He orders regiment after regiment forward and decides a position must be taken, regardless of what it costs.

"He was courteous enough to me. He sat at the head of the table and I at the coffee samovar at the other end, but while he was there all the talk was about him, about what he had done or what he was going to do. He was supremely egotistical."

One day one of Mme. de Trucznowicz's little boys was in a terrible condition. He needed an operation on one of his fingers and she asked the Commandant for a surgeon.

A German Surgeon's 'Operation'.

"He came at 9 o'clock at night," said the Marquise. "I had everything ready for him, but before he would do anything he demanded that I pay him 30 marks in gold. I protested that I had already paid nearly all I had to the contribution for the town, but he would not do anything until I had found the money for him. Then he took my little boy's finger and, without giving him anything to aid him, cut off the nail and deeply into the flesh with a pair of surgical scissors. He left it all raw and bleeding. 'You're a nurse; you can attend to it now,' he said and went off."

Mme. de Trucznowicz said this surgeon took away her maid and it was days before she could find her.

"I cannot tell you all about her," she said. "When her father saw her he was nearly beside himself with rage. Well, he is gone, now, too. They took him off to dig trench and I have never seen him since. I protested to the Commandant, but he said he could do nothing about the poor girl, as she belonged to the soldiers now. It is all part of their soldiers now. It is all part of their woman in whose house it happened, punished, but they would not punish the doctor. He was an officer, you see. Yes, I have heard of it happening to women of good position. It would be better to kill oneself at once."

"I think that doctor was the worst of all the Germans with whom I came in contact. He was so brutal that the was not permitted to serve in the Germans' own hospital, but was made chief of the lazarette for the Russian prisoners. The first thing he did was to demand a larger 'leichen Halle,' or morgue. You should have heard the other officers laugh over that, as though it were a fine joke. He would soon empty the hospital for them, they said.

"It was in that hospital that a Russian officer died because another doctor, a Herr Professor, refused to operate on his leg until he received a 200-mark fee. He had no money, and the other prisoners and sisters had to sign a note for the cash. But it took time to get the signatures, and gangrene will not wait for anybody. The money was raised but it was too late, and the officer died.

"No food was provided for the patients by the Germans and they were left to the tender mercies of the townspeople, themselves nearly starving. For the prisoners who could work the only daily ration was a small loaf of bread, which had to be divided among six men. Then after July 15th even this ration was stopped, and instead the prisoners were supposed to get 10 pfennigs each a day. Even when it was paid regularly, that did not go far with everything so terribly dear."

Orgy Over Lusitania News.

Mme. de Turczynowicz spoke of the drinking among the German officers, and said piles of bottles used to be carried from her house each day. Champagne and schnapps were their favourite beverages, and the night the news of the Lusitania was received was a regular orgy. They thought nothing of arousing her at 3 o'clock in the morning to make them coffee, but she remembers one act of kindness to her. The officers were drinking champagne when she was present and poured her out a glass. She poured it in a little bottle, saying she would keep it as a stimulant for the children at their critical moments. One of the Prussians then went off and got her a bottle to take to her room for this purpose.

All this time the Marquise was living within the sound of the guns. The first line of the German trenches was only five miles away, and the second and third lines about three, and the windows had to be kept open to prevent their being smashed by the concussion. Night after night she would sit in the darkness with her children listening to the cannonade. Gas and electricity, of course, there were none, and hardly any candles or oil.

After the children were a little better there came a day when the Russians made an advance. The Germans had everything packed ready to retire and the guns came nearer and nearer.

"Then they began to grow fainter again," said Mme. de Turczynowicz. "It was awful. A Prussian officer came to my room and said 'The Russians are running.' 'They are not running,' said one of my little boys, and the officer was furious. 'You ought to whip him,' he cried, and he went after him with a stick. I told him that the little lad—he was only 5—could hardly walk after typhus, and I dared him lay his hand on him. I got the man away, but that's the way they were, most of them."

Then the Marquise told of the treatment of the Russian prisoners, and how she had seen them harnessed to the guns to save the horses.

"It's an awful thing" she said, "to see a man harnessed like a beast. Then one day a lot of Russions were coming through half starved. I sent my little girl down with bread to give them. You should have seen the poor fellows leap on it.

"A soldier saw one prisoner with a chunk and he snatched it from him and ground it under his heel. The Russian, with a cry, threw himself down to pick it from the mud. The brute of a soldier kicked him in the mouth and knocked out his teeth. My poor little girl saw it all and I ran down to help her. An officer came up to know what the trouble was about. He just shrugged his shoulders, said it was forbidden to give anything to prisoners, but he would have the Russian soldier punished.

"That's just like the Germans. It is all their 'system.' They will punish one of their men for you, but the 'system' goes on!"

Mme. de Turczynowcz declared that many of the prisoners were killed in cold blood. "They got tired," the Prussian officers would say in extenuation.

—Then there were the few wretched peasants who were left. She saw the Germans drag the Jews through the streets with halters around their necks, and she told how in the Spring of last year the Commandant announced that every farmer must pay 25 marks for seed and 2 marks for the use of a horse, that is, of his own horse, and must plant his fields under pain of forfeiture. Somehow or other the peasants scraped the money together and then, when the harvest came, another order was issued. Any Pole who dug up one potato, pulled a handful of beans or cut any wheat would be subject to all the penalties of military discipline. The peasants were robbed of the very crops they had had to plant.

Peasants Dying Like Flies.

"They were dying like flies," said Mme. de Turczynowicz, "when I left. There may be a few left. I don't know. I am sure that it would be useless now to send them relief, for the Germans would take everything we provided, but I do hope with the help of my husband, who knows them so well, to do something for these miserable people when peace is restored."

As the hot weather came the Marquise's little children, weakened by typhus and with nothing to eat but black bread, got dysentery. It would have been their death, if they had stayed on(and at last through the Spanish Embassy she obtained her permission to leave. She had to come away alone, without even a nurse, and received accommodation merely in a military train. The last thing she saw as she left her home at Suwalki was her grand piano standing in the grounds with a leg smashed and its cover split with the rain and the sun.

"At the beginning of July," she said, "they gave the soldiers a spree. For two days they lay around drunk with beer, hogsheads and hogsheads of it. They carried the piano out into the open and no one cared to bring it back again."

It was in Germany itself that Mme. de Turczynowicz received her worst fright. By her aloofness and unfailing courage she had kept the Prussian officers at arm's length and none had dared to offer her insult. She had kyet to meet the German women.

"We had to change cars one morning," she said, "and the officer in charge of us did not give us even a seat to rest on. One of my little boys was so weak I had to carry him in my arms and the little girl sat on the cold platform. We were in a corner, and there were a number of German women of all classes waiting for a train of wounded.

"We had been warned not to speak English or Polish, but tired, sick little children cannot be careful. They cried to me in English and in a minute the women were around me.

"'An Englander!' they screamed. I said I was an American. 'That is all the same,' they said. I thought they would pull me to pieces, until the officer came up and drove them away."

In Berlin the Marquise had to go to a third-rate hotel where a number of Russians were interned. Although she was permitted to move round the city, she had to report to the police every hour by telephone, and if she was in a store her own word was not enough and the proprietor had to vouch for her presence. At last when everything seemed settled for her departure for Holland, she was told she must have a personal identification as a former American.

"I was in despair," she said. "But what do you think happened? An official was sent down from the American Consulate and as soon as he saw me he exclaimed. 'Why, Miss Blackwell, I remember your singing here "The Star-Spangled Banner" eight or nine years ago.' Wasn't that providential?"

The Marquise spoke of the bread riots in Berlin on Sept. 12, the day before she arrived. They have been denied officially, but she was told in Berlin itself of how the women clamoured before the Palace and were ridden down by the police, and she remarked on the deadness of the streets, the absence of horses, and thes mall number of persons walking about, as compared with her memories of former visits.

So at length she reached safety in Holland, but not without the indignity of being stripped at the frontier. "My clothes," she said, "were thrown out to men and examined. They ripped up the linings and turned them inside out, and the clothes came back in sags. We were scarecrows as we got over the border."

But her baggage did not come. She wanted to wait for it as it contained one very valuable sable cloak and the little fur coats of her children.

"They told us we could have everything not contraband—after the war!" she concluded.

FIRING AT THE BELL HE KILLED THE COW

TWEED, May 1.—How he fired at a bell hanging around a cow's neck and killed the cow was explained in det'l by one Albert Sanford, a miner, when arrested by Provincial Inspector Reburn, Toronto, and Chief Constable Wilson, Tweed, in connection with the killing of a number of cattle on a ranch belonging to H. A. Jefkins, a former Toronto man.

The cattle were killed in July last, but only a few days ago was application made for a special officer to investigate. Albert Sanford appeared before Magistrate Masson at Belleville, and remanded until May 5. He admitted killing the one cow with the bell about its neck, but claims he knows nothing of the killing of any others.

ODDFELLOWS ATTEND DIVINE WORSHIP IN TRINITY CHURCH

Inspiring Address by the Rev. J. P. Wilson--"He is No Man at All Who Puts His Socie.y or Club Before His Home"---Fraternal Organizations Have a Mission to Perform

"Organized benevolence" was the appellation used by the Rev. J. P. Wilson in describing the activities of the Independent Order of Oddfellows during the course of a stirring address to the members of the Otonabee and Peterborough lodges, who, last evening, attended Trinity Methodist Church in a body. The members congregated in the lodge rooms at the corner of George and Hunter Streets and paraded to the church. Considering the inclement weather, the attendance was large. On behalf of the officials of the church, Mr. Wilson extended the visiting brethren a warm welcome. His text was taken from Isaiah 41: 6, "They helped every one his neighbour; and every one said to his brother, Be of good courage."

A Wise Provision.

"One of the wisest provisions that could be made is to help one another," said the speaker. "In the words of the text, 'Be of good courage.' Such organizations as we have here with us this evening have a mission to perform. Men bond themselves together for mutual benefit. A man who makes no provision for himself or family in time of sickness or distress ought to be ashamed of himself. The present age finds the social standard completely changed to what it was some years ago. We have a broader outlook, and the pace is much faster. This condition has given rise to many social and fraternal organizations. The latter cannot take the place of the divine institution. The doors of the latter are open to all, whereas the doors of a fraternal organization are open only to men of certain physical qualifications. Remember the three choicest words in the English language — mother, home, and heaven. He is no man at all who puts his society or club before his home."

Improve Society.

"War is a great leveller," said the Rev. Mr. Wilson. "One of the effects of the present catastrophe may be to improve society and establish a greater democracy. Two nurses were on their way to the pest house, wherein was a number of cases of small-pox. A man remarked to them —'I wouldn't go in their for a thousand dollars.' 'Neither would I,' was the reply. 'We are going in there for humanity's sake.'

"Men need encouragement. Man cannot live by bread alone. Friendship, love and truth form the basis of oddfellowship. It can be said to the credit of the members comprising the Order that they carry out in a practical and consistent form, the principles and precepts of oddfellowship," said the speaker in conclusion.

Sinn Feiners in Cork Planned To Rebel Too But Were Too Late

LONDON, May. 1.—"We planned to rise simultaneously with our Dublin comrades but something went wrong with the arrangements,' 'said a leader of the Sinn Feiners in Cork in an interview published here to-day.

"We might have been in possession of the post office but for the fact that the military was there first," added the leader. "Now I do not think we will rise here, but if they come to demand our arms we shall shoot them. When the news of the Dublin rising trickled through here Monday, we all retired to our armored barracks, loaded our rifles, polished bayonets, set in stores of provisions and prepared for ———anything.

"The bishop of Cork and the lord mayor came to the barracks at midnight and demanded admission which was granted after considerable parley. They implored us to lay down our arms and not to resort to physical force. We refused absolutely. Sorrowfully and with bowed head, the bishop said, 'Then I leave you to your fate.' We told him we did not fear our fate, whereupon he departed.

HEARS HUSBAND CALLING AS HE DIES IN FRANCE

MONTREAL, May 1.—To hear her husband calling to her three times distinctly on the same night he died of wounds in France is the strange experience of Mrs. James E. Gillard of 1028 St. Andre street. Pte .Gillard succumbed to gunshot wounds, which penetrated the abdomen and shoulder, on Sunday, April 16. At two o'clock she was reading in her bedroom when clearly an ddistinctly she heard him call: "Laura! Laura!!" Just as she realised that it was her husband calling, she heard it again, less distinctly calling "Laura!". She jumped up and turned around, only to find herself looking out of an open window into the night. Then her nerves overwrought by many sleepless night's of worry, gave way completely, and the other members of the family found her calling out wildly to her husband.

To-day Mrs. Gillard received word that her husband was dead.

HIGH HONOUR FOR GENERAL PETAIN

PARIS, May 1—Generals Petain Balfournier and Claret re la Touche have been placed on the special roll of the Legion of Honour for Grand Officers for conspicuous services at Verdun. The inscription relating to General Petain says:

"A general officer of the greatest valor since the beginning of the campaign, he has not ceased as a commander of brigade, division, army corps and army to give proof of most remarkable military qualities. Thanks to his calm firmness and the skillfulness of his di positions he know how to retrieve a delicate situation and inspire confidence in all. He has thus rendered the country most conspicuous services."

FIRST ANNUAL MEETING OF THE PATRIOTIC SOCIETY

The first annual meeting of the Women's Patriotic League of Ashburnham will be held to-morrow afternoon at four o'clock in the workroom. A large attendance is requested.

850 dressings, 12 x 16, 1,275 compresses, 2900 sponges, 24 bed jackets 24 suits of pyjamas, 6 many tailed bandages, twelve linen wash cloths, 150 mouth wipes, and sixty wash cloths.

The public is again reminded of the collection of old papers and magazines to be made by the Society this month.

THIS MORNING'S POLICE COURT

In this morning's police court a blacklister was fined ten dollars for being under the influence of liquor while on the prohibited list. The man who supplied him was fined twenty-five dollars.

SOLDIER HURT IN RESTAURANT

An altercation in a local restaurant on Saturday night between two members of the 93rd Battalion resulted in one of them receiving a bad cut on the forehead by being struck by a tumbler. The injured soldier is in Nicholls Hospital, where the cut was dressed. There were many rumours around the streets to-day and the public will be glad to know that the case is not as serious as some people have been stating.

Meeting of the City Council

The regular monthly meeting of the City Council will be held this evening. The budget consists of routine business which will be followed by a meeting of the Committee of the Whole. The latter will likely be held in camera as it concerns the outfall sewer and disposal plant.

NOT KNOWN AT FIRST.

Casement Altered His Appearance by Shaving Beard and Moustache.

New York, May 1.—The World correspondent in London hears Sir Roger's identity was not recognized when he was first arrested, as he had greatly altered his appearance by shaving his beard and moustache. On his arrival in Dublin he was recognized and admitted his identity. He was even then in bad nervous shape, and steadily grew worse, being now in a condition of collapse.

There is a fierce demand in London for Sir Roger Casement's rapid trial and execution. The evidence against him in his own writings and acts since the war began is now reported to have been supplemented by a complete statement furnished by him since his arrival in London.

Elizabeth Spencer

A number of prominent musicians and music lovers have been fortunate in receiving invitations to a private hearing at the Collegiate Hall, next Wednesday evening, at which Mr. John Allan, President of the Peterborough Choral Society, will introduce Miss Elizabeth Spencer, the popular soprano.

Miss Spencer is one of the most popular sopranos in New York, but she has not before had much opportunity to tour as her engagements in New York, have occupied much of her time.

Miss Spencer is an artist of distinction, who combined musicianship of a superior order with a voice of rare beauty. She is one of the most versatile artists now before the public, and has a voice of remarkable range, singing soprano, mezzo-soprano, and contralto selections with equal facility and correct tone production.

We understand that Miss Spencer, will in some way, attempt the seemingly impossible feat of singing duets with herself.

and priests and the Royal Irish Constabulary are doing their utmost to disseminate this information.

"As regards the situation in Dublin, rebels from the areas of Sackville street, the post-office and the Four oCurts are surrendering freely. More incendiary fires took place in Sackville street last night, but the fire brigade is now able to resume work.

"It is further reported that up to the present 707 prisoners have been taken, including among those is the Countess Markievics.

"The rebels at Enniscorthy are reported to be still in possession of this place, and a mixed column of cavalry, infantry and artillery, including 4.7 guns, has been sent from Wexford with a view of engaging the rebels. The latest information from Enniscorthy shows that the rebel leaders at this place does not believe the rDH at this place does not believe the rebel leaders' message from Dublin, and has proceeded to that city in a motor car under escort to verify the inform tion. In the meantime a truce exists.

"A deputation for a similar purpose from the rebels at Ashbourne (County Meath) has als obeen sent to Dublin. At Galway the rebel sare believed to be disbanding, and few arrests have been made.

"At New Ross, Gorey, Wicklow, B genalstown and Arklow the situation is reported normal. Carlow and Dungarvin are believed to be quiet."

After Resisting For 143 Days General Townshend Was Compelled To Surrender

Resisted With a Gallantry and Fortitude That Will Be Forever Memorable---Exhaustion of Supplies

LONDON, May 1.—The following official announcement has been made .."After a resistance protracted for 143 days, and conducted with a gallantry and fortitude that will be forever memorable, General Townshend has been compelled, by the final exhaustion of his supplies, to surrender.

Before doing so he destroyed his guns and munitions.

"The force under him consists of 2,970 British troops of all ranks and services, and some 6,000 Indian troops and their followers."

The Constantinople report via Berlin, says: The Vice-Chief Commander of the Turkish forces operating in Mesopotamia reports that General Townshend with a force of 13,300 men, constituting the English garrison at Kut-el-Amara, has surrendered unconditionally, to the Turkish command.

Genral Townshend probably was driven to surrender to avoid starvation of his forces. A recent official Turkish communication said that the position of the British at Kut-el-Amara was critical, and that they were expecting to receive small supplies of food by aeroplane. An official statement received yesterday from London showed that a last effor to send supplies to the garrison had failed. It was announced that a ship laden with supplies, which had been sent up the Tigris, had grounded about four miles east of the city.

Relief Not Far Away.

Less than a score of miles away, on the banks of the Tigris below the city, is a relief army which for months had been attempting to reach the besieged forces of Gen. Townshend. Recently several victories were announced and hope ran high in England that the mission would succeed. Of late, however, the Turks' resistance has increased and, aided by floods, they have been able to hold the British in check.

It should not be forgotten in regard to this campaign in Mesopotamia that form the Persian Gulf to a point north of Basra the British victories have resulted in the capture of some 300 miles of territory from the Turks. This territory is firmly occupied.

No official figures have been given out as to the number of troops which set forth from the Persian Gulf in November of 1914 on the expedition which has now ended in surrender. Unofficially the number has been estimated as high as 50,000, but it was probably considerably smaller than this. This force has suffered heavy losses in severe battles iwth the Turks.

Turks Play Waiting Game.

It was early in December of last year that General Townshend's army retreated to Kut-el-Amara. Since that time it has been besieged by a large army of Turks,cut off from all communication with the outside world except by wireless. During the long siege the British beat off many attacks by the Turks. They defended themselves so successfully in encounters about the city that the Turks at length desisted from their efforts to take the place by storm and decided to starve out the British. From time to time Gen. Townshend sent reports that all was well, but it had been known of late that the situation was becoming a desperate one for the British.

Successful at First.

For some time after the Townshend expedition started out from the Persian Gulf it was steadily successful. It pushed up the Tigris and Euphrates until, in September of 1915, it defeated the Turks decisiv ly in an encounter at Kut-el-Amara, which later was to be the scene of the British surrender. Then the invaders pushed on to within a few miles of Bagdad, their goal. They defeated the Turks at Ctesiphon, but later the Turks, reinforced, compelled them to retire hastily to Kut-el-Amara.

The battle at Ctesiphon was one of the fiercest of many struggles in which the expeditionary force was engaged. The British were said to have been outnumbered six times by the Ottoman troops. Four times General Townshend rallied his men and led them in their charge. Hardly less desperate a venture was the retreat to Kut-el-Amara, which, accomplished under extraordinary disadvantages, was hailed in England as a remarkable achievement. Not only did General Townshend ward off the pursuing Turks with comparatively small losses, but he succeeded in taking with him all his wounded.

Losses Very Heavy.

A few weeks after it became evident that the army at Kut-el-Amara would be unable to fight its way out a relief expedition was despatched. This force encountered comparatively little opposition in the early stages of the march up the river, but as it drew nearer Kut-el-Amara it was opposed by formidable bodies of Turks, who were massed on both sides of the Tigris below the invested town. Several striking victories for the relief force were announced, but their last efforts have been countered by the Turks so successfully that the advance has been stopped.

During the Mesopotamia campaign there have been several changes in the important commands. General Nixon, who was in chief command and who, it is said, insisted upon Townshend going beyond Kut-el-Amara against the latter's wishes, refired, and Gen. Lake has lately been in full charge. General Aylmer in command of the force trying to relieve Kut-el-Amara, was succeeded by Lieut. Gen. Gorringe.

Throughout the Mesopotamia campaign the fighting has been heavy, and the losses severe. On April 14 it was admitted the Tigris army up to that time had lost 8,100 men. Since then there have been several important battles between the Turks and he lief expedition.

The surrender of Gen. Townshend is one of the few instances of the war in which an entire fighting unit of important numbers has laid down its guns.

A Difficult Campaign.

Up to the last General Townshend kept alive the hope that he would be relieved. King George sent a message of encouragement to him a month ago, and in a message sent on April 7 the General said he expected to be relieved shortly. He assured the British expedition that he would hold out to the limit of endurance, but the recent reverses suffered by the army which was attempting to rescue him, apparently made the situation a hopeless one.

The Mesopotamia campaign has been one of the most difficult th. British army has undertaken during the war. The torrid climate and lack of fresh water, together with the difficulties of transport, made great calls on the endurance of the troops. Moreover, the positions held by the Turks below Kut-el-Amara, entrenched and strongly fortified, were most formidable. The original expedition was composed in part of Indian troops, but the relief force for the most part was made up of men from Britain and the colonies.

surprised to get this letter, but as I am Bruce's pal and helped him to the dressing station, he asked me to let you know that he was wounded through the right shoulder, but not seriously. He will not be able to write or use his arm for some time, but I hope you won't worry, as he is safe in England now. I am looking after his personal belongings for him and have a prayer book given to him by you when he was twenty. Bruce was hit while we were bombing the Germans, but he was as cool as if nothing had happened. Well I guess this is all for now. I remain,

Yours sincerely,

Lieut. Gardiner and the Signallers of the 93rd Battalion are rejoicing to-day over the arrival of the balance of their equipment. Field telephones, etc. have all been received and the Signal Section is now ready for work. The Non-Coms have received wrist watches, and compasses, etc., have been issued to the staff signallers.

Lieut. Crisp and Sergt. Webb of the 93rd Machine Gun section are absent on leave and the section is in charge of Corp. S. Anderson today.

The local members of C and D Companies of the 93rd Battalion who have been living at home, will receive a taste of barracks life during the next couple of weeks. C and D Companies, including the outside detachments are to occupy the Armouries, while A and B Companies, the greater number of whom are Peterborough men, will be allowed to live at home for the balance of the Battalion's stay in Peterborough.

The Bugle Band of the 93rd Battalion will leave at noon to-morrow for Havelock. They will march over to Norwood with the Havelock detachment to-morrow afternoon and on Wednesday will lead the Norwood and Havelock detachments on their march into Peterborough.

In to-day's orders appear the promotion to the rank of Sergeant of P. T. Martin, the Peterborough reservist, who, after service at the front, in the present war with the Rifle Brigade, and being invalided home underwent an operation in order to re-enlist with the 93rd. The Peterborough Battalion now has in its ranks four veterans who have been at the front in the present war, the others being Co. Sergt.-Major Jack Playford, D Company; Sergt. Chas Payne, B Company; and Sergt. Chas. Webb, Machine Gun Section.

Mrs. McKinlay, Margaret Avenue has received the following:

Dear Friend,—Just a line, thanking you for the socks I received with your address in them. I thought it so kind of you to remember us boys out here. I am sure the ladies of Peterborough are doing all in their power to keep the boys in comfort while we are out here. I remain,

MAN MAY BE A MONKEY

But a Monkey Can Never Be a Man, Scientists are Told.

While man may go on making a monkey of himself, there is no chance for any monkey to make a man of himself.

This scientific deduction was presented to distinguished savants in Philadelphia by Dr. William H. Furness after years of research among anthropoids. His observations were made in a paper, read at the opening session of the American Philosophical Society.

Dr. Furness is the owner and biographer of Mimi, a remarkable chimpanzee that had the distinction of appearing in the movies before the most select audience.

Dr. Furness has been five years trying to teach an articulate language to Mimi, and at the end of this period her vocabulary comprises two words, "Papa" and "Cup." She can distinguish colours and has a peculiar aptitude for picking out objects by their size and shape.

Her owner believes that no ape can be taught an articular language, but that these anthropoids have reason, without association of ideas. They are governed largely by instinct and little by reason, he thinks.

OF

DRESSY WASH FABRICS

TO-DAY is May Day; the crowning of the May Queen and Dance around the May Pole are almost extinct but still celebrated in some parts of England. It is an old custom descended from the Druids. The Queen of the May was the most winsome Miss in the community and wore the floral wreath and reigned over her mock court of gleeful followers. If you wish to be clad in the splendor of a May Queen our complete stock of Wash Fabrics affords you every opportunity.

The GRESSMAN Company Limited

The Voyage of the 59th On Board the Olympic

Interesting Description of the Quick Passage Made by Eastern Ontario Battalion by Sergt.-Major Harry Wilford, of Peterboro'.

OVER 700 ON BOARD

Mrs. Wilford, 59 Olive avenue has received the following interesting description of the voyage of the 59th Battalion on the steamer Olympic from her husband, Sergt Major Harry Wilford:—

March 30th—Left Brockville, 12:30 a.m.; April 1st—Arrived at Halifax, 3:00 a.m.; April 1st—Embarked on the Olympic, 4 p.m.; April 20th—Left the dock to take in coal in the harbour, continued taking on supplies and coal until Wednesday 3|4|16 which will give you some idea of the size of this vessel, which is the 74th vessel afloat for size. We have on board 6,500 troops not including the crew of 700, so you will see she is some boat. 4 and one-half times round her promanade deck equals 1 mile and for magnificent fitting I never saw anything to equal it in the line of boats. She would certainly be some prize for the Germans if they could get her. We have 7 sleeping decks and crowded at that.

April 5th: Set said 9:15 in a stiffish wind, we had been out two hours when a fair sized patrol boat came along side to take off the pilot, and by misfortune they got in too close and the wind and suction drew her right into us, we smashed her life boats and wireless gear ,and apoilt her rigging, and she also cleared off two of our life boats which we left floating behind and finally she got clear of us without any further misfortunes. Well away we went again at a good clipping rate, and when I tell you that she came from Liverpool to Halifax in four and one-half days you bet she can go some, everything went smoothly the rest of the day.

April 6th: Morning broke with a heavy mist on the water; ship slowed down to half speed; spent the morning in getting allotted to our emergency positions in case of fire, collision, or submarine attacks; afternoon we had two alarm calls to see that every one knew his place, spent the rest of the day getting into shape and making ourselves comfortable. In the evening every man aboard had to fit on his life belt and no man must be without it, at night he must place it close to his head in case it's wanted.

April 7th: Morning dawned with the mist worse than ever, impossible to see half the ships length, going very slow ,with the Captain steering due south to get clear of the fog. Towards ten o'clock we got into finer weather when the Olympic was set going and she can go I tell you. Afternoon spent in physical drill and an alarm call with all water tight doors closed, etc. This morning we mounted an armed guard of sixty men along the upper decks on the look out for "Subs" and I fancy they would stand and the twenty-six inch guns we have mounted.

April 8th: Nothing of any importance. The ship bowling along at twenty-five knots an hour. Every man forced to wear life belts whether he wanted or not. Alarm sounded in the afternoon.

We spent the afternoon in sports, forgetting the tug of war. I managed to win a box of cigars, rest of hte day uneventful.

April 9th: Beautiful weather, still going for all we are worth, several lectures on discipline, no smoking at nights, all lights out, several men up for not going to meals, with the belts on, so you see we are getting a bit stiff now that we are nearing the danger zone, all men bathing in a large salt water bath on board. I plunged in with my wrist watch on, "Poor wrist watch will have to go to the watch maker when we arrive in England."

April 10th: The ship still going some with the weather turning colder and damp. 11:45 a.m. we were met by an escort of two torpedo boat destroyers, we seemed no sooner to see them on the horison than they were alongside of us, one on each side, so you see we have company to look after us so we feel perfectly safe with the exception of mines; 3:30 p.m.—off the southwest coast of Ireland, the old land looks good, at first sight after six years absence, we are all on tiptoe now to know where we are going to land. 6:30 p.m.—still beating around the coast of Ireland with more cruisers keep looking at us now and again, night set in with slight rain and mist.

April 11th: Morning nice and fine still plugging away, but we don't know where but know we are not far from England; 7:30 a.m. Land in sight, we are told its the Welsh coast found out it is Holyland.

8:30 a.m.: Took the pilot aboard and passed the Formly Light ship so now we know we are bound for Liverpool. Escort left us and beat it away down the Irish Sea. We very soon passed over the Bar and passed into the Mersey. Everyone seems jubilant to see the Old Land once more, and quite a sight to see so much shipping and I am sure the Canadians were surprised as they were when we landed and they saw the country and towns. 10:30 a.m. when we pulled up along side the Princess landing stage Liverpool disembarked and so brought to a close our trip from Halifax to Liverpool, in six day's sailing which you must admit is good going.

A RAPID FIRE TORPEDO FOR SUBMARINE WORK

Torpedoe tubes are the sole reason for the existence of the submarines, but their efficiency is entirely dependent upon the possibility of firing torpedoes in a given direction.

Owing to the limited field of vision and reduced under-water speed, the attacking position of a submerged submarine must be pre-established when the boat is running on the surface and maintained while diving. It is thus evident that only the torpedoe tubes bearing in the direction in which the attack has been prepared during surface navigation, have a chance of delivering a successful blow.

Thus, the primary offensive value of submarines depends upon the number of torpedoes which can be discharged in the shortest period of time in a given direction.

Until very recently, each torpedoe tube of a submarine had to be loaded on the single shot principle, much on the name principle as loading the old style single shot rifle. Years ago, the old style single shot rifle was discarded for the magazine type or rapid-fire rifle.

Very recently a rapid fire mechanism has been developed for the loading and firing of torpedoes, which enables the rapid loading and discharge of six torpedoes from the same torpedoe tube in rapid succession. It comprises a revoluble torepdoe cradle directly in the rear of the torpedoe tube provided with six torpedoe chambers in its circumference, so placed that they come into direct alinement with the torpedoes tube as the cradle is revolved, on the same principle as a revolver cylinder. To each torpedoe chamber is connected a compressed air chamber and a suitable valve mechanism works automatically to discharge each torpedoe from its chamber the instant it is alined with the torpedoe tube. In substance the new arrangement is a mammoth revolver in which torpedoes take the place of bullets. If the torpedoe tube is aimed right, with this new invention, there is very little hope of escape for the vessel attacked.

Disgusted By Wife's Dancing, Mr. Earle Says, in Affidavit

White Plains, N.Y., May 1.—To his wife's fondness for dancing and the disgust he felt at seeing her thus in the company of other men, Theodore Landsbury Earle, son of Ellis Potter Earle, a wealthy banker of Montclair, N.J., attributed the estrangement which led to her action for a separation, according to his affidavit made public in the Supreme Court here today.

Although Mr. Earle denied the assertion taht he had an income of $20,000 a year, Justice Platt granted Mrs. Earle, who was Miss Hester Renwick, $50 a week alimony, and $750 counsel fee pending trial of the action. Mr. Earle has stated that he has brought a counter action for divorce against his wife.

In his denial of Mrs. Earle's charges of "cruel and inhuman" treatment, and that he was unreasonably jealous Mr. Earle asserted that his wife on two occasions had told him that a young man had attempted familiarities with her. He denied that he had snubbed persons that came to their house.

"My wife appeared to be much attracted by young men, and she permitted more familiarities than I have been accustomed to seeing in my own family or among my acquaintances," said Mr. Earle. "I frequently remonstrated with her for the open freedom of her conduct with young men, as it was not becoming in a married woman and a mother."

Mr. Earle also declared that Mrs. Earle was inordinately fond of dancing and that he did not relish her doing so "promiscuously." He said that he did not refuse to go to dances with his wife, but usually accompanied her.

"I do not doubt," he said, "that my expression betrayed the disgust I felt at seeing her embraced."

Mr. Earle said that he and Mrs. Earle lived at the rate of $700 a month at their home in White Plains, but said that he had to borrow from his mother. He had been paying Mrs. Earle $200 a month for the support of herself and one child, he said, the other child being under his own care.

Increase in Price Of Canned Goods

The Market Situation—Butter Appears to Be On the Toboggan

All the indications point to a marked increase in the price of canned goods, both fish and vegetables. So far as the latter are concerned the market has been firming up for some time and tomatoes, peas and corn are all quoted higher this week by wholesalers. One of the chief reasons for a continued shortage in canned vegetables is the scarcity of labor on the farms. Apparently the farmers and vegetable growers generally do not see their way to taking care of a great harvest of this kind in the fall, and are therefore not expected to plant much. A general scarcity in spot stocks of the three vegetables mentioned is apparent from coast to coast, and all markets are firming up now. There have been two or three advances within the last month or so; one last week of 5c in tomatoes and 2 1-2c in corn and peas. Canned salmon is also firming up and advancing, particularly in the Montreal market. Apparently stocks are scarce as buying is heavy, because the stocks in the retailers 'hands have been depleted.

THE BUTTER S'TUATION.

Butter appears definitely to be on the toboggan. The prices went down with a bump this week and creamery is quoted a couple of cents lower than last week. The make is said to be unusually large and and the demand rather dull for the time of the year. Creamery butter is of very fine quality but even at that is not fetching high prices. The fact of the matter is, produce men say ,that butter has definitely started on its downward trend and will go on getting lower until it touches the bottom. On account of the pronounced easiness in butter cheese has firmed up and is quoted a trifle higher this week. The domestic demand is not heavy but the export demand is, and the boards all report firmness and strength above what we have been accustomed to for the last four or five weeks.

New-laid eggs are now coming in very freely and apparently the supply is well able to take care of the consumption. In addition to this it is said that egg men will soon be putting eggs away for storage. Deliveries are heavy and the demand right now will not be as heavy as during the days of Lent.

—The lapsing of Lent has affected several lines, one of which is pork products. Breakfast bacon, the sale of which together with cooked meats, is is somewhat curtailed in Lent, has been boosted this first week after Lent Lent, and a firmness from the supply point of view added to this extra demand has meant an advance in price. The pork product market generally is fairly firm with many lines a little higher. Hogs, on the other hand, are a trifle easier.

Sugar keeps up its reputation and once more is up ten cents. The situation is very firm.

TURK'S FUTURE AN UNCERTAIN MATTER

Has No Place to go Should Enemies Drive Him from His Present Habitations.

NEW YORK, May 1.—Somewhere about four hundred years ago, observes the Birmingham Ledger, the Turks came down from Central Asia, sweeping all before them and overflowed the heart of the world, as Asia Minor and the plains north and northeast of Constantinople was then They went on as far as the plains of Hungary and stopped at Vienna. They didn't know the way back home, and they stayed where they stopped

For all those centuries the Turk has been a blight on all the land he controlled. He took the plains of Macedonia, once the best land in Europe, and he blighted it. Good land makes good people, but he reduced those plains to patches and the people to half-hearted paupers. He did the same to the rich lands about Smyrna, once the garden spot of the earth.

The great plains of Mesopotamia was for ages the very centre of civilization Under the Turk it is a wilderness and the miserable shepherds feed goats over land that would feed a population of millions and that has done so. The Turk has desolated the land that supported Babylon, Nineveh and Palmyra. He is a blight. He is not fit to govern any land.

If the Allies keep him out of Europe and Russia drives him from Asia Minor and Syria, where shall he go? The world owes him nothing. Not one thing human, animal or vegetable owes anything to the Turk. Really, there is no place on the earth for the blight. He shall not rule, and he is not worth anything as a citizen. When this war is over his power for wrong doing will be gone, and better men will take charge of his wonderful estate. The world doesn't need him. He belongs to an age that is passed.

ARNOLD WHITRIDGE GAINS BRITISH MILITARY CROSS

LONDON, April 29.—Among those who received the Military cross in a recent presentation of decorations by the Division General in the presence of units of the fighting force was Second Lieut. Arnold Whitridge, Yale '14, son of F. W. Whitridge of New York, President of the Third Avenue Railway Company.

Lieutenant Whitridge received the decoration for having directed the fire of his battery during a hot period of the recent fighting from a forward observing station, with the German trenches only 100 yards away. He is one of the group of young American college men who have been with the British artillery since early in the war. One of this number was Wm. Montague Nicholls, who was a student at Annapolis Academy, but resigned to go to the front, Nicholls was killed in action near Loos last fall.

WED 46 YEARS, ASKS DIVORCE

California Milliner at 70 Wants to Begin Life Anew.

Three score years and ten is looked on as the allotted span of life, but Mrs. Emma Mills, a white haired little milliner of San Mateo, Cal., has reached this age and come to the determination that she wants to begin life anew and divorce the husband whom she married in England forty-six years ago. In the interim she has become a great-grandmother

Judge Graham denied her petition for a divorce, but instructed the attorneys to prepare a property settlement and let the aged couple spend their remaining years apart if they so desire.

Mrs. Mills accused her husband, Charles Mills, of cruelty, and said that he neglected her to be in the society of his niece, Miss Florence Fyson, who also is in the millinery business.

"We are separated," she said, "and now he is doing the same things for her he used to do for me running errands and sweeping out the place."

POLICE HEAD LEADS IN A MURDER CHASE

New York, May 1.—Frank Hague, Commissioner of Public Safety of Jersey City and one of the leading democratic politicians of Hudson county, led a band of Newark and Jersey City detectives last night in the stirring pursuit and arrest of a man accused of the murder of Frank Kinney, formerly a member of the County Democratic Committee of Hudson.

Mr. Kinney attached to the State Department of Health, was returning to his home in Jersey City Heights, with Mrs. Kinney last Friday night, they having been at a theatre, when a man leaving a saloon insulted Mrs. Kinney. As Mr. Kinney pushed him away he shot Mr. Kinney through the heart and fled.

Since then the police had been closely watching the home of Michael Rambolo, at No. 99 Boyd avenue, Jersey City. Two boys called there late yesterday for Rombolo's clothes. Commissioner Hague who has taken a personal interest in finding the slayer of his friend, and Lieut. Thomas Collins, with two detectives, followed the two boys.

They went to a grocery store at No. 121 South Canal street, Newark. In the meantime the Newark police had been notified and they sent half a dozen detectives to aid in getting Rambolo. As Commissioner Hague and the detectives followed the boys into the store Rambolo jumped thro' a rear window and ran across lots and a play ground with Mr. Hague leading the detectives in the chase.

After a pursuit of about two blocks the Commissioner asked Detective Quinn of Newark, if he should shoot at Rambolo.

"No, we'll get him without shooting," Quinn said.

Two blocks more and Mr. Hague was upon Rambolo, who tried to reach a heavy pistol in his pocket. The Commissioner quickly had his pistol at the man's throat and theratened to shoot but Rambolo dodged and then followed a struggle in which the detectives aided Mr. Hague in disarming and overpowering the prisoner. He was then taken back to Jersey City and locked up on a charge of murdering Mr. Kinney.

Child Dies From Eating Poison in Candy

Philadelphia, May 1.—Two-year-old Howard Depew died in convulsions at his home last night after eating poison tablets accidentally mixed in a box of Easter candy. His four-year-old brother Roland is being watched by the physicians who fear that he may meet the same fate.

Both children ate quantities of the poison, a slow-acting chemical, last Thursday. They were treated at the Episcopal hospital and sent home after their mother, Mrs. Ruth Depew, had insisted against the advice of the doctors, that the boys be returned to her.

CONVICT TO RETRACE BURIAL TRIP

NEW YORK, April 29.—Edward Gianoris, the convict in the Rhode Island penitentiary who insists he helped bury the body of Dorothy Arnold in the cellar of a West Point house, is to make the funeral trip again, with detectives at his side. He will be required to start at the physician's home in New Rochelle where he says the missing girl's body was placed in an automobile, and to go inch by inch over the long trail that finally terminated at the basement grave.

ANAEMIC PEOPLE

Need More Iron in the Blood.

If you are anaemic, you need more iron in your blood, and the tell-tale symptoms are a pale face,—colourless lips, ashen finger nails, poor circulation, and short breath, and more serious diseases are easily contracted when in this condition.

Mr. W. H. Hodges, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "I suffered from the effects of bad blood, was run-down, dizzy, had headaches and did not feel like working. I had tried Beef Iron and Wine without any help. After taking Vinol four days I noticed an improvement and its continued use built up my blood and my bad feelings disappeared like magic."

The bad effects of poor, devitalized blood cannot be overestimated, and it is the peptonate of iron and the true cod liver extracts contained in Vinol, together with beef peptone, that enriches the blood, improves the circulation and in this natural manner builds up health and strength. Try it on our guarantee.

HER AUTOMOBILE KILLS MAN OF 65

Geo. W. Cobb, Building Contractor, Is Struck While Riding Bicycle in Long Branch.

LONG BRANCH, N.J., May 1. — George W. Cobb, building contractor, sixty-five years old, was riding a bicycle in North Broadway on Friday afternoon, when he was hit by the automobile driven by Mrs. John Grant. He was sent to the Memorial Hospital, where he died within an hour.

Mrs. Grant said that she tried to avoid Mr. Cobb, even running her automobile upon the sidewalk, but he rode so unsteadily that they met in collision.

Mr. Cobb, who was a prominent member of the National Guard, is survived by his wife and a daughter. His brother is the Rev. Dr. De Witt C. Cobb, of Newton, N.J.

NURSING SOLDIERS LEARNED OF RIVAL

Husband Attentive to Actress While She Was Caring for Wounded in France, Says Mrs. Frothingham.

NEW YORK, May 1.—Mrs. Ethel Butler Frothingham, who is serving as a Red Cross nurse at Boulogne, France, obtained a divorce from Joseph L. Frothingham, a stock broker, in the Supreme Court. The co-respondent is said to be an actress.

Mrs. Frothingham said she received word from her mother while she was nursing in France that Mr. Frothingham and the actress were much in each other's company. She engaged the services of a detective agency in Scotland. The detective work is said to have ended with a successful raid in this city, a brown haired woman being found asleep in a bedroom in which, it also is said, Mr. Frothingham was found in light attire.

Mrs. Frothingham was married in 1907. She has the custody of her daughter, Ethel, seven years old, now with a governess in Torquay, England. Mrs. Frothingham says she has an income of $10,000 a year.

High Prices Predicted For Michigan Beans

East Lansing, Michigan, May 1.—High prices for Michigan beans are predicted by James N. McBride, state market director, in the latest market bulletin issued by the Michigan Agricultural college.

"The crop of 1915 will be cleaned up before the crop of 1916 is available, and none of the crop will be left over to affect the price of the new crop," says the bulletin. "The future of the bean planting in 1916 under these circumstances is most promising.

"One of the largest buyers has said that the adequate organization of beans, even with a large crop ,need never go below $2.50 a bushel to the farmer."

WEDDING BELLS

McLEOD—LYTLE.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the Trinity Methodist parsonage on Saturday afternoon when Pte. John McLeod of the 93rd Battalion and son of Rev. Roderick McLeod of Scotland was united in marriage to Miss Bertha Lytle, daughter of Mr. Thos. Lytle of this city. The young couple were unattended. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. P. Wilson.

HOPE—BULLOCK.

On the evening of April 26th, a very pretty wedding was solemnized by the Rev. R. McEachern, Presbyterian minister of Keene, at "Villa Delle," the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Bullock, on the occasion of their youngest daughter, Edna Pearl, becoming the bride of Mr. Richard Lang Hope.

The bride, gowned in blue satin, with bodice of old lace, draped with ninon, wore the usual wedding veil and carried a shower bouquet of carnations.

The only ornament the bride wore was the groom's gift, a dainty wrist watch. Miss Edith Hope, who provided the wedding music, received a pearl crescent from the groom, her brother.

The bride travelled in a suit of navy blue silk aeolian, with hat to match. Only the immediate friends of the young couple were present at the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Hope, who will reside on the Sixth Line, Otonabee, have the most sincere wishes of their friends and acquaintances for a happy and useful future.

OBITUARY

MRS. ELLEN WELSH.

The death occurred yesterday at her late residence, Auburn, of Mrs. Ellen Welsh, relict of the late Martin Welsh, at the age of eighty-five years. She was born in Ireland, but had lived for many years in Peterborough, where she was well and favourably known. She leaves to mourn her loss three sons and three daughters. The sons are: Messrs. Michael of Peterborough; and Martin and Joseph, in the States, and the daughters are Mrs. M. O'Heron, Auburn; Mrs. Thos. Bowen, Toronto, and Miss B. Welsh, at home.

The funeral will take place tomorrow at 9 o'clock from the family residence to the Church of the Immaculate Conception. Interment in St. Peter's cemetery.

MRS. HANNAH GRANT.

On Sunday last, the 2nd day of April, at Ebenezer, there passed away in the person of Mrs. Hannah Grant, relict of the late Ernest Grant, one of the first and most respected settlers in that district. Deceased had almost reached the ripe old age of eight-nine years. Mrs. Grant's maiden name was Batten, and with her husband, came to lot 3, con. 14, Elderslie in the year 1856 and resided on said lot until she was called home. She was a model wife and mother and took her part in all the hardships incident to pioneer life. Originally she came from Dummer Township, Peterborough County, coming by way of Owen Sound and from that point she carried her daughter, who was a baby, all the way to her future home and Mr. Grant carried a heavy load of necessaries for their home. She was a good woman and took an active part in the church life of Ebenezer, a kind and thoughtful neighbour, ready always to lend a helping hand to the needy, and we have no doubt she has heard the approval of the Father, "Well done." She was nearly 36 years a widow. Several years ago she lost her sight which prevented her from enjoying the latter days, but she bore the affliction cheerfully. Two sons also predeceased her, Richard in 1872 aged 19 years and Henry about two years ago. The following members of the family are still living: William H., on the old homestead; Joseph E., Reeve, Tara; George and John, near the old home; Dr. Grant, of Paisley, and Mrs. Thomas Bryce, of the same place. The funeral took place on Tuesday and was very largely attended. Reverends Dell and Arbuckle and Daniels, of Tara, officiating at both the home and grave. The pallbearers were six of her grandchildren who lowered the remains in its last resting place in the little cemetery of Ebenezer just as the sun went down. Thus another link is taken out of that splendid chain of early settlers who laid the foundation of the high positions which Bruce occupies to-day among the Counties of Ontario. They are nearly all gone to their reward, but their works follow after, and their memories will be cherished by generations yet unborn. The casket was most beautifully adorned with wreaths and flowers, one wreath by the deceased's children and one by the grandchildren. — Paisley Advocate.

The Railway Situation Is Still Uncertain

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, May 1.—Railway legislation, and a debate on the sale of small arms ammunition by the Militia Department promise to divide interest with the Duff-Meredith Commission at Ottawa during the coming week.

The railway situation is still somewhat uncertain. It is generally admitted, however, that the Government proposes temporary loans to the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific of fifteen and ten millions, respectively. This proposal will be supplemented by an announcement that the Royal Commission will be appointed to consider the question of a 'permanent policy' for the solution of the whole railway policy. Nationalization of at least two of the roads is being mooted. In this connection, however, it is stated that if the Government undertakes later to take over the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific pressure will be brought to bear upon it to make the nationalization complete by the inclusion of the Canadian Pacific with Baron Shaughnessy at the head, will be the ultimate outcome of the situation.

NERVY THIEF STOLE BATH.

Also Took an Outfit of Clothing and Cooked a Meal.

"The loot consisted of a bath, a meal and an outfit of clothing," according to the report made to the St. Louis, Mo., police by Lee Henderson, sexton of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church.

Henderson lives in the basement of the church. He complained that during his absence a thief stole into his apartment and took a bath — took it badly—an outfit of clothing comprising everything that a man wears, and departed after cooking a meal in Henderson's kitchen.

The sexton said the intruder did not even so much as wash the dishes after having supped.

TOUT LECKIE, FAMOUS RUGBY STAR KILLED

Major "Tout" Leckie is another athlete who has given his life for his country, word being received that he was killed in action on April 26. "Tout" was one of the greatest halfbacks that ever played the Canadian game. He first came into prominence with Queen's, then while a member of the Alerts in 1912, when they won the Canadian championship. The following year he played for Argos, and the season after with the Tigers. He graduated as a mining engineer from Queen's. In addition to being a Rugby star of the first magnitude he was also a clever baseball player. He and the late Ross Binkley, another Rugby star, were very close friends.

COURT AND JURY ARE SHOWN "WICKED BOMB"

NEW YORK, May 1.—Operation of the mechanism of the time bomb alleged to have been invented by Lieut. Robert Fay, for the purpose of destroying at sea munition ships leaving this port, was illustrated by a government ordinance expert in the federal court here at the trial of Fay and his alleged co-conspirators, Walter Scholz and Paul Daeche.

According to the expert, James E. Moore, in charge of the guns at Fort Wadsworth, the Fay bomb was "ingeniously wicked." He testified that he had tested the contrivance with explosives and found that it worked perfectly.

The machinery contained in a metal box three feet long, was explained in detail by Moore. The bomb was exhibited on a table in the centre of the court room and held the interest of the court and jury. Moore declared that the bomb was so constructed that it could be set to explode as desired.

The government sought to establish that the dynamite had been purchased for Fay through the instrumentality of Englebert Bronkhorst, a German mining engineer. Bronkhorst is included in the conspiracy charge by the government but he is to have a separate trial.

CANADIANS IN CHICAGO RAISE $10,000 FOR RED CROSS AT BIG CONCERT

CHICAGO, May 1.—Chicago turned out in force Saturday night to honor Canada. In spite of the fact that Theodore Roosevelt, Harry Lauder, and Pavlowa were all in town as counter-attractions a great audience filled the Auditorium Theatre at the concert given by the Canadian Red Cross Fund of Chicago, and $10,000 was wired to the headquarters of the Canadian Red Cross Society as a practical proof of sympathy.

The big theatre, seating nearly 4,000 people, was gaily clad in the flags of Great Britain. Canada, the self-governing Dominions and the United States. The Consular officers of Great Britain, France, Russia, Italy Belgium and Japan occupied boxes draped with the flags of their countries.

The programme was representative of the Empire and its Allies. Maggie Teyte, of the Boston Grand Opera Company, and Arthur Beresford sang for Old England; Evelyn Starr of Toronto, a brilliant violinist, upheld the honor of Canada; Frederick Morley, gifted pianist, represented Australia; Wales contributed the Welsh choir; Scotland appeared in the person of Sam Galbraith, a sextette o fkilnty dancers and MacDuffy Kilty Band; Italy was represented by Francesco Daddi; France by Jenny Dufau, and the Slavic peoples by the Croatian Singing Society.

The Canadian Red Cross Fund of Chicago, was organized about two months ago. Mr. John Crerar, its president, is one of Chicago's most prominent and generous citizens. Years ago he hailed from Pictou, N. S., the home of not a few of Canada's biggest men. Mr. Martin J. Insull, the vice-president, is an Englishman by birth, but an ardent admirer of Canada and conspicuous in Chicago's business world. Mr. W. H. Davies, treasurer is another Nova Scotian and local manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia. Mr. S. J. Duncan-Clark, secretary, is a former Toronto boy, now war expert and editorial writer on The Chicago Post. Mr. Allan L. McCrae and Mr Charles E. Williams, as chairman and secretary of the Ticket Committee fo rthe concert, did proFrom Windsor, Ont., and the latter from Toronto.

The organization will continue its efforts while the war lasts. It is already planning an athletic fild day for Dominion Day, July 1. It has succeeded in bringing into co-operation for Canada eighteen different local British clubs and societies. There have been gatherings of Slav and French and Italian and Belgian

You catch a little cold to-day, and by to-morrow it has reached the throat, next day the lungs are affected and you wish you had used "Catarrhozone" which kills colds in five minutes. In the first place Catarrhozone soothes the irritated membranes and relieves congestion,—then it cuts out the phlegm and destroys the germs. It enables the blood to retain a natural supply of oxygen, lung food, and vitality. In any cough bronchitis or catarrh, it's guaranteed to positively cure. Beware of dangerous substitutes offered under misleading names for genuine Catarrhozone, which is sold everywhere; large size, containing two months' treatment, costs $1.00, small size, 50c.; trial size 25c

TO MAKE OWN DYESTUFFS.

BOSTON, April 29.—The problem of reconstructing the dyestuffs industry in this country, to insure a regular supply for the textile trade, is near solution, according to speakers at the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, yesterday. Edward S. Chapin, of this city, commissioned by the association to study the conditions caused by the war, reported his belief that the situation could be worked out here so as to satisfy all demands.

"The great needs of the past year" he stated, "have ben responsible for bringing to light many studies on the use of mordants and dyestuffs that would otherwise probably never have been tried out.

"The erection of a comprehensive coal tar industry insuring the country forever against another such calamitous happening as the present is a thoroughly sound and desirable proposition."

FINED FOR FLIRTING WITH GIRL WHO FIGURED IN RIOT

BUFFALO, May 1.—Judge Keeler fined Joseph Blaszowiak, 140 Milburn Street, $100 in City Court on a charge of disorderly conduct. Blaszowiak went into the saloon owned by Anthony Zakrzewski, at 52 Playter street, last night, and asked for a drink. Anna Zakrzewski, who last fall featured in a riot in the saloon in which one man was killed and two others injured, was behind the bar for her father. The man, the police were told, tried to flirt with her, but she repulsed him. Blaszowiak became angry, she told the police, and asked a bystander for a revolver. Anna became alarmed and called for the police. Lieutenant John Fagan came in and took the man. When he tried to lock him in the patrol box Michael Zalesinski, 35 Krupp street, tried to rescue his friend and a fight followed. Zalesinski was locked up and was fined $50 by Judge Keeler.

8 BOXES CURED PSORIASIS

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Comeson, Ont., writes: "Three doctors described my trouble as psoriasis, and one said could never be cured. The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head, and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment and am entirely cured—not a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise this Ointment enough."

Rub the flat irons over waxed paper before setting them away and they will keep bright and smooth.

OUR SERIAL STORY

"THE HARBOUR OF DOUBT"

BY FRANK WILLIAMS

He found his mother on the edge of the crowd that was helping to save the furniture, and learned that Nellie and young Burns had already arrived and were doing what they could.

From the first it was apparent that the place was doomed, for although there were plenty of men eager to form a bucket brigade the supply of water was limited, and most of the buckets were at the larger fire.

But the squire was working wonders, and enlisted Code to help him.

In fifteen minutes the whole roof and attic were ablaze, and the men turned their attention to wetting down the near walls of the houses on each side. All the valuables and most of the simple furniture had been saved.

At the earliest moment Schofield escaped from the squire and sought out Nellie. He found her, hysterical surrounded by a group of women, and hovered over by Nat Burns. With each hand she held a child close to her.

"Bige! Where is little Bige?" she was crying as Code came up. "Tom and Mary are here, but I've lost Bige. Oh, Nat! Where is Bige?"

"Bless me if I know," stammered Burns weakly. "Last I saw of him he was under that cherry-tree where you told him to stay until you got the others. It wa'n't more'n five minutes ago I seen him there. He must be around somewheres. I'll look.

Without another word he hurried off in a frantic search, looking to left and right, bellowing the boy's name at the top of his voice.

Code walked up to the frantic girl and went straight to the point.

"Hello, Nellie!" he said. "Where do you call'ate little Bige might be? I hear you've lost him."

"Yes, I have, Code. I stood him under that cherry-tree and told him not to move. When I got back he was gone. He was seven, and just old enough to run around by himself and investigate things. Oh, I'm so afraid he's gone—"

"Listen!" Code's sharp, masterful tone put a sudden end to her sobbing. "Was there anything in the house he valued much?" Suddenly she drew in her breath sharply.

"Yes, yes," she cried, "his mechanical train. He asked me if I had got it and I said I had. He must have gone over to the furniture and found it hadn't been brought down. Oh, Code, Code—"

"What's the matter, Nellie?"

It was Nat Burns's hard voice as he elbowed roughly past Code and bent solicitously over the girl. He had heard her last words and the pleading in them, and his brow was dark with question and anger.

"Did you find him, Nat?" queried Nellie in an agony of suspense.

"No, I don't know where the little beggar can be," he replied; "I've—" The girl screamed and fainted.

"What's the matter here?" shouted Burns. "What's the matter with her?"

"The boy went back into the house for his toy-engine and hasn't come out again," said Code, facing the other and regarding him with a level eye.

There was a dramatic pause. After Nat's proprietary interest in Nellie and her affairs it was distinctly his place to make the next move. Everybody felt it, and Code, subconsciously realizing this, said nothing.

It required another moment for situation to become clear to Burns. Then, when he realized what alternatives he faced, he gradually grew pale beneath his deep tan and looked defiantly from one to another of the group about him.

"Rot!" he cried suddenly. "The boy can't have gone back. It wasn't five minutes ago I saw him under the cherry-tree. I haven't looked in this direction. Wait! I'll be back in a minute!" And again he was off in his frantic search, his voice rising above the roar of the fire.

Code waited no longer.

Snatching up a blanket from the ground, he raced toward the burning house.

The lower floor was still almost intact, but the upper floor and the roof were practically consumed. The danger lay not in entering the house, but in remaining in it, for although the roof had fallen in, yet the second floor had not burned through and was in momentary danger of collapse.

The spectators did not know what was in Code Schofield's mind until he had burst into the danger zone. Then, with the blanket wound about his arm and shielding his face he plunged toward the open doorway. It was as though he stood suddenly before the open door of a vast furnace.

The blast of heat seemed an impenetrable force, and he struggled against it with all his strength.

One more look, a mighty effort, and he was in the temporary shelter of the doorway he drew a long breath and plunged forward.

He knew the plan of the Tanner house as he knew his own, and he remembered that in the rear was a room where the children played. The hall ran straight back to the door of this room; but there was no egress from the rear except through the kitchen, which adjoined the play-room.

The heat that beat down upon his head made him dizzy, and he could not see for the smoke that filled the hall. Instinctively he went down on his hands and knees, discarding the blanket, and crawled toward the rear.

He had scarcely reached the closed door of the play-room when, with a thunderous roar, the ceilings at the front of the house fell in, cutting off any escape in that quarter. He knew that at any moment the rest of hte ceiling would collapse.

Half-strangled with the increasing smoke, he staggered to his feet and lunged against the door, forcing it open. The dim light from the one square-paned window showed a small form huddled on the form, the mouth open, and a tiny locomotive gripped in one hand.

A rush of smoke and flame followed the silent opening of the door, and Code felt himself growing giddy. A swift glance behind showed a wall of fire where the hall had once been, and for the first time he realized the seriousness of the task he had taken upon himself. But there was no fear. Rather there came a sense of gladness that a fighter feels when the battle has at last come to close grips.

He swept the small form of Bige up into his arms and leaped to the window that is built low in the wall and without weights. To raise it and manipulate the catch was out of the question. With all his strength he swung his foot against the pane squarely in the middle. Panes and frame splintered outward, leaving the casement intact except for a few jagged edges of glass.

Then, suddenly, as he dropped the boy to the ground outside, there came a blast of fire on the back draft created by the opening. Singed and strangling, with a last desperate effort he threw himself outward and fell on his shoulders beside little Bige.

Men who had heard the crash of glass when the window went out rushed forward and dragged man and boy to safety.

A quarter of an hour later, his head and neck bandaged with sweet-oil, Code made his way weakly to where Nellie sat among her belongings cradling in her arms the boy whom the doctor had just brought back to consciousness.

"He's all right, is he?" asked Schofield.

She smiled up at him through her tears.

"Yes, the doctor says it was just too much smoke.

Oh, Code, how can I thank you for this? And you are hurt It! is bad? Can't I do anything?

She struggled to her feet, solicitude written on her face, for the moment even forgetting little Bige, who had begun to howl.

"No," said Schofield, "you can't do anything. It isn't much. I'm only glad I succeeded. Don't think anything about it."

"Father and mother will never forget this, and I'm sure will do what they can to make it right with you."

He looked at her as though she had struck him. Never in his life had she used that tone. Before the mute query of his eyes she turned her head away.

"What do you mean—by that?" he faltered, hardly knowing what he said.

"Nothing Code, only—only—" She could not finish.

What has happened, Nellie? he began, and then halted, his gaze riveted upon her hand. A single diamond glittered from the dirt and grim that soiled her finger.

"That?" he gasped, stunned by a feeling of misery and helplessness.

"Nat and I are engaged," she said in a low voice without answering his question. "Just since last night.

There was nothing more to be said. The banal wishes for happiness would not rise to his lips. He looked at her intently for a moment, saw her eyes again drop, and walked away. He was suddenly tired and wanted to go home and rest. The reaction of his nervous and physical strain had set in.

The hundred yards to his own gateway was a triumphal procession, but he scarcely realised it. Somehow he answered the acclamations that were heaped upon him. He smiled but he did not know how.

At the gate some one was waiting for him. At first he thought it was his mother, but he suddenly saw that it was Elsa Mallaby. He told himself that she must have come down to the village to watch the fire, and wondered why she was in that particular place.

"Code," she cried, her face flushed with glad pride, "you were splendid! That was the bravest thing I ever heard of in my life. I knew you would do it!"

He smiled mechanically, thanked her, and passed on while she gazed after him, hurt and struck silent by the cold misery in his face.

"I wonder, she said to herself slowly, "whether something besides what I told him has happened to him tonight?"

CHAPTER IV.
REFUGEES

It was almost one o'clock in the morning when Code went into the parlor of his mother's cottage and sank down upon the ancient plush sofa. His eyes ached, and the back of his head and neck, where the fire had singed him, were throbbing painfully.

There was apparently no one at home.

Even little Josie, the orphan that helped his mother, seemed to have been drawn out into the road by the excitement of the night, and the house, except for a single lamp burning on the table, was in darkness.

He thought of going up-stairs to bed, but remembered that his mother was not in and decided he would rest a little while and then go out and find her. Suddenly it seemed very luxurious and grateful to be able to stretch at full length after so much labor, and within a few minutes this sense of luxury had become a pleasant oblivion.

Voices and a bright light woke him up. Dazed and alarmed, he struggled to a sitting posture, but a gentle firm hand pushed him down again and he heard his mother's voice.

"Lay down again, Code," she said. "You must be pretty well beat out with all you've done to-night. We've just got some friends for the night. Poor boy, let me see your burns!"

Schofield, who had guided schooners for years through the gales and shoals of the Bay of Fundy without a qualm became red and ashamed at his mother's babying. Rubbing his sleepy eyes, he sat up again determinedly and made an effort to greet the company who, he knew, had come into the room with his mother.

Across the room, near the old melodeon, sat Nellie Tanner, holding lit the Bige and smiling wanly at him. The two children leaned against her, asleep on either side.

"Don't get up, Code," she said. "You've earned your rest more than any man in Freekirk Head to-night. I'm afraid though, we're going to make more trouble for you. Ma Schofield wouldn't let me go anywhere else but here till the Rosan gets back from St. John's.

"Oh, I hate to think of their coming! They'll sail aroung Flag Point and look for the kiddies waving in front of the house. And they won't even see any house; but, thanks to you Code they'll see the kiddies."

He knew by the tense, strained tone of her voice that she was very near the breaking-point, and his whole being yearned to comfort her and try to make her happy.

Cursing himself for a lazy dolt, he sprang up and walked over toward her.

"Now you just let me handle this, Nellie," he said, "and we'll soon have Tommie and Mary and Bige all curled up on that sofa like three kittens."

With a sigh of ineffable relief she resigned the dead weight in her weary army to him, and he, stepping softly, and holding him gently as a woman, soon had the boy more comfortable than he had been for hours. Mary and Tommie followed, and then Nellie, free of her responsibility at last, bent forward, put her elbows on knees, and wept.

Code, racked and embarrassed, looked around for his mother, but that mainstay was nowhere in sight. He thought of whistling, so as to appear unconscious of her tears, but concluded that would be merely crude. To take up a paper or book and read it in the face of a woman's weeping appeared hideous, although for the first time in many months, he felt irresistibly drawn to the ancient and dusty volumes in the glass-doored bookcase.

He compromised by turning his back on the affecting sight, thrusting his hands in his pockets, and studying the remarkably straight line formed by the abupt junction of the wall and the ceiling.

"Do you mind if I cry C—Code?" sobbed the girl, apparently realising their position for the first time.

"No! Go right ahead!!" he cried as heartily as though some one had asked for a match. He was intensely happy that the matter was settled between them. Now the harder she cried the more he liked it, for they understood one another. So she cried and he walked softly about, his hands in his pockets and his lips puckered for the whistle that he did not dare permit himself.

Mr Schofield interrupted this near-domestic scene by her arrival, carrying a tray, on which were several glasses covered with a film of frost and out of which appeared little green forests. Code ceased to think about whistling.

"Oh, Ma Schofield, what have you done?" cried Nellie, her tears for the moment forgetting to flow as her wide ning eyes took in the delights of the frosted glasses and piles of cake behind them.

"Done?" queried Ma. "I haven't done anything but what my conscience tells me ought to be done. If yours cal'lates to disturb you some you can go right on up to your room, lamb, for you must be dead with lugging them children around."

She Coughed Day and Night.

Mrs. Fred. Fears, 'Cedarville, Ont., writes: "I am sending you this letter telling what Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup did for me. Ten years ago I had a terrible cold. For days I could not speak above a whisper. I coughed day and night. One evening I was so bad I went down to our storekeeper, and when I went in he said, 'You better get something done for that cold of yours.' I told him, as well as I could, that I had just come to get a bottle of the best cough medicine he had. He told me Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup was the best he had, and said for me to take a little of it before I left the store. I took some, and in fifteen minutes I could speak as well as ever. I think 'Dr. Wood's' is the very best on the market."

That persistent cough must be gotten rid of immediately, for if it hangs on to you it may develop into some serious lung trouble, such as bronchitis, pneumonia and perhaps consumption.

Get rid of it by using Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. A remedy that has been on the market for twenty-five years. A remedy that cures when all others fail.

When you ask for "Dr. Wood's" see that you get what you ask for as there are many imitations on the market.

"Dr. Wood's" is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price, 25c and 50c.

THE CHARACTER IN HANDSHAKES

Hotel Greeter Explains How He Tells Men by the Way They Clasp — Reliable Index.

When a "feller" shakes hands about 50,000 times a year he ought to develop into a connoisseur, in the opinion of Hector L. Bougerie, "greeter extraordinary" of the Nicollet Hotel in Minneapolis.

Hotel men, who have to place much trust in thousands of persons, consider the handshake a reliable index to character, Bourgerie declared.

"We can make a fair guess as to a man's occupation when we clasp his hand," he continued. "The farmer or labourer has callouses on his hand. We cannot mistake him. A fellow with soft hands who says he's a farmer arouses our suspicions.

"We have to distinguish professional men by subtle characteristics in their grips. For example, a pastor is likely to hold your hand as long as you let him. A travelling man usually gives you a hard, quick grip. I should say that his clasp is one of the most pleasurable and satisfactory. It paves the way for business. A doctor is inclined to advance his fingers to your wrists. You get the idea that he wants to feel your pulse.

"The lawyer is a frequent 'gripper.' He has a tendency to try you as to all the fraternal orders of which he may be a member. He developed the 'gripping' habit at college and has found it a valuable asset in his business, especially if he's a politician. The teacher shakes hands less than other professional men. He does not have to cultivate popular good-will. His clasp is a 'cross' between that of a preacher and a salesman."

Makes Them Wince.

Bourgerie extended his hand for inspection. "You can notice that the muscles are exceptionally developed for one who doesn't labour hard." Bourgerie has a grip like a vise.

"When a fellow tries to 'outgrip' me," he boasted, "he usually gets fooled. I put 'venturesome' in my characterization of him. No one has been able to make me wince yet. I have 'turned the tables' on a few who have tried. Ordinarily, I am careful not to hurt any one.

"A firm grip may be taken as a mark of sincerity. With your friends it betokens more than a pleasure at seeing you. It indicates honesty and a few other qualifications that society has found indispensable."

When the system gets "all run down" build it up with

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Miss Potifer's Pomeranian

It Converted a Dog Hater

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Dr. Thornby was thirty years old and a bachelor. His practice took up all his time during the day, and when he reached his rooms in the evening, sometimes late, he was too tired to go out to seek amusement. Perhaps his case was no different from other men who are regularly occupied with making a living, perhaps he had reached an age when a home with no one in it to cherish first begins to seem lonely, perhaps nature, having been cheated out of her rights, had begun to rebel. Be this as it may, when Dr. Thornby went into his rooms one evening after an anxious day over a very sick patient he longed for some one to comfort him.

The next day after the doctor had finished with his morning office consultation, exerting himself to put the best face on conditions that looked dark indeed and having swallowed a hasty lunch, he went to where his car was standing and, tossing in his bag of medicines and medical implements, got into the car himself. A little dog bounded in behind him and sought a warm place in his lap.

The doctor's mind was upon a very sick patient, and the little stranger was by no means welcome.

"Where did it come from?" asked Dr. Thornby as he pointed to the fluffy bundle of animation.

James, the chauffeur, turned a casual eye on the black Pomeranian who was licking the doctor's glove with a tiny red velvet tongue.

"I couldn't say, sir. I never noticed it until you spoke."

The doctor looked up and down the street in search of some foolish woman who might be the owner of the lapdog, but the street was deserted.

"I'll take him to the pound," said the doctor absently and immediately forgot all about the Pomeranian, which nestled down in the bearskin robe until all one could distinguish was a pair of sparkling eyes.

Dr. Thornby detested small dogs, especially when they were carried by women, and he was supposed to be a woman hater, which in a way was not at all detrimental to his practice, for the fair sex rather liked his brusque manner, even when he told them that they must battle with their disordered nerves all alone with the weapons of plenty of fresh air and exercise and exertion of undiscovered forces of will power.

In spite of this very excellent advice they flocked to Dr. Thornby, and some of them professed to enjoy his look of disapproval when they brought their toy dogs along.

Two days later Dr. Thornby was still in possession of the little Pomeranian of which he had grown very fond. "I shall keep him, James, unless I find the owner," explained the doctor, and he hesitated to add that he had not yet advertised that he had found the dog.

That very afternoon, when he consulted his tablets, he found that an urgent call had come from 83 Cinnamon terrace. He had several patients in aristocratic Cinnamon terrace, but he did not recall the name of Potifer.

No. 83 was a long, low, homelike residence, and when he rang the bell it was immediately answered by a smart Japanese butler.

"I am Dr. Thornby," said the physician.

"Ah, excuse, sir; come this way, please. It is Miss Potifer who is so ill."

The man led the way to an upper sitting room, where the doctor was greeted by Mrs. Potifer, a very stout, amiable looking woman, who confessed to being much worried over her daughter's condition.

"Florence has never had a day's illness in her life," said Mrs. Potifer, "and it doesn't seem possible that her nerves should give way all at once."

"Nerves!" groaned the doctor. "More nerves!"

Mrs. Potifer opened a white door and introduced Dr. Thornby to a lovely young woman, who was reclining on a couch in a charming pink and white boudoir.

There was a strong odor of cologne water in the room, and Miss Potifer's beautiful brown eyes gave evidence of recent tears.

"I never felt better in my life, doctor," wailed Florence Potifer, as the handsome young physician sat down beside her. "I never felt better in my life at the moment when he disappeared."

"My daughter has suffered a great sorrow," put in Mrs. Potifer feelingly.

"I am very sorry indeed," said the doctor, experiencing a vague jealousy of the man whose disappearance had caused such sorrow in one so young and lovely.

Florence Potifer sobbed softly into a lace trimmed handkerchief and permitted the doctor to feel her pulse.

"He was worth five hundred dollars," remarked Mrs. Potifer.

"He couldn't have been much of a catch," thought Thornby as he puzzled his brows over Miss Potifer's lack of symptoms. "I've got a pretty fat bank account myself."

"It wasn't the money," murmured Florence, "but he was so dear, so sweet."

Dr. Thornby blushed.

"How did he disappear?" he asked gently.

"I am afraid somebody has stolen him. I took him for a walk day before yesterday, and all at once he left me. I've never seen him since."

Dr. Thornby left a soothing draft, recommended that the patient sleep with plenty of fresh air in her room and to endeavor to forget her grief for the night. He said that by morning she would feel much better and would be able to pursue the search for her missing friend.

"A friend indeed!" gushed Mrs. Potifer. "Florence loved Peepie Winks almost to death."

"Good heavens!" ejaculated the doctor as he drove away. "Imagine a lovely girl like that falling in love with a man named Peepie Winks!"

During the remainder of the day Dr. Thornby, the woman hater, could not forget the lovely, grief stricken countenance of Florence Potifer.

In the evening while he snatched a few hours of leisure in his study he was still thinking of her. The little black Pomeranian was curled in his lap, for he had won himself a way right into the doctor's heart. And the doctor was shamelessly planning not to advertise the dog at all.

The little dog was licking his new master's hand, and the doctor was thinking of Miss Potifer and the mysterious disappearance of her friend.

Suddenly he laughed aloud as he remembered the ridiculous name.

"Peepie Winks!" he cried scoffingly.

To his amazement, the little dog jumped up and barked frantically. He ran to the door and whined and scratched.

"By jove, I believe he recognized that name," thought the physician. "I'll try him again."

"Peepie Winks!" he called sharply and the dog came bounding back again, exhibiting every evidence of delight at the sound of the name.

"I'll be hanged if I don't believe this dog belongs to that Winks chap," muttered the doctor. "No harm in taking him around to the Potifers in the morning. Miss Potifer might tell me where to find his owner—but of course she couldn't do that—the fellow's lost himself. Imagine losing oneself from a perfect creature like Miss Potifer!"

All of which goes to show that all the doctor's pet aversions were tottering.

The next morning he drove up to Cinnamon terrace with a queer fluttering in the region of his heart.

Under his arm was tucked the silky form of the Pomeranian doggie. As he passed up the walk the dog wriggled to get free, but the doctor had grown too fond of the little fellow to part with him so easily, and so when he was finally shown into Miss Potifer's presence the dog was clutched to his bosom.

Miss Potifer was looking brighter, and she smiled charmingly to the physician, but when she heard a short, joyous bark from the little black dog, she arose from her sofa and flew with outstretched arms to meet him.

"Oh, my darling, darling Peepie Winks!" she cried as she took the dog in her arms. "Did oo run away from oo missy? And did de bestest doctor find ums little Peepie Winks for he missy?"

Dr. Thornby felt no disgust when he heard these words of endearment fall from the red lips of Florence Potifer. Indeed, he looked very much as if he envied that fortunate canine.

"Now, tell me where you found my darling," cried Miss Potifer, who had recovered with astonishing speed. Her cheeks were pink and her eyes were shining like twin stars.

In a few words Dr. Thornby related how he had discovered Peepie Winks nestled among the bearskins in his limousine and how he had fallen in love with the silky mite.

"And when you heard us tell about losing Peepie Winks I suppose you thought of my darling at once," said Florence.

The doctor blushed.

"To tell the truth, Miss Potifer, when your mother spoke about losing some friend called 'Peepie Winks' I really believed it to be the name of a man."

"A man?" Then the doctor discovered that Florence Potifer had the most joyous laugh he had ever listened to. Presently he joined her, and then Mrs. Potifer came in to hear the wonderful story of how Peepie Winks had been recovered by the doctor.

"I shall miss the little rascal," said the doctor as he took leave of his fully recovered patient.

"You must come and see him once in awhile," said Mrs. Potifer cordially.

A few days afterward Dr. Thornby confessed to himself with some confusion that he sorely missed the pleasant companionship of little Peepie Winks.

"I believe I'll go and see the little beggar," he said after he had completed his calls.

So once again he called at No. 83 Cinnamon terrace, and this time he was shown into the drawing room, where Miss Potifer was making tea for herself and feeding little cakes to greedy Peepie Winks.

That was only the beginning of many calls at Cinnamon terrace, for the acquaintance brought about by the disappearance of Peepie Winks ripened into a friendship, and the friendship warmed into love.

"I hear you are a woman hater and that you detest toy dogs," protested Florence demurely when the doctor confessed his love. "I am afraid to marry you. You might be unkind to my darling Peepie Winks—unless you've changed your mind."

Dr. Thornby took her hands in his and looked into her glad eyes.

"Perhaps I haven't changed my mind, dear; but, you see, there's only one girl in the whole world that like you, and that's you, and there's only only one dog in the world like Peepie Winks. So I'll keep to my opinions—and keep you both in the bargain."

"The cave dweller would seize a woman by the hair and drag her to his home," commented the best man at the wedding.

"Yes," replied Miss Cavendish. "In those days hair was more natural, and furnished a reliable grip."

Could Not Stand

The Least Excitement.

Was So Weak and Run Down.

Many women become run down and worn out by their household cares and duties never ending, and sooner or later find themselves with shattered nerves and weak hearts.

When the heart becomes weak, and the nerves unstrung, it is impossible for a woman to look after her household or social duties. The least little exertion or excitement leaves her in an exhausted condition, and not fit to do anything.

On the first sign of any weakness of the heart or nerves, you will be wise if you start to take Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

This remedy will act directly on the disordered heart making it beat strong and regular, and will also invigorate and strengthen the nerves so as to make them steady and firm.

Mrs. J. A. Williams, Tillsonburg, Ont., writes: "I cannot speak too highly of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I suffered greatly with my nerves. I was so weak and run down, I could not stand the least excitement of any kind. I believe your Heart and Nerve Pills to be a valuable remedy for all sufferers from nervous trouble."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are the original remedy for all heart and nerve troubles. Price 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

HERO OF YPRES WAS CANADIAN CHAPLAIN

Carried Wounded Man Over Bullet-swept Zone For Five Hundred Yards—Then Back to Trenches

The glorious incident in which Canon Frederick George Scott, the Canadian poet, won fame has been described as follows: It was the Third Battalion that made the celebrated flank movement at the battle of Ypres, and throughout the terrible days and nights Canon Scott was in evidence, up and down the line, cheering the men and doing his level best to be of service in any way in which his services might be used. He was fearless as a lion, according to men who saw him in action. The most terrible day was April 24, 1915. Just how many heroic episodes occurred between sunrise and sunset never will be known, perhaps, but the one in which Canon Scott figured found a chronicler in a returned soldier who witnessed it.

The Canadian and German trenches were very close together—barely 75 yards apart. A private crumpled suddenly beside the clergyman. He had been seriously wounded and if left alone would die. The battle was at the height and it meant almost certain death for anyone to leave the trenches. The chaplain flung an arm under the fallen soldier, let the blood-stained head drop onto his breast and clambered out of the trench with his sorry burden.

Cheer For the Parson

"It has been estimated that only about one bullet in 95 kills a man," said the narrator, in relating the incident, "but at the rate the bullets were singing past the 'sky pilot's' head it is a wonder he was not killed several times over. He appeared to be quite unconcerned about it, and, as the man he carried was heavy, he had to pause for a moment when he got into the open and let him slip to the ground.

"The soldier revived somewhat and holding weakly to the chaplain started across the open. They had to reach the crest of a hill 500 yards away before they were even comparatively safe. Staggering, stumbling, faltering under the weight of the man hanging on him, the preacher went forward, however, and reached the hilltop and safety. Behind the crest he was relieved of his burden by the Red Cross outfit, and they gave the parson a cheer, as he stumbled in.

One of War's Finest

"But the story doesn't end there. The chaplain came back after that through the hail of lead to the trench, and not a bullet touched him. If ever I saw a miracle I saw one that day. He had travelled in all more than 1,000 yards and had performed one of the most desperate and heroic deeds of the war."

Czar Honors Bokhara

The vastness of the Russian Empire was emphasized when it was made known that the Czar had appointed the Emir of Bokhara, one of his tributary monarchs, an aide-de-camp general attached to his suite. Nicholas also sent the Emir a formal message thanking him for the gifts Bokhara has contributed to Russian war funds and for the care which the Asiatic prince has taken to see that no disorder in his state disturbed Russian internal harmony.

23,000,000 PAIRS OF SHOES FOR BRITISH.

LONDON, April 29.—Over 20,000,000 pairs of army boots and shoes had been made and supplied up to April 1st, by British manufacturers to the active forces of Great Britain, France, Russia, Italy and Serbia since the beginning of the war. Besides this vast quantity, several million pairs had been made for the home forces of the British Isles.

This month another order for 3,000,000 pairs was given in England by the Russian Government and contracts for Portugal, the lastest Entente ally, and other friends of the western powers are coming in daily.

According to the director of the Army Clothing Department, the resources of the British shoe trade are being employed almost to the utmost capacity, but the products of the factories are at the same time giving general satisfaction.

At this the countryman stood up with outstretched hands, exclaiming "Shake hands, namesake; I'm a Casey myself."

PREPARING FOR THE FUTURE.

A commercial traveller arrived for the first time at a small country town one evening. Early next morning he was awakened by a great blowing of whistles, steam sirens, buzzers, etc.

Rejoicing in the thought of doing a lot of business, he asked the hotel proprietor later on:

"This is quite a manufacturing town, isn't it?"

"Oh, yes; we're pretty busy," was the proud reply.

"What kind of factories have you?"

"Well"—this time more slowly—"flour principally."

—"Only flour?"

"Yes, that's all as yet. But our flour mill's a good one."

"But I heard at least a dozen whistles this morning."

"You did," agreed the proprietor, dropping his voice confidentially, "but they are all at the flour mill. You see, we got the whistles we should want for the factories we are going to have, and put them in to make the town sound more lively. Quite 'citified' ain't it?"—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

"My Experience as a Nurse"

has been that there is nothing known to medical science that can compare with Zam-Buk for the treatment of skin troubles or injuries." This is the opinion of Miss J. Keith, professional nurse, of Olds, Alta. She continues: "I have tested Zam-Buk personally, and have used it for my patients in a great number of cases—always with the same satisfactory results.

"Speaking professionally," Miss Keith concludes, "my advice to all sufferers from eczema or any other skin trouble is: Cleanse the affected parts thoroughly, and apply Zam-Buk freely and regularly. I am confident that this treatment will be found sufficient to cure even the most stubborn cases."

Zam-Buk, being composed solely of herbal essences, is so refined that it penetrates to the underlying tissues, which is where skin diseases have their roots. Unless a salve is capable of penetrating to the root of the disease it cannot permanently heal. This is why ordinary ointments which, owing to their coarse ingredients, never get deeper than the surface, either do not heal at all or only heal over the outer skin, with the result that the disease breaks out again. Zam-Buk cures, on the contrary, stay cured.

Zam-Buk is also unequalled for cuts, burns, scalds and all skin injuries. When Zam-Buk is applied, there is no danger of festering, and nothing ends pain and heals so quickly.

Zam-Buk should be used for ringworm, ulcers, abscesses, blood-poisoning, piles, boils, pimples, and all skin injuries and diseases. All druggists 50c. box, or from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

ENGLAND PAYS BOUNTY FOR SINKING SHIPS

The first payment of sea bounty during the present war was authorized by the British prize court recently after a hearing on the formal claim of an English crew to the ancient "head money" for destroying an enemy ship. The London Times says:

Captain Noel Grant was called. He said that he was in command of the Carmania, a merchant vessel, which had been requisitioned by the admiralty and converted into an auxiliary cruiser. On September 14, 1914, he was cruising, when he sighted the Cap Trafalgar, a Hamburg-America liner, which had been converted by the German government into an armed auxiliary cruiser. The Cap Trafalgar when sighted was coaling from colliers but she immediately steamed away. The Carmania gave chase, and when the Cap Trafalgar turned the Carmania fired across her bows. Firing then became general but after a time the Cap Trafalgar made off with the Carmania in chase. Both ships had been seriously damaged, and as both were badly on fire they had to go to leeward to prevent the flames from spreading. The Cap Trafalgar was the speedier vessel and had got out of range of the Carmania's guns when she suddenly turned over and sank.

"Questioned by the president of the prize court, Captain Grant said the firing opened at 8000 yards. Subsequently the vessels got within 2800 yards, but the Carmania had to turn away because the Cap Trafalgar had the advantage of possessing machine guns. When she sank the Cap Trafalgar was 10,000 yards off. The action lasted about an hour and three-quarters. The German went down with her colors flying.

"C. R. Dunlop, for the admiralty, submitted that the maximum number of persons on board the enemy vessel was 423.

"The president said that in the circumstances he found that the number of persons in the enemy ship would be regarded for the purpose of this motion as 423. The prize bounty therefore would amount to £2115 sterling and he pronounced and declared that the officers and the crew of H.M.S. Carmania were entitled to that amount as having been actually present at the destruction of the Cap Trafalgar."

German Prisoners Say The Sufferings of People At Home Are Becoming Unbearable

British Headquarters in France, April 20.—The British have successfully extended their front toward the south until it overs practically one-fourth of the whole line from the North Sea to Switzerland. An International News Service writer recently made a trip of inspection. The vessel which took us across the Channel was crowded with Red Cross nurses, army officers and Tommies returning to the front after a few days' home leave.

I had expected to see these men depressed and downhearted at the prospect of going back to the dreary monotony of the trenches, but on not a single face did I see a sign of any such feelings. I asked several of them about it, and the answer was invariably the same.

"Why should we feel sorry? We are well treated, well fed, and well looked after in every way, and our job is not finished yet. The trenches are not half as bad as you think. We are going to stick it out until we have given the Boches such a licking that they won't forget it for a hundred years. There is not much fight left in them even now."

Our first morning in France was bright and sunny, though rather windy. Women everywhere are ploughing the fields or putting in the seed, scattering it by hand in the old-time manner. We pass through villages full of life and bustle, but the women and children, who are nearly al in deep mourning, bear silent testimony of the sacrifices France has made.

At Bethune we see the first sign of actual warfare. The town has been shelled, and many houses are in ruins, but the inhabitants go about their business as if nothing had happened.

The sound of firing increases, aeroplanes hovering above us, little clouds of fleecy white suddenly appear out of space all around them and drift away before the wind. It is shrapnel from the German anti-aircraft guns, exploding harmlessly in the air.

We arrive at a village where we have to leave our cars, as it is not safe to drive any further in broad daylight. The German lines are not far away. The country here is bleak and barren; everywhere are the signs of the devastation of war; the houses mere husks, roofless and battered by hundreds of shells, uninhabited but for a few English soldiers.

"Tommies" Confident.

We find the Tommies in the front trenches, almost within hail of the Germans, the most cheerful of all. Not one among them who does not feel firmly convinced that they are able to finish off the Germans as soon as the signal is given to swarm out of the trenches.

I noticed that the English guns fired at least four shots to every German shot.

The End Near.

In a little village some miles behind the fighting line, I came upon a batch of prisoners captured by the British two days before. I asked to be allowed to speak to them.

I found them deeply grateful to their captors who, they said, had treated them with the most touching kindness. They were greatly relieved because they would now not have to go back to the inferno to fight for a cause they never looked upon as their own. They were from Danish speaking Germany.

Not one of them was under twenty or over thirty, and they were tall, broad-shouldered, blue-eyed and fair-haired, and quite willing to talk when I addressed them in their own language.

One of them, a man with a frank and intelligent face, acting as spokesman, said:

"We all feel that the end is approaching, not so much because Germany is short of men—there are still plenty of reserves, I believe—but because the sufferings of the people at home are becoming unbearable, and they do not understand what we are fighting for.

"It is gradually beginning to dawn upon them that all our victories are to count for nothing, and that we must not only give up what we have won, but even more, in order to get the peace the whole German people is sighing for."

"Do you think the German people are in a mood to give up any territory in order to get peace?" I asked.

"I am quite sure that the people would willingly give up not only every inch of foreign territory now occupied, but Alsace-Lorraine as well."

"But what about an indemnity?"

"I do not see how Germany could possibly pay an indemnity now. We are practically ruined, and the intelligent part of the population all know it. Every letter I get from home speaks of the misery our people are enduring. Our horses and cattle have been taken away, we are short of seed corn and food, even potatoes are very scarce. That part of Germany is a country of mourning and despair.

"All our able-bodied men have been taken, and from the beginning of the war we have always been sent to the most dangerous places. Our heavy casualties prove this."

"How have you been treated while in the army?" I asked. "Is it true that your officers threaten to shoot you down if you refuse to go forward?"

"No, I cannot complain of the way we have been treated. German officers have their own way of treating their men. They hardly look upon us as human beings, but I think they have been less brutal during the war than in times of peace.

"They demand obedience, and the man who hesitates to obey orders knows that he is liable to be shot down. Nothing of the kind, however, has ever occurred in our regiment."

"Do you believe this war was forced upon Germany?"

"No intelligent person in Germany really believes that," he said, with a smile. "We knew that the war was coming sooner or later. We have been prepared for it for years, and we thought we were sure of victory. Our enemies were always quarrelling among themselves at home. Germany alone seemed to be strong.

"But I suppose everything that has happened is for the best. We are all glad we are going to England, where we know we shall be treated well. The Tommies are the most kind-hearted men I ever met. They have been wonderfully good to us."

Heart's Action Was Weak And Circulation Poor

He Was Always Tired and Nervous and Had Pains in Feet and Legs —Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Cured

The heart is a wonderful worker, plodding away year in and year out, forever pumping the blood through the body. So long as the blood is rich and nourishing it renews its own waste and keeps up a vigorous circulation of the blood through the arteries and veins of the human system.

But when the blood gets thin the nerves are starved, motive power is lacking, the heart's action weakens and the circulation is slow. The hands and feet feel cold, there are cramps and pains in the legs and through the body, digestion fails, you become nervous and irritable and do not rest or sleep well.

This letter will give you some idea how admirably Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is suited to overcome derangements of this nature. It is, above all, a creator of new, rich blood, and with the blood in good condition the nerves are soon restored and bodily organs resume their natural functions.

Mrs. E. A. Hutchings, "Prairie View," Elva, Man., writes: "Before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food my husband had tried almost every remedy recommended as a tonic. He suffering with cold feet, poor circulation of the blood, and was always tired. He had pains in his feet and legs, and could get no rest or sleep at night. After the first box of the Nerve Food we could see an improvement, and now after using it for six months, he is an entirely different man. He eats and sleeps well and has no pains in his feet and legs. It has built up his health wonderfully, and we can recommend it as a splendid nerve tonic."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

By Anabel Worthington.

There is such intimate connection between the shirt waist and skirt that, in order not to detract from the appearance of the skirt, one should have a sufficient number of shirt waists. One that is easy to make, easy to fit and easy to launder should easily win the woman who prides herself on being a practical housekeeper or business woman. The waist pictured comes under that heading—it is of sensible, smart design—the kind that will admit of having added a frill of lace or the individual arrangement of other adornment to transform it in a few minutes to a waist more dressy in tone when occasion requires such. There is a pronounced simplicity expressed in its lines—the idea of combining materials, because of the popularity of so many of them, is carried out in this design. The blouse is, as fashion demands, full, having the shoulder fronts gathered. The low collar, leaving the throat and neck bare, is of contrasting goods and the turn back cuff in pointed flare, finishing the short sleeves, is of similar material. Buttons that trim all garments just now serve that purpose on this model, which has the closing down the front.

Pattern No. 7,655 is cut in sizes 36 to 44 inches bust measure. To make in size 36 a waist similar to the one illustrated requires but two yards of material, 36 inches wide, with ⅝ yard contrasting goods. To obtain the pattern send only cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Mystery of Germany Asphyxiating Bombs

The London Chronicle prints the following from its Rome correspondent:

"Whence does Germany get the special substance used for the manufacture of the lachrymatory and asphyxiating gases?"

"Sicilian correspondents recount that an Italian business man, who has returned to Syracuse after a long sojourn in Venezuela, has cleared up the mystery.

"'In many regions in that country,' says the traveller, 'there grows in abundance a species of seed in form and color like oats and locally known as sabadilla, which when stored emits a piquant smell so strong as to cause the eyes to water copiously besides making breathing very painful.

"'Some time before the war Germany began ordering huge quantities of these seeds which till then had no export sale at all. For a long time neither the bands of natives employed the new industry of sabadilla gathering nor the forwarding agents themselves could discover the uses to which this merchandize was being put, and the matter remained one of cage speculation. Lately, however, the secret leaked out. The chief exporters of sabadilla to Germany by roundabout routes are Messrs. Palmzons & Binda of Caracas.'"

According to Chambers' Encyclopedia sabadilla or cevadilla (Schoenocaulon officinali) is a Mexican plant of the natural order melanthaceae. The dried ripe seeds contain veratrine, which when applied externally in powdered form is first irritant and then anaesthetic. Snuffed into the nostrils the seeds cause violent sneezing and irritation. In medicine they are employed chiefly in acute febrile diseases in strong persons.

"My good man, reserve your conversation for one of your own equals. I'd have you know I'm a K.C."

CAT RANG DOOR BELL.

Incident That Proves Felines Are Quite as Sagacious as Dogs.

Cats are certainly not so demonstrative as dogs, but, according to many cat lovers, they are quite as sagacious, says the London Chronicle. Archbishop Whately has recorded that his mother's cat habitually rang the bell whenever it wanted a room door opened. On the first occasion that pussy made her wish known in this way the family had retired to bed.

"In the middle of the night," says the Archbishop, "the parlour bell was rung violently. The sleepers, startled from their repose, proceeded downstairs with poker and tongs to intercept, as they thought, the predatory movements of a burglar. But they were equally surprised to find that the bell was rung by pussy, who frequently repeated the act whenever she wished to get out of the parlour."

FINDS BRITIAN DETERMINED.

LONDON, April 29.—"Britain's determination to fight the war to a victorious end is unmistakable. Even the pacifists are convinced that by no other means is it possible to obtain a lasting peace for the future. The statesmen as well as the people believe they are fighting for the liberty of the world and for humane ideals." In these words Johan Castberg, president of the Norwegian Odelsting, one of the two houses forming the Norwegian Storthing, summed up to-day his impressions after a visit to the British front and to London.

FRENCH ON THE OFFENSIVE AT VERDUN

ANOTHER PETERBOROUGH BOY GIVES HIS LIFE FOR THE EMPIRE

French Troops Capture German Trenches At Several Points

Most Successful Offensive Blows Delivered by General Petain Since Crown Prince's Drive Commenced---Front Line Trenches Near Fort Douaumont Captured by the French Who Also Take 1000 Yards of Enemy Trenches on the Slopes of Dead Man's Hill.

ENTHUSIASM IN PARIS OVER THE NEWS

PARIS (French Official Communique), May 2.—In the most successful offensive blows delivered by General Petain since the Crown Prince launched the Verdun offensive, French troops late yesterday captured 550 yards of German trenches southeast of Fort Douaumont.

The War Office also announced to-day that in the successful attacks against the German positions on the slopes of Dead Man's Hill during Saturday and Sunday, the French captured one thousand yards of German trenches to a depth of from three to six hundred yards.

No news from the Verdun front since the beginning of the Crown Prince's offensive has aroused such enthusiasm in Paris as the publication of to-day's communique. The official statement was taken to mean not only that the German drive has been definitely checked despite the repeated German assaults on Sunday, but that the offensive has now passed to the French armies which are pushing back the German lines.

The French advance last night was made between Fort Douaumont and the village of Vaux on the northern fringe of La Caillette woods, in which much severe fighting has occurred. The positions captured by the French were first line trenches. One hundred German prisoners were taken.

West of the Meuse the artillery on both sides was active throughout the night on the front from Avocourt to Dead Man's Hill, but there were no important infantry actions. The eFrench troops contented themselves with improving the positions they captured from the Germans Saturday and Sunday against expected German counter-attacks.

Johnston Must Limit His Questioning

Special to the Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., May 2.—Sir William Meredith, chairman of the Shell Committee Enquiry to-day ruled that E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., counsel for the Opposition, must limit his questioning in cross-examination. There was to be no general enquiry, said Sir William, and some of his questions were over-ruled.

Shortly before the noon adjournment to-day, before the shells contract probe, Mr. Hellmuth finished with witness David Carnegie. The question of who would next examine the witness was then discussed.

Mr. E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., representing the Opposition, said: "There are some points that need further investigation, and I intend to go into them more fully."

Mr. J. S. Ewart, K.C., representing Sir Sam Hughes—I would like to ask Mr. Johnston to tear away the veil which he has been wearing. There are some holes in that veil, but they are not visible to the public at a great distance.

Mr. Johnston—I appear here on the authority of the Solicitor-General. I will not make any declaration. As long as I conduct myself properly I may conduct this examination along the lines I desire, always subject to the rulings of the commission.

Mr. Ewart—There are several reasons why you should declare your attitude. You are deluding the public——

Here Sir William Meredith jocularly threatened to close the enquiry till "after the war." The Commission finally decided to hear Mr. Johnston's questions anyway.

The German Official Statement

Special to the Examiner.

LONDON, May 2.—German official statement to-day says: "North of Loos during last night the German patrol entered by surprise a British trench and slaughtered many ocupants. Those who escaped death were captured."

On the east bank, south of Douaumont and in Caillette Forest, a French attack was repulsed by our troops in a several hours' hand-to-hand struggle. The German positions were completely maintained.

Party of Sinn Fein Rebels Attack Police

Special to The Examiner:

DROGHEDA, Ireland, May 2.—A party of Sinn Fein rebels attacked the police at Garristown, sixteen miles northwest of Dublin to-day, wounding four. Eight of the rebels were captured, the rest escaping. Slight disturbances continue in the suburbs of Dublin and outlying districts.

Germany Decides To Replace Tubantia

Special to the Examiner:

THE HAGUE, May 2.—Germany is finally convinced that the big Dutch liner Tubantia was torpedoed, instead of being sunk by a mine, and will replace it by a larger vessel from the Hamburg-American fleet, it was announced this afternoon.

The owners of the Tubantia will pay the difference in the cost of the two vessels.

SUSTAINED VERY SERIOUS INJURIES WHILE AT HIS WORK

Wm. Hobbs, Elm St. in a Critical Condition in St. Joseph's Hospital —Fell From a Box Car Yesterday Afternoon

BOTH JAWS BROKEN

As a result of serious injuries received by falling, it is thought, from the top of a box car in the elevator of the Quaker Oats Co., to the cement floor, William Hobbs, Elm Street, is lying in a precarious condition in St. Joseph's Hospital. The accident occurred late yesterday afternoon. As no one witnessed the unfortunate affair, it is not known exactly how it happened. The injured man has not yet regained consciousness. His condition is very critical, having had both jaws broken, as well as suffering from concussion of the brain. It is thought that he must have slipped while walking along the top of the car, and fallen, striking his head first on the cement floor.

Dr. McNulty was hastily summoned and he had him removed in the ambulance to the hospital. He was employed at the elevator of the Quaker Oats Co.

NEW APPOINTMENT HAS BEEN MADE

Mr. Allan Purvis, General Superintendent of Eastern Division of C. P. R.

MONTREAL, Q., May 1.—According to a circular issued by Mr. Price, Asst. General Manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Mr. Allan Purvis has been appointed General Superintendent of the eastern division, succeeding Mr. A. E. Stevens, transferred. Mr. Purvis joined the company on August 4, 1890, as a messenger at Vancouver. He became a storeman the following year and four years later was appointed chief clerk in the car department. On January 2, 1899, he became chief clerk in the General Superintendent's office, also at Vancouver, and in 1906 was made Superintendent of District 4, Central Division, with headquarters at Souris. Two years later he was transferred to Nelson in a similar capacity, and on October 17, 1909 he resigned from the Company. After an elapse of six years, on March 1, 1915 he was appointed Superintendent of District 2, Ontario Division, and now comes to Montreal as General Superintendent of the Eastern Division.

ANOTHER PETERBORO' BOY LAYS DOWN HIS LIFE AT THE FRONT

Corp. Herb. S. W. Edwards, Son of Pioneer Sergt. J. W. Edwards of 39th Battalion, Officially Reported Died of Wounds---93rd Battalion Will Commence Mobilization To-morrow When Norwood and Havelock Detachments Will Arrive---To-day's Orders and General Military News.

Another Peterborough boy has given his life for the Empire in the great struggle in Europe. This morning Mrs. J. W. Edwards, 485 Sherbrooke street, received the sad news that her son, Corp. Herbert Simon Wesley Edwards, 4th Canadian Infantry Brigade, is officially reported to have died of wounds at No. 10 Casualty Clearing Station on April 26th.

Corp. Edwards is a native son of Peterborough, having been born in this city in September, 1895. His father, Pioneer Sergt. J. Wes Edwards, who is at West Sandling Camp, England, with the 39th Battalion, is one of the best known Peterborough men who has gone overseas, having been a member of the 57th Regiment for over twenty-five years. His son, Corp. Edwards, now reported died of wounds enlisted here in January, 1915 with the 39th Battalion, after having tried in vain to go with the first contingent. He became a member of the machine gun section of the 39th and after training in England was drafted into a 4th Brigade Infantry Battalion and went to the front. His letters home have been of a bright, cheery nature, showing that he was taking the hardships at the front philosophically as a soldier should. In a recent letter sent to his father in England, he had expressed the hope that they might be able to arrange to have Mrs. Edwards come over to England to visit her husband and son.

Corp. Edwards' last visit to his home in Peterborough was on the occasion of Pte. A. Nicholls' funeral, a Peterborough member of the 39th who died at Belleville. Corp. Edwards was a member of the firing party on that occasion.

In addition to his sorrowing parents he is survived by a younger brother, Reginald, and two sisters, Mrs. Elliott, wife of Lance Corp. Elliott of the 93rd Battalion, and Mrs. C. E. Hoult, of Toronto.

The young soldier was a bright, likeable boy and was very popular in the city and among the members of the 39th Battalion.

The sympathy of the citizens generally will be extended to Pioneer Sergt. and Mrs. Edwards in their bereavement.

West Sandling, Kent
April 14th, 1916

Dear Friend,—I must write you a few words of appreciation for the kind thoughtfulness of yourself and your co-workers in sending us boys footwear, no doubt other of the boys have written you before telling you that after our rifles that is the most necessary thing we need, and if we have plenty of good warm socks we save our feet and you can realize how welcome your present becomes. Another thing we realize is that although we have made many of us heavy sacrifices to come over here to do our best for our King and Country, we cannot help but admire the loyal hearts of our women at home who are doing their "bit" in this gigantic struggle for freedom and justice, it shows us that although we are far away from them we have not been forgotten, but love of liberty truth and honour has caused our women to band together to do their part to uphold the principles for which their men are fighting and for which we will struggle for until we secure the Master Hand and ours shall be the ultimate victory. I wish you to convey to the members of your club the sincere thanks of one of your old Peterborough boys his appreciation of their kind thoughtfulness and when on a long night march or when in the trenches, you will not be forgotten and may your work have God's blessing and I wish you all success and trust when this struggle has been mastered that I will be able to personally thank you each.

500 REBELS KILLED IN THE FIGHTING IN DUBLIN

Wounded Will Reach a Total of 1500 According to the Estimates of Soldiers—Far in Excess of the Former Estimates.

HOSPITALS CROWDED

DUBLIN, May 2.—At least 500 rebels were killed and 1,500 wounded in seven days of fighting in the streets of Dublin, it was estimated to-day by soldiers who completed a canvass of the city.

The estimate is conservative, officers said. Rebel bodies were found beneath the ruins of the general post office wrecked by British shell fire in Liberty Hall, and in a number of other buildings demolished by artillery or burned to the ground.

The number of casualties was far in excess of early estimates and many bodies are believed to lie beneath the ruins still unsearched.

The Dublin hospitals are overflowing with wounded, including many women and children non-combatants.

Lord Donoughmore, former commander of the British forces in Egypt and former member of the British cabinet, is among the wounded. He was shot while motoring to his country home north of Dublin, escaping however, with only a flesh wound.

A small body of rebels determined to die hard, fired the last volley of the Dublin rebellion last night from a position near Westand Station, which was captured by the rebels early last week.

The crackle of government machine guns followed, then an ominous silence. The whole party had been wiped out.

The city was resuming its normal life to-day. Shops were re-opening and the people of Dublin were getting their first square meals for more than a week.

CORP. HERB. EDWARDS.
Well known Peterborough boy, who is officially reported died of wounds on April 26th. Corp. Edwards, who left here with the 39th Battalion, was a son of Pioneer Sergt. J. W. Edwards of the same battalion.

CONSCRIPTION IN GREAT BRITAIN TO BE GENERAL NOW

Premier Asquith Announces Government Has Decided on a Policy of General Compulsion to Take Effect at Once

MARRIED MEN, TOO

LONDON, May 2.—Premier Asquith this afternoon announced that the government has decided upon a policy of general compulsion in England. Announcement was made in the House of Commons.

The Premier's announcement came as a complete surprise. It had been understood that the Prime Minister would give the voluntary system of obtaining recruits for the army a few weeks more trial, before asking the enactment of a law, calling to the colours all married men eligible for service as well as single men included in the conscription measure which recently passed Parliament.

Premier Asquith's decision for compulsory service is a complete victory for the Minister of Munitions, Lloyd George, and the Northcliffe papers which have waged a campaign for general military service for many months.

The adoption of the policy of general conscription will add to the British a force variously estimated at between three and six hundred thousand men.

Premier Asquith held several conferences with radical labour leaders to whom he is said to have offered proof that more men were imperatively needed by England at once. The Brtsh surrender at Kut-El-Amara and the Irish rebellion unquestionably strengthened the hand of the general conscription advocates.

Whether a struggle will ensue in Parliament when the Government bill for the conscription of the married men comes up for a vote cannot be definitely predicted.

The Government will introduce a bill for general conscription to-morrow.

The Prime Minister informed Commons that since the beginning of the war the British Empire had raised more than five million men for service.

The British army is composed of 83 divisions, he said, not counting Indian forces.

NEW BUTCHER SHOP IN WEST END

PRESENTED WITH OAK WRITING DESK

Mr. F. E. Ellis Severs His Connection With Farm and Dairy—Remembered by the Staff

Mr. F. E. Ellis, who has been associated with Farm and Dairy for the past six years, for the most of this time in the capacity of editor, has severed his connection with that publication, in order to take up farming in the vicinity of Campbellville, Ont. Mr. Ellis will pay particular attention to dairying, for which his close connection with the dairy industry during the years of his editorship specially fits him.

On Thursday, April 27th, the staff of Farm and Dairy presented Mr. Ellis with a solid oak writing desk, in appreciation of his long connection with the publication, and of the cordial relations which had always existed between him and the other members of the staff. Although Mr. Ellis has ceased to follow journalism as a profession, it is expected that his pen will not be idle, and that he will still be frequently heard from in the agricultural press.

THE TREND OF THE WAR.

The surrender of British troops at Kut-el-Amara, enforced by lack of food supplies, is a regrettable, but not a discouraging thing. The expedition may have been ill-advised and ineffectually supported, but the failure to relieve the beleaguered garrison is not due to any lack of valour or lack of trying on the part of the relieving force, under command of the Canadian Commander, Sir Percy Lake. Natural obstacles, such as flooded grounds, which no courage could overcome, prevented the progress of the relieving force. The incident is disgusting—that's about all there is to it. It will have no important bearing on the outcome of the war. Great Britain makes muddles, but in spite of them she has in the past "muddled-through" in some way and come out conqueror. The effect of the surrender will be lessened by the close proximity of Russian troops in force. We cannot expect to win this war without reverses, and the setback in Mesopotama to British troops is more than compensated by the smashing blows the Teutonic allies are receiving day after day. We might feel down-hearted and discouraged if the Entente Allies were in the serious hole in which the German and Austrian and Turkish nations find themselves—and every day the hole becomes wider and deeper. Germany entered this war with a marvellous completeness of preparation. She has failed from the outset to achieve any of her aims against nations caught practically unprepared; Germany has only barely held her own. Now that Russia has millions of men available, now that Britain and France and Italy have larger armies and plentiful supplies of guns, ammunition and stores the Huns will find the "going" harder every day, and the day of their "downfall" coming nearer. The trend of the war, for us and our allies is upward and onward to victory. "It's a long, long way to Tipperary," but the way is growing shorter every day. Being a little anxious won't hurt us. Scott tells us that "hope is brightest when it dawns from fears."

OUR RAILWAYS.

Canada, in taking the lead in railway building enterprise, has rather overdone the thing. We have three transcontinental railways when, as things are now, two would have been quite enough. The Government of Canada has been liberal in spending money for transportation, one of the indispensable conditions of growth and development. We have spent millions, and are spending millions, on canals, and we own the canals. Why should we not own the railways? Considering the liberal public aid and the railways have received, we almost own them now: if we subtract the amount of national investment in railways we should have to pay comparatively little to own them outright. The C. P. R. was magnicently dowered by the Government; and because of this fact, because it was earliest in the field, and because it has been well managed, it is in good, prosperous condition; but the Grand Trunk Pacific which the country practically built and the Canadian Northern, to which the country has given millions, will both possibly "go under" unless more national aid is forthcoming. If we have to give this, why not add it to what we have already given these roads, and take over and operate them — by commission — which will help insure good business management? It is true the present is not a very good time to finance such an undertaking, but we must look ahead and prepare for the future. Half of the areas of Canada have not been yet half developed, and there is work to be done when the war is over, and the work of construction begins in real earnest, all of these railways will be needed and will provide rich returns for what we may spend in their acquirement. This would be a wise method of a preparedness which will add immeasurably to our future victories in the battle of nationhood. We see how preparedness, systematic and thorough has made Germany so formidable a foe. So in the peaceful work of national campaigning we shall gain by wise preparedness. The situation must be faced, without recrimination as to past mistakes. We must declare a political truce, as we have done so successfully, so far as unity of action is concerned, in the prosecution of our share of the war. Though we were unprepared for war we have done great things, and Britain has done the same. But there is no doubt that if Great Britain had been as well prepared as Germany was the war would have ended in victory long ago. If we are prepared in the way of transportation, by effective transcontinental railways, instead of streaks of rust, we shall sooner conquer the place in the world which our immense areas and immense resources naturally qualify us to take.

TREES AND FLOWERS.

Mr. Roland Denne, Chairman of the Property Committee of the Board of Education, is not only a good member, but a public-spirited citizen with a soul above weights and measures, or yard sticks, or bonds and ledgers. With a sense of duty to the public and to the beauty of our school grounds, he has arranged for the planting of about fifty trees around the grounds of the Queen Mary and King Edward schools. He has selected the best trees to plant, elms; and if he is fortunate to get somebody that knows how to plant trees and cares for trees, the public benefit will be great. There is a great difference not always recognized between the process of planting a tree and a fence post. If the trees are planted properly and not, as is almost always the case with too much top left on the tree or the roots necessarily mutilated in removal to support, they will grow, if properly protected and watered the first season. Two or three times trees have been planted on the streets surrounding the Queen Mary school grounds, and to-day none of these are growing. The money spent has been wasted and the time lost because scrubby, unhealthy trees were scrubbily and perfunctorily planted. It needs taste and interest to successfully deal with tree growth. When the Queen Mary grounds came into possession of the School Board there was standing about midway on the south side of the grounds a magnificent thorn tree with the growth of a hundred years in its sturdy trunk and spreading branches. In "improving" the grounds some vandal cut the tree down and committed a virtual act of sacrilege. German "kultur" was applied to it, when civilized culture and taste were needed to preserve it. It is to weep to think of the scores of magnificent old trees that have within the past few years, been sacrificed in different parts of the city.

Mr. Denne is doing a good thing in planting trees, and it is likely they will grow; for it seems almost as if plants and trees know those who love them and prize them, and respond with lusty growth. Now is the time—and none to spare—to plant trees, and the city should be planting a good many trees on streets where they are needed. But it is feared that nothing will be done.

This is a good time, too, to plant shrubs and flowers. What a beautiful city we should have, in our short summer, if all did as much as some do in the way of flower culture. It needs only a little work, a little taste, a little care, and little expenditure of money. The public taste for flowers is growing, and we have first-class green-houses to supply all demands. We are at war, and we have to forego many things; make many sacrifices; but we need not sacrifice the higher things, the cult of the beautiful in trees and flowers any more than we would think of neglecting our church going, the worship of God in person, with which, as a natural complement is associated the worship of God in nature—in the beauties of trees and flowers, other and beautiful expressions of Him self.

THE QUESTION OF THE NATIONALIZATION OF CANADIAN RAILWAYS

The railway problem that confronts the Dominion is too serious to be dealt with in a partisan spirit by either Liberals or Conservatives. Were Sir Wilfrid Laurier to return to power it would be for him a thorn in the flesh, as it has proved for Sir Robert Borden. Both parties must share the responsibility for the construction of two transcontinental systems in advance of the country's need. Liberals hold very strong views as to the unwisdom of Sir Robert Borden's Government in aiding the C. N. R. to construct a third line across the Rockies at a time when it was already apparent that the Grand Trunk Pacific would have difficulty in securing traffic to warrant the operation of its mountain division on an adequate scale. Conservatives retort by declaring that the National Trans-continental between Winnipeg and Quebec was built without reasonable consideration of traffic possibilities through a region much of which is unfit for settlement, while the anticipated use of the road for winter grain export is not likely to be realized for lack of return freight westbound from the Atlantic seaboard.

There is abundant room for recrimination and political controversy as to the responsibility for the present position of affairs, but recrimination and controversy will not pay the interest on railway bonds or keep unprofitable but necessary train sevices going. The question before the country is: Shall the people of Canada provide further direct aid from the public Treasury to keep the C. N. R and G. T. P. Railways from becoming bankrupt? Sir Robert Borden is said to have asked his followers in caucus to think over the matter. The Government Press suggests that it will be necessary to loan the Canadian Northern fifteen million dollars, and Grand Trunk Pacific ten millions to enable them to meet their obligations. It is intimated that unless aid is forthcoming both roads may be forced to default and pass into the hands of receivers. This, it is asserted, would greatly injure the standing of Canada in the money markets of the world, and lead to a general questioning of the solvency of Canadian enterprises which obtain their capital abroad.

Are there but two courses of action open to the people? Must Canada submit to be "touched" year after year by privately-owned railways which insist on public aid, or, in the alternative, take the risk of a financial panic as a result of their confession of insolvency? The Globe believes that the way out is to be found in railway nationization. Nowhere else in the world except in Canada would the people by subsidies and guarantees provide the great bulk of the capital required for railway building and hand the railways over to private capitalists who, as in the case of Mackenzie and Mann of the C.N.R., cannot show that they have risked any of their own money in the enterprise. Why should Canada not own her railways like most of the progressive nations of the world? State ownership of railways is the rule in all other British overseas Dominions and in twelve out of seventeen of the Crown colonies. In the United Kingdom one of the first war measures resolved upon was the taking over temporarily by the State of all the railways in the country. Mr Lloyd George recently said the results had proved so satisfactory that the State would undoubtedly continue to operate the railways after the close of the war.

The Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific systems could be acquired to-day by the Dominion on the assumption of their bonded obligations. The common stock of both companies, which carries control, is worthless. The present owners of the stock cannot by any possibility hold on till it becomes of value. Even the bonded debts of the roads represent an excessive capitalization, the interest upon which may not be earned by the operation of the roads for a decade or more. Assuming that because of this financial situation the nationalization of the C. N. R. and G. T. P. sooner or later is inevitable Parliament has still to face the question of taking immediate action or continuing the policy of temporary aid till the end of the war and tackling the railway problem then.

The Globe does not believe that any advantage is to be gained by postponement of the inevitable. The only active opponents of railway nationalization are the directors and larger shareholders of the C. P. R. who object to what is spoken of as unfair State competition. They do not fear to fight against railways owned by private capitalists, but object to competition with State railways, the managers of which could dip their hands into the Public Treasury to make good deficits in operating expenses or fixed charges. The attitude of the C. P. R. appears to be —nationalize all or none. Were it not for this complication and the power of the C. P. R. in the lobby of Parliament the problem would easily be solved. Perhaps the solution will be found in the acquisition of all the privately-owned roads, including the C. P. R., and the adoption by Parliament of a self-denying ordinance providing for the operation of Canada's railways for a ten-year period by a Board of Railway experts, with Lord Shaughnessy as Chairman. There would be reasonable assurance under these conditions that the inevitable deficit would be kept down to the smallest possible figure, and that the system would be operated efficiently.—The Globe.

SPLENDID CONCERT BY BAND OF THE 93rd

The people who braved last night's downpour of rain to attend the concert given by the band of the 93rd Battalion in Victoria Hall, were well rewarded, the programme being one of the finest the band has given since its organization. The khaki musicians have never been heard to better advantage than on the occasion of last night's concert and their playing was a credit alike to the splendid training and conductorship of Bandmaster Hughes and to the ability of the individual members of the band.

Probably the feature number last evening was the grand selection, "Verdi," a collection of master pieces from the works of the famous Italian composer, including such gems as the "Mierare" and the "Anvil chorus" from "Il Trovatore," etc., an offering that required brilliancy in conductorship and execution and that was played magnificently. The audience showed its appreciation by warm applause that compelled Bandmaster Hughes to bow several times. The beautiful overture to "William Tell" was another of the big features of the programme, the number being played with a full appreciation of its possibilities, the storm scene passage being admirably handled. The selection from "Faust" was delightfully presented and two descriptive numbers, "Forest Scenes" and "An Indian Ride," added variety to the programme and furnished further evidence of the ability of the band. Sousa's stirring march, "Stars and Stripes" was a fitting finale to a great programme.

An interesting feature of the evening was the rendition of two local compositions, Mr. Asa Huycke's new march, "Irresistible," dedicated to the 93rd Band, was the opening number of the programme, and won instantaneous favour with the audience by its stirring qualities. Mr. Huycke introduced Bandmaster Hughes' patriotic song, "Sons of Empire" for the first time and the number was enthusiastically received. The words are clever and the music catchy, and Mr. Huycke sang it in his usual effective style. Later on in the evening Mr. Huycke gave a clever piano improvisation of Mendelssohn's "Spring Song," and had to respond to an encore.

Bandsman Gilbert's trombone solo, "Asleep in the Deep," was played in masterful style and was warmly received. While Bandsmen W. Loader and H. Loader scored heavily in their concertina duet.

The whole programme was a great success and it was unfortunate that the inclemency of the weather prevented an audience of a size worthy of the band's playing.

No spooning, only one dance and 1 pound of candy a week is an order to the women athletes of Wisconsin University.

Doctors Say Phosphorus Cures Nervousness in Three to Five Days

People have been suffering untold agony for years doctoring for their nerves when there real trouble was, want of phosphorus in their system.

Doctors are surprised after many years of experience to find that they were unable to find that the real cause of nervous weak run down people was due directly to lack of phosphorus for the nervous system and iron for the blood circulation. The moment that phosphorus is given you can notice the nerves beginning to tighten and you begin to get control of your nerves once again. Without phosphorus the system becomes weaken, your stomach is unable to digest the little food that you eat, your liver becomes torpid, the kidneys start to pain you, the blood becomes clogged with impurities, the color of your face is muddy, then your hands, head and legs begin to shake through loss of control of your nerves. One is taking medicine for kidney trouble another is taking laxative every night, others taking poisonous spring tonics, some can't sleep for twitching nerves and some give up all hopes thinking they are too old and there is no hope for them. You have almost ruined your system and vitality by taking all these medicines for something that never ailed you and you have no person to blame now but yourself if you do not start at once by going to your druggist and get a few cents worth of Bonised Phosphorus with iron and take one or two tablets after each good meal. Give yourself a good ice cold bath every morning, rubbing yourself well; eat plenty of good wholesome vegetables, fruit and drink plenty of water every time you think of it. Here is good advice which millionaires are paying specialists thousands of dollars for to look well, eat well, sleep well, work well digest well look well. As we are here only for a short stay so why not be healthy, strong, vigor and enjoy our short, sweet life. People can talk as they like about all the wonders, life and death, stories about medicines that have cured them, but when you come right down to scientific proofs, hard facts, there has been nothing in medical science to compare with just ordinary Bronsed Phosphorus with iron to restore wrecked systems, put vigorous life in old people, color in your cheeks, clear thinking, strong nerves and strength like a giant.

Bronsed Phosphorus with iron does not contain an atom of arsenic strychnine or any poison which has been found so harmful in almost every tonic. It is easy to take, does not upset the stomach and is taken up by the system immediately making you feel better at once. It is dispensed in this city at either of F. C. Webber's stores at 50c a box.

$20,000 A YEAR NOT ENOUGH FOR JOHN JACOB ASTOR, 4 YEARS OLD

New York, May 2.—John Jacob Astor, four years old, finds that it costs him $75.00 a day to live, and during the last year his expenses have been $27,393.20. Mrs. Madeleine Talmage Force Astor, his mother and guardian of his property, filed her second annual accounting in the Surrogates Court yesterday. Mrs. Astor shows that although the court has allowed her to spend $20,000 a year in support of her own son from his own income, it has been impossible to keep all his wants supplied with that sum.

Every minute the youngest heir to the Astor fortune spends a little more than five cents. Every hour he spends $3.15, and not a week goes by that he does not average $530.63 expended for his food, lodging, clothing, education and recreation.

The high cost of living at the age of four is somewhat offset by the fact that Mrs. Astor shows in her accounting a balance of more than $150,000 in income unexpended and belonging to John. The amount has accumulated from the trust fund of $3,000,000 during the yar ending December 31, 1915. The trust fund was left by John Jacob Astor, the boy's father, who died in the Titantic disaster in 1912.

Mrs. Astor has received the $20,000 due her as guardian, but asserts that she has been forced to spend the additional $7,493.20 from her own income. A year ago she applied for a larger annual sum than $20,000. She makes no similar application this year.

$209 FOR PHYSICIANS.

The accounting shows that merchants have received $861.42 from Mrs. Astor in payment of goods purchased for her son's personal use during the last year. She has spent $225 for her bond of $120,000 as her son's guardian. Attorneys and legal disbursements for the boy amounted to $1,256.75, and his nurse for the period of the accounting cost $720. Although he was not very ill during the year his physicians received $209.

Since John lives with his mother in the old Astor home at No. 840 Fifth avenue it has been deemed proper that he should bear one third of the up-keep of the establishment. The taxes on the place during the year amounted to $35,530, and the son's share is $11,843.33. The general upkeep of the home costs $29,000, of which John must pay 9,666.67. The federal income tax on the son's trust of $3,000,000 amounted to $2,541.94, and the federal tax on money received by Mrs. Astor as general guardian from the trustees of her son's property was $176.09.

THIS MORNING'S POLICE COURT

John Vance came all the way from Beavertann to get a supply of 'red-eye.' At least that is the admission he made in the Police Court this morning. He was arrested yesterday at the Grand Trunk station.

"Where do you live?" inquired Chief Thampson.

In Beaverton," replied the prisoner.

"Local option in Beaverton?"

"Yes; I wouldn't be down here if it wasn't," admitted Vance.

He was fined $2.00.

Slept in a Wagon.

Samuel Todd, who gave his home as Woodstock, was found sleeping in a wagon. He was charged with vagrancy. He wanted to go to work but first will have to find a way of paying a two dollar fine.

A couple of local men were remanded to gaol for a week. Vagrancy was the charge in each case.

"How long have you resided here?" asked Magistrate Dumble of one of the men.

"All my life," was the reply.

"That's too long," observed the Magistrate.

Special to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, May 2.—Colonel David Carnegie was still on witness stand when the Royal Commission investigating the Kyto charges resumed this morning.

Mr. Hellmuth continued his questioning regarding contract for 300,000 cartridge cases let to the Edward Valve Company, of 50 Church Street, New York.

Judgment For Bacon Brings Bench Scandal

Chicago, May 1.—Judge Richard S. Tuthill's recent decision that Bacon wrote Shakespeare's works is to be investigated by his fellow-Judges of the Circuit Court. Charges of collusion in the filing of the suit have been made, and Chief Justice Smith has called a special meeting of the Judges for to-morrow to discuss subjects affecting the "dignity and standing of the courts."

Anxiety in Spain Over Revolution

LISBON, May 2.—Revolutionist activities in Spain is causing the authorities grave anxiety according to advices received here to-day. After several years of comparative internal quiet, the industrial conditions due to war are stirring the anti-monarchists to revolt against King Alphonso.

LEFT BED, SHELL CAME.

Explosion in Lowestoft Home Spared Man's Trousers.

London, May 1.—A Daily News despatch from Lowestoft relates a peculiar incident of the bombardment of the town by German warships.

A citizen heard the firing to seaward, and jumping out of bed, ran into the street in his night clothes.

Just then a big German shell plunged into his house and exploded under his bedroom, tearing the whole upper part of the house to bits. The owner looked up and saw his trousers and waistcoat, which he had put on the chair beside his bed the night before, hanging from a branch of a tree a short distance away.

This Heroic Girl Rescued Wounded

HOLYHEAD, via London, May 1.—Eye-witnesses arriving here state that when they left Dublin Thursday night Sackville street was completely in the hands of the rebels and was blockaded with barbed wire entanglements. Hundreds of visitors in the hotels were unable to get away. Looting of shops was in progress in many quarters and horses were lying dead in the streets.

A resident of London returning from Dublin praised the heroism of an Irish girl 16 years old who ran from her home like a deer in the face of a hail of snipers' bullets to rescue wounded soldiers. The informant said:

"She grasped a wounded soldier under the arms—a stranger to her for he had just arrived from England—and dragged him to where others stood ready to carry him to a hospital. Then back she ran for another of the stricken soldiers. Her example inspired scores. She repeatedly led nurses and doctors from a hospital, almost in the face of a rain of fire from buildings, to places where the wounded lay. Loud were the cries that she deserved a Victoria Cross."

Dingy overshoes can be made to shine if wiped off with a cloth wrung out of ammonia water.

An old piano stool will be found very useful in the kitchen as it can be adjusted to different heights.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Ald. Edgar Objects to Reduction in the Caretaker's Salary

South Ward Representative Makes a Fine Distinction Which Fails to Find Support Among His Colleagues—Mr. Robt. Wilson Must Share the Burdens of Civic Economy With Others of the City Hall Staff

At last night's meeting of the City Council, Ald. Edgar failed to get a seconder to an amendment excluding Mr. Robert Wilson, caretaker at the city hall from the list of those who participate in the ten per cent. reduction in salaries. Mr. Wilson's familiar figure is well known on the twelfth of July when he may be seen to advantage on the hurricane-deck of a grey horse, while Ald. Edgar sallies forth in his shirt sleeves and a silk chapeau to pay homage to the venturesome monarch who crossed the Boyne on that eventful occasion. It is little wonder that the fraternal spirit beats strong in the breast of the worthy representative from the south ward. He appeared to be somewhat peeved when he learned that Mr. Wilson was included in the ten per cent. salary cut. The latter was intended to apply only to salaries of seven hundred and fifty dollars and over. Ald. Edgar pointed out that Mr. Wilson is in receipt of six hundred dollars a year from the city and an additional two hundred dollars from the Peterborough Utilities Commission whose offices are under the same roof. "I can't understand why the cut was made," said Ald. Edgar, who went on to explain that so far as the city was concerned Mr. Wilson received only six hundred dollars.

A Fair Salary.

Ald. Evans was of the opinion that eight hundred dollars was a pretty fair salary.

"I fail to see why Mr. Wilson was picked on," reiterated Ald. Edgar.

Ald. Evans — "Assistant Chief Jamieson of the fire department receives a regular salary from the city and an additional amount for looking after the pumping station in the south end of the city. His salary was cut."

Ald. Edgar—"They 'got it back.'"

"Not from the city," volunteered a couple of the aldermen.

Ald. Stratton assured the Council that the matter was in the hands of the manufacturers who would see that the officials effected were reimbursed. "The manufacturers have had a very successful year," said Ald. Stratton, "and are prepared to deal liberally with those effected."

Ald. Langford failed to see the point in Ald. Edgar's contention. Like Mayor Duffus, the north ward representative argued that Mr. Wilson receives the whole of his salary from the city but that two hundred dollars of the amount was charged back to the Utilities Commission as their share in the cost of caring for the graveyard of civil ventures.

Ald. Edgar was prepared to move an amendment even at the expense of opening up the whole question of salaries, but not a single member of the Council had the temerity to second the motion.

PRESENTATION TO MRS. WHALLEY

Local W. C. T. U. Remember Their Leader Who is Leaving Peterboro'

The W.C.T.U. held their regular monthly meeting on Friday afternoon in the Y.W.C.A.

Mrs. Shield gave an interesting and instructive paper on "The Enfranchisement of Women."

As the President, Mrs. Whalley is leaving the city, the following address was read by Mrs. Campbell, after which Mrs. Knapman presented her with a beautiful bouquet of roses and carnations.

Dear Mrs. Whalley,—There is an old proverb which says that coming events cast their shadows before and I think that the members of the W.C.T.U. have been walking in that shadow for sometime. We have known of the probability of your removal from Peterborough and known too that that removal would deprive us of the faithful and efficient officer who has presided over our society during the past year and we cannot but feel the depressing influence of the thought. Your familiarity with every department of W.C.T.U. work, your determination to make our work a factor in Peterborough's uplift, your enthusiasm in whatever you undertook have been a stimulus to us and made us feel that our President was a tower of strength to us and we have been glad to second your efforts especially in co-operation with the temperance forces which worked so successfully for a dry Ontario.

To-day we are a society without a leader, very much like an orphan family without a head. We do not have any fear of your success in another field of toil. We are sure the dear Lord will guide you in the future as He has in the past and we pray that many years of happy and effective service may be given you in the Master's vineyard. As for ourselves, we realize that we need to be divinely guided in our selection of one of our numbers to occupy the place made vacant by your removal. We pray that you and we may alike dwell under the shadow of the Almighty and may so live and serve, that at last we may hear the well done of the Master and we trust that when it is well with you, you will remember us.

Mrs. Whalley made a very feeling reply, thanking the members for their kindness and urging them to stand by their new leader.

The meeting was closed by singing the doxology.

MR. JOHN CALLARD IS PROBABLY DROWNED

LONDON, Ont., May 1.—A three-days' search has failed to recover the body of Mr. John Callard, who it is practically certain has been drowned in Kettle Creek, Port Stanley. Dragging the creek was continued until dark this evening, and during the day a tug was also used on the lake. Mr. Collard, who had spent Thursday afternoon at the lake side with Major John Graham of London, had left the Loney House about 9 o'clock to get some fish at one of the fish houses before coming home, and the last seen of him was on the wharf. It is believed that in the darkness he stumbled into the water. For the past year he had lived retired but for forty years prior to that was a druggist in this city.

Before cleaning copper kettles fill them with boiling water. They will then be found to polish more quickly.

SHELL INSPECTOR IS IN TROUBLE

St. Catharines Man is Charged With Seditious Words

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., May 7.—Charged with using seditious words towards King George to the effect that the latter had no right to be King, and should be dethroned, Geo. Wilson Ramsay, a Scotchman, aged 22, a Dominion shell inspector at the munitions plant here, appeared for preliminary hearing before Magistrate Campbell this morning. The Crown Attorney submitted as evidence the report of Ramsay's answers to questions put by the military authorities.

M. J. McCarron, prisoner's counsel, held that it was a queer state of affairs that a man should be brought before a military officer, questioned, and a charge laid upon what he said in reply, especially as he had not been warned that anything he said might be used against him as evidence.

The Magistrate remarked that the country being at war, the authorities had to use every precaution. Two years ago such a remark as Ramsay is alleged to have made might have gone unnoticed. He, himself, was of opinion there had been too much freedom of speech. Speeches had been allowed in London which, to his mind, were absolutely treason, yet nobody said anything. Of course, this would not be allowed now, he supposed. As he wished to look over the statement he adjourned the case until to-morrow.

HIBERNIANS DEPLORE THE DUBLIN RIOT

"God Forgive Them For They Know Not What They Do" Says Minister of Justice

OTTAWA, May 1.—By resolution and patriotic addresses, members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, at a mass meeting at Ottawa held in aid of funds for the Sportsmen's Patriotic Association last night, expressed confidence in John Redmond, leader of the Irish Nationalists, and denounced the revolutionary Sinn Feiners.

The speakers of the evening were Hon. C. J. Doherty, Minister of Justice, one of the leaders of Irish thought in Canada, and J. C. Fox, K.C., of Perth, Provincial President of the A.O.H.

"There may be some half-crazed Irishmen who are in this outbreak with the hallucination that they are helping Ireland," said the Minister of Justice, "God forgive them for they know not what they do."

Elizabeth Spencer

Mr. John Allan, president of the Peterboro Choral Society, will introduce Miss Elizabeth Spencer, the popular mezzo-soprano, at a private hearing at the Collegiate Hall, to-morrow (Wednesday) evening to which a number of prominent musicians and music lovers have received cards of introduction.

Miss Spencer received her musical education in Europe. When she returned to this country her remarkable voice and thorough training immediately attracted attention and her professional career has been one of great activity and success.

King's Second Son To Resume Duties

Prince Albert Completely Recovers From His Lengthy Treatment.

London, May 1. — Prince Albert, second son of King George, who has been undergoing a long course of treatment for a gastric disorder, has completely recovered, and shortly will resume his duties as a midshipman in the navy.

Prince Albert in August, 1914, was stricken with appendicitis, and after an operation returned to his ship in February the following year. In November, 1915, however, it was announced that he was suffering from gastric trouble and would have to remain in London for some time to undergo special treatment.

PLANS FOR A FOOTBRIDGE ENDORSED BY THE COUNCIL

The City Will Have to Bear the First Cost, Also Cost of Maintenance —Chickens Kept in a Summer Kitchen on Gilmour Street – Regular Meeting of the City Council.

Plans for a footbridge to be constructed on the north side of the C P.R. railway bridge crossing the Otonabee river, were approved at last night's meeting of the City Council. The city will have to bear the first cost of the work which will be in the neighborhood of three or four thousand dollars also the cost of maintenance. The matter was left in the hands of the Railway Committee at the request of Ald. Edgar. It was first proposed to turn it over to the Board of Works where it rightfully belongs and where the appropriation for its construction has been placed As Mayor Duffus pointed out is is a matter that comes under the head of streets and bridges. Ald Edgar claimed it for his committee until finally the Council agreed to let him have it. It will have to be taken over by the Board of Works eventually. The matter of constructing a footbridge across the Otonabee existed long before a committee on railways was thought of.

TELEPHONE A HINDERANCE.

Mr. W. J. Henry, assessor, finds it detrimental to his work to have Sanitary Inspector Spence's telephone located in his office. So many people want to browbeat the Inspector each day that Mr. Henry is kept busy running back and forth between the two offices. When a call comes in for Mr. Spence, the assessor has to run the length of a hall to reach Mr. Spence's office in order to notify him. "I find the 'phone a hindrance" said Mr. Henry in his letter to the council.

Ald Stratton suggested that the situation be reversed by placing the telephone in the Sanitary Inspector's office.

The matter was referred to the Property Committee with power to act.

DAMAGE CLAIM.

George S. McCartney of East City submitted a claim to the Council arising from damages alleged to have resulted to his property when that section of the city was flooded during the spring freshets. Included in the inventory was a number of hens that were drowned also preserves that that were destroyed. The Board of Works will be asked to look into the matter and take such steps as will avoid repetition. The bill in Mr. Cartney's case amounted to twenty-five dollars and forthy-five cents. A bill for fifty dollars and fifty-two cents from the McDonald lumber company for lumber that was carried down the river about the same period.

A BIG DEMONSTRATION.

The Council endorsed a proposal submitted by Mrs. R. B. Rogers of the Peterborough Patriotic League, requesting Capt. J. H. Burnham, M.P., to use his influence with a view of having the 93rd Battalion remain in the city until after the twenty-fourth of May so as to facilitate a big demonstration to be held on that date.

GRANT TO BAND.

Ald. Edgar wanted to know why the Finance Committee took no action in the matter of a request for a grant to the Salvation Army Band. Ald. Stratton, chairman of the committee said he gave the members of the committee a chance to express themselves which was not accepted and the next order of business was proceeded with. The explanation satisfied Ald. Edgar. On motion of Aldermen Duncan and Dobbin a grant of one hundred and fifty dollars was made to the band.

Steps will be taken to have a couple of poles on the south side of Romaine street between George and Lock streets removed. Ald Saunders advised the Council that they constituted a danger in their present position. A number of poles that were erected in connection with a bill board that was never completed, will also be removed.

A SET OF DISHES.

Glass bott'es thrown in the roadway are a menace to public safety, declared Ald. Saunders, who rides a bicycle and probably knows what it means to have a puncture about a mile and a half from dinner. Ald. Stratton said he knew where there was a whole set of dishes in the roadway. The police will be asked to look into the matter.

WIDE TIRES

The Board of Works will be asked to investigate the merits or demerits of wide tires. Ald. Edgar is of the opinion that roads would be much improved by the use of a four inch tires on vehicles of one ton capacity and over. Ald Weir who is in the coal and wood business, does not think it fair to ask vehicle owners to build the roads and roll them. A wagon with wide tires catches every stone in the road.

BY-LAW REFERRED BACK.

A by-law respecting "the health and welfare of the inhabitants of the City of Peterborough," was referred back to the Property Committee for further consideration. It concerns the harbouring of cattle, poultry, hogs, etc., with the city limits and makes special provisions for the construction of stables from, the standpoint of drainage, ventilation, etc. Its first object is to compel all owners of stable to put in watertight floors and otherwise improve their premises. The majority of the aldermen thought that the by-law was too drastic and would tend to put the owners of such premises to unnecessary expense. Ald. Langford was in favour of a measure to prohibit the construction of stables near dwelling houses. A case in point was cited where a man turned his woodshed around and converted it into a stable. This was only five feet from a dwelling house. Ald. Weir did not thing it required a by-law to cover such cases. A case of that kind constituted a nuisance and could be dealt with in the regular way.

CHICKENS IN SUMMER KITCHEN

Sanitary Inspector Spence who was present at the meeting urged the passage of that portion of the by-law relating to the housing of chickens. He knew of a case on Gilmour street where chickens and rabbits were kept in a summer kitchen.

The Property Committee will be asked to modify the proposed by-law. A by-law authorising a reduction of twenty dollars in the cost of cigarette licenses, was read a third time and passed. The original license fee was forty dollars. It now stands at twenty dollars.

Mr. Frick on behalf of the residents of Jackson Avenue requested that some steps be taken to improve Jackson avenue. The matter was referred to the Board of Works .

THOMAS A. EDISON

NEW YORK, May 2.—Madam Marie Rappold, Prima Donna Soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Co., is to-day touring the United States for the purpose of proving that her voice cannot be distinguished from Thomas A. Edison's recreation of it Her itineraty includes New York where on April 26th she appeared at Carnegie Hall, Rochester on April 26, Philadelphia on April 27th, Newark on April 28th, Cincinnati on May 1st Chicago on May 4th, Minneapolis on May 5th, St. Paul on May 8th, Birmingham on May 10th, Dallas, San Francisco, Denver and Toronto.

Such a tour as this is unique in the annals of music. Madam Rappold is one of the inventor's most valuable co-workers in his experiments with the human voice in his famous Laboratories at Orange, N J. Her voice is of singular purity such a voice as the wizard has need of in his work on acoustics, and he has made frequent use of it. A few weks ago, before a gathering of music critics, the Prima Donna undertook to sing in unison with a record of her voice, with the astounding result that it was impossible for even trained ears to distinguish between her living and re-created voices.

Edison regards this perfect matching of the human voice as one of his greatest achievements, and said so frankly to some of his friends present at the time of this experiment.

The past season at the Metropolitan has been the most brilliant of Madam Rappold's career. She has sung scores of exacting roles, including Desdemona in "Otello," Leonora in "Il Trovatore," Elsa in "Lohengrin," Elizabeth in "Tannhauser," Eva in "Die Meister-singer," and Freia in "Das Rheingold." Only recently she sang one of the leading roles in German Goetz's operatic version of "The Taming of the Shrew."

Madam Rappold is a Brooklynite. Since she attained prominence in the operatic world she has received many flattering offers from foreign impresarios, but she prefers her own country. Several seasons ago she was decorated by the King of Roumania for the beauty and brilliance of her singing during the opera season in Bucharest. Her voice is a dramatic soprano with a wonderfully appealing quality.

A RESOLUTION OF CONDOLENCE

City Council Mourn the Death of the Late J. R. Stratton

At last night's meeting of the City Council it was moved by Ald. Dobbin and seconded by Ald Weir that the appended resolution of condolence be entered on the minutes of the City Council. The mover of the resolution said he knew the late Hon. J. R. Stratton as a boy and in later years as a competitor in business. His ability and integrity was recognised and his death was Peterborough's loss.

The resolution follows:—

"That this Council views with most sincere regret the death of the late Hon. James Robert Stratton, and expresses, as a public body, its regret at his demise.

"That this Council has a deep sense of appreciation of the long and valued service he had given so cheerfully and untiringly to the aims and objects of this City and District. As a citizen, from the earlier years of his manhood until he was so regrettably afflicted he was a prominent figure in the affairs of our civic life. His ability and energy was ever at the call of movements that made for the advancement of the municipality in civic, industrial and fraternal betterment. His views and convictions in such respect he literally supported in most tangible way.

"Early identified with the political interests of this riding he attained to a first place in the regards of his party, and with energy and gifts that brought recognition rose to the position of a member of the Provncial Government of his time.

"Not only in these activites was he a marked man and in respects above his fellows. Thousands came to know him as a friend and helper, his genial personalities drawing a large and well deserved regard from men of all classes, creeds and places in life. He will be remembered as one who achieved marked success, "not by sudden flight, but he, while others slept, was toiling upward in the night.

"The ranks of Peterborough's most conspicuous men have been depleted by his death ,and it is the wish of the Council that he be remembered as one who was wholly a citizen, who grew in wealth and position and who remained with us to the last.

"That this resolution be entered on the Minutes of the Proceedings of this Council, and that a copy be transmitted to relatives and friends, with a message of condolence and sympathy in the sad event that has deprived them of his presence."

Peterborough, May 1st, 1916.

Y. M. C. A. NEWS

Thirty business men including the Association Directors and Trustees met together in a pleasant function at the Y.M.C.A. Monday noon. Dinner was served by a committee of ladies, after which a surprise was sprung on J. H. Connal a former President of the Y.M.C.A. and for nearly twenty years a member of the Board of Directors. Mr. Connal retired from the Board in January last. President Gillespie who presided called on Mr. Joe Wearing who on behalf of the Board of Directors presented Mr. Connal with an illuminated address. Mr. J. J. Turner, Jr., also a former president of the Association on behalf of the Board presented Mr. Connal with a Bible. Mr. Connal was completely surprised but managed to keep his poise and made a fitting response stating that it is a good form of education for men to serve on the Board of Directors of a Y.M.C.A. and that it had also been a great pleasure for him to serve the young men of the city.

Another item of interest to the men present was an address by George A. Gregg, secretary of the Y.M.C.A., Korea. Mr. Gregg came to Peterborough at the invitation of the local Association to present extension work of the Y.M.C.A. as represented in the work for soldiers, sailors, foreigners railroad men, colored men, Indians and the foreign missionary work of the association. Mr. Gregg's address was of great educational value to the men who had the privilege of listening to him and as a result of his visit it is expected that two or three men will attend the International convention at Cleveland, May 12-16. Mr Gregg emphasized the fact that whatever was accomplished by the Y.M.C.A. in foreign fields or in the great work being done for soldiers reflects credit on the Christian church as the Y.M.C.A. should be considered an arm of the church. He wishes it understood that the Y.M.C.A. was not a rival of the church but a work of the church.

Mr. Gregg's address and the presentation to Mr. Connal both served as an uplift to the men present the former giving a vision of the world possibilities of our work and the latter demonstrating that this can best be accomplished where brotherly love continues at home.

It is a pleasure for the Y.M.C.A. to throw open the men's gymnasium to the girls of the Y.W.C.A. for the closing of their physical work. We can assure the public that it will be well worth their time and money to attend the demonstration of gymnasium work that will be presented by the girls on Tuesday and Thursday evenings of this week. Miss Littlefield has proven herself a capable instructress and the results of her work as seen in this exhibition will surprise many people. Let's encourage the girls with a good big crowd to-night and Thursday.

THE PALE, BLOODLESS YOUNG GIRL

Easily Noticed by Her Blanched Cheeks, Bloodless Lips and Dull Eyes

Perhaps she is sixteen. Suddenly she seems to lose strength. Her beauty fades because her vitality is steadily decreasing. Dark circles appear under the eyes which become lustreless and dull. Her spirits droop, for no girl can be contented and happy in such a condition.

This may be quickly corrected by taking Ferrozone. It supplies what is lacking in the blood, purifies and strengthens it, and keeps it in perfect order. Ferrozone makes plenty of red blood corpuscles that manifest themselves in a healthy ruddy complexion. It aids the stomach to do its work, and creates a natural healthy relish for food.

Every organ of the body is benefited by Ferrozone. It rebuilds the entire system, makes new tissue, strengthens weak flabby muscles makes thin people fat and sick people well.

No case of Anaemia is too chronic for Ferrozone. It may take time, but if persistently used will cure in the end. It will give you a well-developed form, clear complexion, pure breath and will restore the bloom to faded cheeks and color to the lips more quickly than any other remedy.

Every woman who desires a vigorous constitution, and the good looks that come with good health, should take Ferrozone after each meal regularly. It is a wonderful tonic for the brain, the nerves and the blood, and acts also as an efficient but harmless regulator of the menstrual flow. In fact for all diseases peculiar to women and growing girls, Ferrozone has no equal as your druggist can tell you.

Three weeks' treatment costs 50c. or three boxes for $1.25. Sold by druggists and dealers in medicine everywhere.

To make an excellent dishcloth take a piece of mosquito netting, double it and sew around the edges.

HANOVER MOTHER DROWNS IN SAUGEEN

Mrs. Chas. Oppertshauer's Body Not Recovered

Young Lady Companion Witnesses Scene, but Can Give No Aid.

HANOVER, May 1.—A sad drowning accident is reported to have taken place at Metcalfe's bridge, on the Saugeen River, about a mile and a quarter south of here.

Mrs. Charles Oppertshauser, of this town, accompanied by three children and Miss Lobsinger, went there to fish, and while the two older children were at a house near by Mrs. Oppertshauser stepped on a piece of loose sod, which gave way, and caused her to fall into the river.

Unable to render any assistance, Miss Lobsinger, with the baby, ran to a neighbouring house, and, leaving the baby, came to town with the sad news.

Crowd Menaces Man After His Automobile Kills a Boy.

YONKERS, N Y., May 1. — To warn several boys playing in the street, Dr. L. V. Waldron, of No. 27 Radford Street, blew his automobile horn. The blast was so sudden it startled Antonio Karro, four years old, at play in front of his home, at No. 167 Waverly Street, and he ran directly in front of the physician's automobile. He was run over and killed.

This accident caused intense excitement, a large crowd menacing Dr. Waldron and his family, who accompanied him, until the police arrived. Dr. Waldron was arrested, but later paroled by orders of the Coroner pending an investigation.

Potato peelings should be dried in the oven and used for lighting the fires. Less wood will be required.

IMPORTED FURNITURE TAPESTRIES AND DENIMS

It will repay you to get our prices on recovering your upholstered furniture. Make your selection from the large range of English and French coverings now on display in the drapery section.

36-INCH BROCADED DENIMS, 75c

These are carried in an immense range of both solid colours and patterned designs, and most artistic in effect. The solid colours are in a small neat shell pattern, in shades of fawn, brown, green, or blue, and the patterns are copies of French tapestry designs, even to the colourings, which are of rich dull dark shades of most pleasing harmony, such as can be used in any room. Home Furnishing Week 75c

50-INCH TAPESTRIES, $1.25 TO $3.00 Yard

Our showing of medium and better grade tapestries is surprisingly complete, considering the scarcity of such goods. The assortment of French shadow cloths is the largest we have ever shown, in both light and dark grounds. The tapestries, by the rich harmonious colours, demonstrate the skill of the dyers' art. Home Furnishing Week, yard $1.25 to 3.00

The fact that this big annual event takes place this season as usual and with values that will eclipse former events of this nature, speaks volumes for this store. Don't miss this occasion. Now that house cleaning is well under way and you've decided what new furnishings are required, buy them at once, as every day you wait means less to choose from or if sold out and have to be replaced from mill, fully a 50 per cent. advance. COME TO-MORROW!

ARTISTIC HEAVY GRASS RUGS FOR COTTAGE, HOME, AND VERANDA USE

Reversible Grass Rugs, heavy twisted weaves, in plain colours of soft browns or greens. One side plain and other with wide stenciled border in Greek Key, and Conventional designs. These lie perfectly flat on the floor without wrinkling, and require no tacks, stand the hardest wear, and although the price is most inexpensive, last for season after season. Note the large range of sizes these are obtainable in, all of which we have in stock.

FORGED MILITIA CHEQUES USI

Bold and Widespread Scheme in Vogue Toronto

TORONTO, May 1.—Forged Mili Department cheques are in circulati in Toronto, the Detective Departme having been notified of at least ha a dozen cases. The Toronto circul tion i apparently part of bold a widespread scheme, as the passi of similiar cheques have been repo ed almost simultaneously from Mo treal, Ottawa, and Kingston. At t latter place a man by the name Robert Coadkie was arrested wh endeavoring to pass a forged Go ernment cheque for $20. Sever storekeepers on Yonge street ha been the victims, the cheques bei such a perfect imitation of the d partment's soldiers' transportati cheques that the forgery was n discovered until the cheques we put through the banks.

In every case reported in Toron the same man appears to have pa ed the cheques. He was dressed khaki and the storekeepers to who he tendered the cheques never su pected for a moment that they we forgeries. The cheques in every ca reported in Toronto were for $ and were for transportation. D tectives Mulholland and Leavitt ha been working on the case and th latter is inclined to the opinion th the man arrested in Kingston is t one who has been operating in To ronto.

SEEKING FOR PLANT.

It was only by the fake nam used that the forgeries were di covered. Clever operators are ev dently behind the plan and an ex tensive plant must have been use to turn out the forgeries. Th whereabouts of the plant is occupy ing the attention of the Dominio Police and the detective department of the various cities where the cir culation of the forged cheques hav been reported. That a gang is op erating the circulation appears evi dent, as cheques were passed in sev eral cities, many miles apart, at th same time. Until the plant is locat ed, put out of business, the operat ors arrested and their stock con fiscated, it appears that the only way merchants can protect themselve against forgeries is not to accept sup posed department cheques except from people they know.

Puzzle Over Trial of Two Deaf Mutes

PROBLEM OF JURY CONFRONTS CONNECTICUT COUNTY IN FIRST DEGREE MURDER CASE.

New Haven, Conn., May 1.—This county faces the problem of conducting a trial for murder in the first degree where the two accused men are deaf mutes. This follows the arraignment in New York to-day of Joseph Castella and Frank Veteri on a charge of killing Castella's wife in a rooming house here last Sunday. They were held for 48 hours and will be sent here for trial.

Great difficulty in conducting the trial is expected. To overcome the problem of stenographic notes every word may have to be written out as it comes from the witness stand, either in the signs of the deaf and dumb or in written questions and answers.

The authorities must also solve the problem of a jury. It will be very difficult to get a jury understanding the sign language and if there is not such a jury then the questions and answers must be written and read to the jury. But if the are written they also must be translated into the sign language for the benefit of the men on trial.

FIGHT IS ON FOR FORTUNE.

WHEELING, W. Va., May 1—The legal fight for the Henry Schmulbach fortune has been resumed in circuit court here. A score of witnesses testified to incidents during the last year of the millionaire brewer's life which indicated his mental capacity to make a will. To-day witnesses in rebuttal will be introduced by attorneys for Anna Marie Fellers, the complainant.

UTILITY COMMISSION'S GROUNDS ARE WELL ORDERED AND LIGHTED

Only Temporary Quarters For Transformers and Other Property—Mr. Fiske Has Installed a Magnetic Lamp That Lights the Neighbourhood.

The old roughcast house that is serving as a temporary substation for the Utilities Commission is certainly an unimposing building, but it presents the saving quality of neatness which together with the tidiness displayed in the yard gives the property a presentable appearance. This is on the big lot the Commission purchased on Sherbrooke street between Aylmer and Bethune streets. On the northwest corner the Commission has its big transformers in an ancient dwelling that has seen happier if not better days. Old trees that used to shade it have been removed, together with a straggling fence, and the yard has been cleaned up and well ordered, not to mention the paint it has received.

The Commission has a new McLoughlin truck ordered, and its delivery is expected at any time. It was found necessary on account of the bulk of business the Commission has shouldered. Fourteen and fifteen trips a day making repairs and new connections, and attending to various other duties, soon pile up a big livery bill. Hence for economy and celerity the new motor truck was ordered.

Another interesting feature observed around the premises is the magnetite arc lamp erected as an experiment by Mr. H. A. Fiske, superintendent for the Commission. He had an ordinary short pole turned to a diameter to receive the lamp's bracket, erected it, painted it a dark colour, approaching the iron standards on the main streets, and when you see the completed unit light up the neighbourhood at night, you wish that those superfluous standards on George street were distributed about the city. The wooden poles cost about thirty cents compared with the thirty-dollar standards. The figures are not vouched for, but they are near enough. Of course, there is no comparison as to permanency, and general appearance, and none is intended, but the fact remains that Mr. Fiske's experiment conveys an idea of what the city's lighting in the residential districts might be.

Salt thrown on the fire once a day prevents the accumulation of soot in the flues.

MANY OF THE OLDER SCHOOL BOYS CONSIDERING WORK WITH FARMERS

Department of Education Has Offered a Special Encouragement to Those Who Work on Farms For Three Months—Boys May Be of Real Service in Helping to Meet the Scarcity of Help.

Among the older boys of the Collegiate Institute and St. Peter's continuation class there is considerable enthusiasm these days in regard to the prospect of engaging with farmers for summer work. The Department of Education has sanctioned the idea and has offered a special inducement for boys who are accepted by farmers and who work for three months. It is understood that certificates will be given to those who are recommended by their teachers, on the basis of their work during the year, and who may work on a farm from May 12th until August 12th. It is not known how many of the boys are needed or how many will be accepted, but it is believed that many of them are needed and will be able to render a real service.

Bishop O'Brien made an extended reference to the subject on Sunday, urging parents to encourage their boys to assist in this work. He emphasized its patriotic feature and the necessity of the continuance of Canada's production this year. Peterborough is the centre of a large farming country and it is more than likely that the services of many of the boys will be widely availed. To them selves there should be the physical attraction of work in the country, from which they should return with deeper chests and hardier muscles.

Editor, Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Peterborough has every reason to be proud of the young composer, Mr. Asa Huycke, whose new march, "Irresistable," was played in public for the first time last night by the band of the 93rd Battalion. The impression given was that the composition would become a popular march with bands and orchestras everywhere. It is pleasing to know that Mr. Huycke has dedicated this music to the 93rd Battalion, and that it has been adopted as the regimental march. Let this young composer not be without honour in his own country and city. — Respectfully yours,

Music Lover.

Girls in some of the southern states have been giving considerable attention in recent years to the cultivation of small lots, one-tenth of an acre or thereabouts, devoted to tomatoes and garden crops, mostly for canning. The Department of Agriculture are forming canning clubs and planning a four years' practical garden course for girls.

POLICE CONSTABLE IS RETURNING TO MACHINE

A stout limb of the law dropped from the city's administrative tree this morning when P. C. Jas. MacArthur handed in his uniform which he has shed to don the overalls of a machinist. He is returning to his former trade, having secured a position in the C.G.E. He will be missed from the Thompson force.

PRESBYTERIANS AGGRIEVED

Methodists in Majority in Alberta Moral Reform League.

MEDICINE HAT, Alta., April 29.—The Presbyterian Synod passed a resolution deprecating the methods of the Temperance and Moral Reform League of Alberta in forming an executive at the last convention. They declared the methods unworthy of the objects for which the league exists. The resolution is a culmination of the dissatisfaction among Presbyterians throughout the province with the representation accorded the denomination on the executive. It has been alleged that the Methodists secured nine officers out of fourteen, while the Presbyterians obtained only two and later on the general secretary, who was a Presbyterian, was replaced by a Methodist minister.

Boy Weeps As He Testifies That He Saw His Father Beat His Mother

New York, May 2.—Not many boys of fourteen are called upon to undergo the ordeal through which Daniel Clare passed yesterday, pathetically testifying that he had seen his mother beaten and kicked many times, and dragged by her hair, and that he had found her dead.

Little Dan's handkerchief was out all the time he was on the stand in the trial of his father, James J. Clare, owner of the Boulevard Hotel in Long Island City, democratic politician and formerly a prize fighter, on trial on a charge of murder in the Supreme Court, Queens. Frequently the boy's narrative was interrupted until he could recover his composure.

Ten days before his mother was found dead, Daniel testified, she went to her mother's home to recuperate for a week, and then returned to the hotel three days before the tragedy.

"I let Mamma in the day she came back," the boy continued. "Papa went up to see mamma, and then I went upstairs. Papa said to mamma, 'What —you back again?' and he hit her in the face with his fist and knocked her down. He knocked her hat off and kicked her. Mamma went into the bathroom and he went in there and kicked her again. Mother slept that night with me.

DRAGGED BY THE HAIR, HE SAYS.

"On Wednesday night, March 15th, mamma and I went to a moving picture place. We got back about 10 o'clock. Papa told mamma that he was going away in an automobile. Mamma asked him not to go. Papa told her to mind her own d—— business. Papa then gave her some money. I then went up to bed, and mamma came up and slept with me. When papa came home about 6 o'clock he said, 'Give me that money, you bum!' Then he dragged her out of bed. Then he hit her. I got up. Mamma had a kimono on. I was not dressed. Papa had his clothes on. He kept fighting mamma and she ran away from him. He knocked her down several times and then kicked her, and she did not get a chance to get the money, which was in a bureau drawer.

"Then he knocked her down and pulled her along the hall by the hair. Then she got up and ran around the piano to get away from him. Then she came back and got the money. Papa then sat down in a chair. I got mamma up and put her in bed. Then I went to school. When I got home papa was in the saloon, and he said to me, 'Go up and see what your mamma is doing.' I went up and found mamma lying on the floor with no clothes on. I put a blanket over mamma. I went over to my grandma's that night. Grandma did not come over with me. Papa was still down stairs. The next time I went up and found mamma still lying on the floor. I could not put her to bed because she was too heavy. Then I went to the school. When I came home that night papa told me to see how mamma was. She was still lying on the floor. I tried to get her a drink, but she could not take it. I raised her up in my arms, and she fell back dead.

"I went down stairs to tell papa, and he began to rush around and said —'Give her some milk. She took poison. Rub her down, rub her down. Everybody will believe that I did it.' Then papa sent for the ambulance. A man came with the ambulance, looked at mamma and put a blanket over her face."

CLARE TAKES THE STAND

Persistent cross-examination failed to break the boy's story. Mrs. Clare's mother testified that her daughter had sought refuge in her home at least seven times to recover from injuries she said that her husband had inflicted upon her.

The defence opened with several of Clare's relatives testifying that his wife drank excessively, a story denied by the witnesses for the prosecution. Clare then began to testify in his own behalf, saying that his wife drank heavily, and while intoxicated she fell down stairs. He told how good he had been to her. The trial will continue to-day.

Tennis Association Secures The Bowling Green Courts For Summer

Will Keep Them In the Best of Condition and Expects That Membership Will Be Large.

The Peterborough Lawn Tennis Association last night arranged to take over the Bowling Green courts for the summer, and intends to make them a prominent centre for local players. The grounds are among the best in the city and will be kept in good condition by a groundsman. The fee has been fixed at $3 for the season with $1.50 limited tickets for ladies. These permit the use of the grounds until 6 p.m. If ladies wish they can obtain regular tickets given them the complete privileges. Information and tickets may be obtained from G. R. Langley, C. B. Adair, E. Walter, Geo. Roper at the Y.M.C.A., F. C. Weber, J. E. Smith and B. S. Thompson of Farm and Dairy. It is expected that a large number of tennis enthusiasts will take advantage of the Association's grounds, centrally located, fast, and in every respect a desirable set of courts.

MILITARY NEWS

a few days about the 20th expect we will be in the firing line when this reaches you so it will be "up the line with the best of luck" and we trust to kind of make old Fritz sit up and take notice as we are called the Fighting Fourty-Fourth (our old Battalion from Winnipeg) so we have to show them something new.—J.T.H.

The 116th Ontario County Battalion was the recipient of a field kitchen and a set of double artillery harness presented by Beal Bros., Limited, Toronto.

The presentation was made by Norman R. Beal, ex-Mayor and former resident of Uxbridge, in the presence of a great concourse of people. Lieut.-Col Sam Sharpe, M.P., accepted the gift in a few suitable words.

The Ontario County Battalion is being well equipped by the citizens of the county. The ladies of Uxbridge are presenting another field kitchen to the battalion, the ladies of Beaverton are giving a motor truck, and the teachers and pupils of the county are presenting a motor ambulance. The McLaughlin Carriage Company gave the battalion $500 cash, and the Chevrolet Motor Car Company gave a five passenger car. The following cash donations have been received in addition to those already acknowledged.

Town of Port Perry	$200
Robson Manufacturing Co., Oshawa	250
Charles Meyer, Atherly	100
R. S. Hudson, Toronto	100
Ex-Mayor R. J. Fleming, Toronto	5

The following was composed by a Peterborough boy, members of the 33rd Battery, while in quarantine for measles at Shorncliffe, England:

"Quarantine Poem, the Measley "23"

Here we are like a bunch of 'Huns,'
Imprisoned in gun-shed number three;
We're carefully guarded every one,
For we are the measley twenty-three.

You're asking us how we came by our name,
An explanation, we plainly see
You all want to know how it is we beam
The artillery measley twenty-three.

One day there happened a pal of ours
To wish for a rest so naturally he Promptly contraced the "measles" of course,
Which resulted in quarantining twenty-three.

The day the ambulance carted him off,
The "draft" discretely decided to flee
Our number was formerly thirty-five
But now it's a measley twenty-three.

But we should worry, we rip and tear
All over the "joint" for we are free
To play the "deuce" and the devil we care
As we are the measley twenty-three

Up at the Reville? Well I guess not!
We jump when we smell our bacon and tea
By hitting the floor before eight o'clock,
It's joke for the measley twenty-three.

It's nix on the orderly officer's call,
With his daily inspection we always agree.
Sure! He mustn't enter our quarters at all!
For we are the measley twenty-three.

Our guard of course is a real good scout,
At his post of duty he always must be
His back is turned when we want to go out,
The reckless and fearless twenty-three.

Our tables are e'er in legitimate use
With "banker," the limit is twopence or three,
Or "poker" or "fan-tan," the ace or the deuce,
A little of each, does for our twenty-three.

At night our "shin-beat,' it has to be canned
The missiles are flying as thick as they can,
A battle is waged by the wild twenty-three.

It's not so unpleasant to be quarantined
When it's raining outside and every chap well,
But when it comes fine and the other boys free,
A three weeks' detention, it's not quite so swell.

The Paymaster's Department.

Last month the paymaster of the 93rd Battalion checked out over fifty thousand dollars. This is the pay-sheet of the officers and soldiers only and has nothing to do with supplies of food, etc. The pay of a full battalion is about six hundred thousand dollars a year and the paymaster of the 93rd, Capt. Burnham, is personally responsible for every dollar. The administration of a battalion pay office is quite interesting. The pay officer has the right to choose his own pay sergeant and clerks, because if he is to be held responsible for all the money he must have the right to choose his own men. The local office is well equipped in that particular, and Sergt. Abraham, a veteran of the Egyptian wars, is head of the office staff which, including himself, numbers five besides the paymaster. There is a great deal of work in a battalion pay office and it must be done right or the expert inspectors at headquarters will want to know why. Nothing escapes them. The pay sheets are a loose leaf ledger with two pages of columns containing the accounts of each member of the battalion in detail, all his credits and debits. Every pay-day sees a number of men who want to know how their account stand and they visit the pay office and have all details explained to them. The issues of the quartermaster and to some extent what is known as the "regimental fund," go through the Battalion pay office. Assigned pay, separation allowances, subsistence money, billeting accounts, payments for clothing, etc., by the men for issues made to them before the regular time is up, fines, etc., go to make up a pretty stiff procedure. The pay office keeps the battalion's accounts with the government and the accounts of the government with the officers and men of the battalion. As the pay master is personally responsible for every dollar it is a position of considerable anxiety. A wrong payment, illegal or otherwise, must be made good by him. No excuse is taken. The government places fifty or sixty thousand dollars to Capt. Burnham's credit every month and as it is paid out in small sums and must be strictly accounted for to the inspectors at headquarters, it is a big task. Like every other kind of business the part of the supervisor or foreman of the job is an important one. If a business has a good staff and is set running right and kept that way for a while it only requires watching and oiling after that, although the responsibility is there all the time. The paymaster is in constant touch with his office here and returns twice a month for pay day. He is required to certify personally that each soldier has been personally paid and has signed a receipt. In the old day of the militia and also of the regulars the captains did the paying and it was in cash, but this did not work at all, and nowadays the regulars on active service has the new plan instead. Peterborough will miss the battalion when it goes to Barriefield, but the eye of the people is on the war and not on the profit to be derived from it, except perhaps in a few cases. The battalion is paraded twice a month for pay-day and the men are arranged in alphabetical order, their names being called out rapidly by the N.C.O's. The full staff of the pay office is present and as some of the men are on guard duty or other duty it is necessary to be on the alert and to remember where each cheque not at first called for has been put in reserve. As everything must be done at top speed the least confusion produces still further confusion. The officer and staff of the battalion work together without a hitch, and smoothness is the prime essential of efficiency. Inquiries are often made at the pay office by the wives and families of soldiers, and there is a large daily correspondence with Kingston and Ottawa respecting the financial and military affairs of soldiers at the front and their families at home. Capt. Burnham's presence at Ottawa facilitates much of the latter branch of the work. If the "casual observer" and critic knew the immense amount of responsible work to be done in connection with the war and the ceaseless preparation required to get ready to go to the front, they would cease their criticism and lend a hand. An enemy at home is worse than two at the front.

The following letter has been sent by the officers of the 93rd Battalion to C. A. L. Humphries, Esq., and the members of Captain Birdsall Reception Committee.

Dear Sirs,—The officers of the 93rd Battalion wish to put on record their sincere appreciation of the kindness and hospitality extended by the members of your committee and the citizens of Asphodel generally to the band and other representatives of the Battalion during their recent visit to Westwood on the occasion of the reception to Captain Francis Everett Birdsall, 2nd Battalion, C.E.F. We desire to assure you that officers and men deeply appreciate the courtesy with which they were welcomed and the many acts of kindness done on their behalf by the hospitable people of Asphodel. Trusting that you will acquaint the members of your committee with our feelings in this respect.

Mr. McGregor Smith of the Peterborough Machine and Lubricating Co., who has joined the overseas forces, was presented with a wrist watch by his fellow employees of that company. The following address, read by Miss Brayley, accompanied the presentation:

Mr. McGregor Smith—

Dear Sir,—We, the employees of the Peterborough Machine and Lubricating Co., hearing you have responded to the call for volunteers and joined the battery expecting shortly to go overseas, are desirous of conveying to you our good wishes, and ask you to accept this wrist watch as a slight remembrance of the boys you leave behind. We shall miss you and often think of you, and sincerely trust you may be spared to return home in safety, having done your bit for "King and country." (Signed),

C. R. BANKS, CHARLOTTE STREET is agent for the MASSEY BICYCLE in Peterborough, and would advise intending Bicycle buyers, to inspect this Bicycle before purchasing.

Capt. Melville M. Robinson of the 86th Machine Gun Battalion, Hamilton, was in the city yesterday for a few hours. He came to Peterborough to say good-bye to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Robinson, Westcott street, prior to going overseas.

Mr. Russell Patterson is home from Egypt, where he was on the staff of No. 5 Canadian Hospital at Cairo. He enlisted while a medical student at Queen's University Kingston, and expects to return shortly. With a number of other students he was given his discharge, in order to finish his course.

The many friends of Pte. W. H. Saxby, 21st Battalion, will be glad to learn that his parents have received a communication from the Red Cross Society informing them that his condition is satisfactory.

Armourer Sergt. F. Howarth of the 40th Battalion, Belleville, is home on leave. He was a visitor at the Armouries this morning.

Several members of the 123rd Battalion, Toronto, caused a disturbance at the Collegiate Institute today, by invading the building and paying attention to some of the girls. They were placed under arrest by the military police of the 93rd Battalion.

Arrangements have been completed for the mobilization of the 93rd Battalion here to-morrow and Thursday. The Havelock and Norwood platoons D company, will have their farewell send-off at Norwood to-night, and leave Norwood armouries at 8 o'clock to-morrow morning for their march to Peterborough. The detachments will have dinner at Jermyn P.O., the meal being provided by the battalion quartermaster. At 1.30 o'clock A and B companies and the local detachments of C and D companies will march out from the local armouries, meeting the Havelock and Norwood platoons at Shearer P.O., seven and a half miles out, and escort them into the city. On Thursday the Lakefield and Apsley platoons will leave Lakefield at 1 o'clock and the battalion will leave here at 2 o'clock, meeting the northerners at Nassau. In connection with the mobilization the following orders have been issued:

Reports:

Reports will be sent to Headquarters, Peterborough.

J. E. R. MUNRO, Captain
Adjutant 93rd O. S. Battalion, C. E. F.

Mrs. F. Wise has received the following letter from her son, Signaller F. E. Wise of the 19th Battalion, reported wounded several weeks ago:

38 Manor Road,
Folkestone, Kent,
April 16,

Darling Mother,—So your boy has been able to stop a piece of German iron at last, but luckily I am not seriously wounded and by the time you receive this letter I will be out of bed again and about. Perhaps you would like to know where I have been in France, so I will try and tell you a few of the places I have been. When I left Havre which was the place where we landed, we had a 30 hours' ride by train to Bailleul. From there we had a nice march over cobble stoned roads, through Lochre to Clayte. We stayed at Clayte all night and next morning went up to Veirstraat, which is a village a few hundred yards behind the first line trench. We occupied the Vierstraat trenches for quite a time. Then we were shifted to St. Eloi, just a little to the right of Ypres. It was up there that I got wounded.

We left our billets at 6.30 p.m. to start for St. Eloi and arrived at Voormezel about 9.30. We waited there until about 11 p.m. and then went on through many weary miles of trenches, mud and whistling bullets. From all sides the star shells were shooting, very prettily illuminating the waste land and sand bags of which there is no end. At last about 3.30 a.m. we arrived at our destination, which was a trench thigh deep with mud, and here we were supposed to stand for 48 hours. A couple of us, however, managed to get out on a fairly dry spot on our bay.

In the meantime shells and shrapnel were bursting around and kept us quite busy bobbing our heads down. We were all wet and cold, and just about done out as we had had no sleep for the last forty-eight hours and we were looking forward to another 48 hours without sleep. At last, however I, not being on duty, fell asleep on the firing step, and woke up at daybreak, nearly frozen. After we had munched a bit of bread and jam I dozed off again for a couple of hours and woke up about 9 o'clock and began to scrape the mud off my clothes and to wipe my cold, wet feet to get circulation in them. The other fellow was standing up scraping the mud off. About three feet away from Fritz, had been tossing some 18 lb. high explosive shells, about 50 feet behind us, and all of a sudden he shortened up and planted one right in our parapet not six feet away from me and about 3 feet away from the other fellow.

It took his head clean off and blew him pretty well all to pieces, while I only got a few chips in the arm and face and a piece about half an inch square through the fleshy part of my breast. Of course it was a narrow shave and I can only thank God that I am here to-day. I walked 4 miles to a dressing station and from there was taken by ambulance to the train, which took me to Etaples. From there I went to England and am quite comfortable and well fed here."

The Taylor family of Chemong Indian Village hold the family record in the 93rd Battalion. They made sure of it this morning when Isaac Taylor joined the local battalion. He is the fifth brother to become a member of the Peterborough unit, which now contains nearly half a hundred sets of brothers.

A Peterborough member of the 80th Battalion, Belleville, and two members of the 123rd Battalion, Toronto, are in detention at the local Armouries, charged with being absent without leave from their respective units.

GERMAN PRISONERS ESCAPE.

Six Get Away From Detention Camp at Lethbridge.

Lethbridge, Alta., May 1.—Six German prisoners have made a sensational escape from the detention camp here, tunneling a passage four and a half feet underground and 110 feet long leading from the bunk house under the compound fence to the centre of the city nurseries adjoining the camp. No trace of their whereabouts has yet been received. The prisoners used implements stolen from the kitchen in the work of tunneling, used a mine fan made by one of them for supplying them with air while tunneling and made candles out of grease and tallow. Each man who escaped carried a knapsack with provisions saved from the daily meals or stolen from the kitchen.

Some More Convincing Evidence

If more evidence were needed to demonstrate the exceptional value of the total abstainer as an insurance risk than what has already been published by this Company, it is found in the following Table covering the experience in the two Departments of the Company for the period of ten years.

Year	PER CENT OF EXPECTED LOSS
	Abstainer	General
1905	36.95 per cent	74.23 per cent
1907	37.31 per cent	69.15 per cent
1909	53.50 per cent	68.45 per cent
1911	46.07 per cent	77.89 per cent
1913	40.42 per cent	61.94 per cent
1914	41.83 per cent	71.63 per cent
Average for Last 10 Years	70.68 per cent	64.19 per cent

Why not reap the advantages of Total abstinence by insuring in a Company which grants the special terms and rates which the above Table clearly shows are deserved by those who classify for insurance in this Dept?

WEDDING BELLS

O'BRIEN—McCAULEY.

A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at St. Peter's Cathedral, this morning, at 7 o'clock, when Mr. Leo. O'Brien and Miss Jean McCauley were united in the holy bonds of matrimony by Rev. Father Phelan. After the wedding ceremony the happy couple drove to the home of Mrs. Twomey, the bride's Godmother, where a sumptuous wedding breakfast was served.

Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien left on the 8 o'clock train for Campbellford. The presents to the bridge were numerous and costly and testified to the high esteem in which the young couple are held.

On their return they will reside in Peterborough.

OBITUARY

JOHN AUSTIN.

The death occurred Saturday morning, at 1 o'clock, at his late residence, Fenelon Falls, of Mr. John Austin, the well known lumberman, and one of the most prominent citizens of the county. The deceased has been in ill health for some time, and the news of his demise will be received with regret by a host of friends and acquaintances in Peterborough. The late Mr. Austin was prominent for a great many years in lumbering operations in the north country, his mills at Kinmount giving employ to a large number of men. He was a whole souled, public-spirited citizen, was at one time warden of the county, and a stalwart Liberal in politics, having at one time successfully contested North Victoria in the Liberal interests, his opponent being Mr. J. H. Carnegie, ex-M.L.A., now of Toronto.

FRANK J. KELLY

With feelings of genuine regret and sorrow it was learned this morning that Mr. Frank J. Kelly, late of the Fire Department, had passed away. He had been in ill health for the past two months, his death occurring this morning at his late residence, 273 Simcoe Street, about 1 o'clock.

The deceased was forty-two years of age. He was born in Ireland, but had lived in Peterborough for twenty two years. He was married fifteen years ago, the tenth of this month. The late Mr. Kelly had been a member of the Fire Department for the past few years. His genial, kindly manner won for him many friends, who keenly feel his loss. He was a member of St. John's Anglican Church and also of the I.O.O.F., and of the Canadian Order of Foresters.

He is survived by his wife and two children, Frank and Madeline; also his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Kelly, Oshawa, and two brothers, David of Detroit and James in Indianna.

His only sister passed away two weeks ago.

The funeral will take place on Thursday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, from the family residence, 273 Simcoe Street, to the Little Lake Cemetery.

LEAVE FOR OTTAWA

The numerous friends of Mr. and Mrs. C. Kerr Stewart, of 645 Aylmer Street, will learn with regret of their departure to-night for Ottawa, Mr. Stewart having severed his connection with the business office of The Daily Review to accept a lucrative position in Ottawa.

Mrs. Stewart will be greatly missed by the musical fraternity of Peterborough, as during her residence here, she has won much popularity through her pleasing contralto voice. She has been a member of St. Paul's Church choir and The Morning Musicale Society, and during April was soloist at Trinity Methodist Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Stewart will take to Ottawa the warmest good wishes of their many friends and acquaintances.

Closer Trade Relations Between Persia And America Is Urged

Obstacles Between America and Tsar's Country Overcome ---Increase Hitherto Insignificant Exports to United States

PETROGRAD, via London, May 3.—In welcoming the new American Ambassador, Mr. David R. Francis, the Bourse Gazette speaks of the necessity of closer commercial relations between Russia and the United States and the newly awakened progressive spirit in Russia which has overcome obstacles to a satisfactory understanding between the two countries.

"No traces are left of the misunderstanding caused by the United States abrogating the commercial treaty," says the newspaper, "and the new Ambassador will meet no prejudices in the way of a rapprochement. It is only necessary that the impulse for a closer understanding should not meet artificial obstacles, which once so vexatiously overshadowed the relations with America.

"It would be a great mistake to suppose that the increased trade with America is of only a temporary character. To replace German products in Russia by means of home manufactures will take a long time, during which it would naturally be better that the productivity of Russian agriculture should be increased by American agricultural machines than that it should remain at the former lower level. Our only care should be that the increased American exports should not have an unfavourable effect on our balance of trade. In other words, we should look as quickly as possible for a means to increase our hitherto insignificant exports to the United States."

What Does Your Food Cost? You could easily spend two dollars for a meal and not get as much real, body-building nutriment as you get in two Shredded Wheat Biscuits, the food that contains all the muscle-making material in the whole wheat grain prepared in a digestible form. Two Shredded Wheat Biscuits with milk or cream will make a complete, perfect meal at a cost of not over five cents. A food for youngsters and grown-ups. Eat it for breakfast with milk or cream; eat it for luncheon with fresh berries or other fruits; a perfect meal for the Spring days.

PRAYERS OF HARLEM BOY SAID TO HEAL THOUSANDS

THOUSANDS APPEAL TO NINE-YEAR-OLD BOY FOR AID AND ARE RESTORED.

New York, May 3.—Harlem has been much interested in recent reports of the recovery of persons who were ill following the prayers of nine year old John Edward McDonnell, son of James and Eleanor McDonnell, son 337 East One Hundred and Twenty-third street, says the New York Times. It is said that within the last five years more than 1000 persons have asked the boy to pray for them. Every day the family receives many letters pleading for prayers. When stamps are enclosed the letters are answered, but Johnnie prays in any event. Money has sometimes been offered but never accepted though the McDonnels are poor.

The boy began to exercise his supposed power when he was three years old. The family then lived at Derby, Conn., and then as now, the father was a waiter. He had been out of work, and one day little Johnnie said that he felt that his father would get a job within three days, and that he was going to pray for it. Within three days the father got work, and after that the boy took up praying for sick and troubled friends of the family. He had acquired something of a local reputation in Connecticut before the family moved to New York, some 4 years ago, and has expanded since then. Two years ago he says he had a vision of Christ, in which he himself figured as a priest carrying a crucifix. The boy hopes to study for the priesthood. He is at present a student in public school No. 30, at Second avenue, and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, and attends the Church of the Holy Rosary in East One Hundred and Nineteenth street.

London, May 3.—Zeppelins raid the Scotch and Yorkshire coasts. A few bombs were dropped. The damage is unknown.

London, May 3.—It is reported that Augustine Birrell has resigned the chief secretaryship for Ireland; other resignations are rumoured.

London, May 3.—Several Canadians have been decorated for gallant service including Lt.-Col. H. G. Reid, formerly of Kingston.

London, May 3.—An exchange of the sick and wounded had been arranged for with the Turkish commander in chief at Mesopotamia.

THE OUTCAST

Since creation's first beginning,
From a prehistoric time,
In the record book of sinning
Was inscribed one heinous crime!
Murderers have been forgven,
Forgers started life anew,
Thieves, by penance, have been shriven,
E'en have traitors proven true!
But of shame there is a limit—
Charity herself would spurn
A depravity so grim it—
Would make Pity loathing, turn!
Far too kind is Satan's laughter
And his courts are over-cold,
In the August of hereafter,
For the Man Who Kissed and Told!

STOMACH TROUBLES

Digestion is largely a mechanical process. When there are stomach troubles there is usually a weakness of the muscles upon which digestion so largely depends. To strengthen these muscles and overcome stomach troubles our druggists McDermid and Jury, and E. L. Payne guarantee Vinol, a reliable non-secret remedy, which contains iron to purify and enrich the blood, the medicinal extractives of fresh cod livers without oil, and the nourishing properties of beef peptone, all combined in a delicious native wine. If you are suffering from stomach trouble, it will pay you to try it.

UNITED STATES IS BECOMING MOTORIZED

ONE MACHINE TO EVERY 285 OF THE POPULATION IS THE RECORD.

That the United States should in the year 1916 have in operation 3,500,000 automobiles and should sell to its own people and to foreigners 1,950,000 of these machines within the year, is something that no human being could have foreseen 10 years ago. In the year 1906, which does not seem so long ago, except from the motor car point of view, the United States produced 23,000 motor vehicles. In the period between 1906 and 1916 the motor car has taken possession of the world, and if a report just made to the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce is to be accepted as accurate there will be at the end of the year an automobile to every 285 of our people. Not enough to carry them all at once but surely enough to redeem the motor vehicle from the imputation of being exclusively a rich man's means of transportation. The motor vehicle, looked upon in 1906 as [illegible] has become in one way or another a convenience to everybody and has added immensely to the wealth of the nation.

Havelock's "Clean-up and Brighten Up" Campaign On All This Week

United Effort to Beautify the Village---Prizes For Best Kept Flower Beds---St. John's Church Vestry Meeting

HAVELOCK, May 3.—Havelock's "clean up and and brighten-up" campaign, set for all of this week, with a public holiday on Arbor Day, received the heartiest encouragement at the hands of our citizens on the occasion of the big public meeting on Wednesday night, April 19th, which was held in the town hall. A parade consisting of the school children carrying banners, paraded the principal streets in the afternoon announcing the event. Chairman Reeve Fennell, T. P. Lancaster, Rev. C. W. De Mille, Rev. Jas. Skene, W. J. Brown and I. Barlow were the speakers for the evening, and they all emphasized strongly the value of the campaign as an exposition of cleanliness.

Mr. Brown offered a prize of $5.00 to the boy or girl having the best flower bed. The prize will be supplemented by a second and third prize of $3.00 and $2.00 respectively.

The clean-up campaign started on Monday, May 1st, and up to Friday everyone is asked to make all the improvements possible on and about their homes and places of business. On Friday (Arbor Day) the public holiday, tree planting and street cleaning will be the order of the day by all the citizens, and vacant lots may also receive special attention.

The Wednesday night meeting was enlivened by the splendid presentation by about twenty-five small school children, of a one-act play, entitled, "Civic Friends and Foes," in which Havelock ebset by flies, waste paper, fire, soot, microbes, sickness, dirt, etc., is rescued from that state of affairs by cleanliness, soap, water, fly swatter, paint, scrub brush, fire prevention and flowers. The youngsters did exceedingly well, and ten wee winsome flowers were especially worthy of mention. A series of slides were also shown, illustrating the "before and after" effect of a clean-up campaign.

A collection was taken up to go towards the expenses of the campaign and a snug sum contributed.

How You May Throw Away Your Glasses

The statement is made that thousands wear eyeglasses who do not really need them. If you are one of these unfortunates, then these glasses may be ruining your eyes instead of helping them. Thousands who wear these "windows" may prove for themselves that they can dispense with glasses if they will get the following prescription filled at once: Go to any active drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto tablets. Dissolve one Bon-Opto tablet in ¼ glass of water. With this harmless liquid solution bathe the eyes two to four times daily, and you are likely to be astonished at the results right from the start. Many who have been told that they have astigmatism, eye-strain, cataract, sore eyelids, weak eyes, conjunctivitis and other eye disorders, report wonderful benefits from the use of this prescription. Get this prescription filled and use it; you may at least strengthen your eyes that glasses will not be necessary. Thousands who are blind, or nearly so, or who wear glasses might never have required them if they had cared for their eyes in time. Save your eyes before it is too late! Do not become one of these victims of neglect. Eyeglasses are only like crutches and every few years they must be changed to fit the ever-increasing weakened condition, as better one if you can, like many others, get clear, healthy, strong magnetic eyes through the prescription here given. The Valmas Drug Co., of Toronto, will fill the above prescription by mail, if your druggist cannot.

"As a preventive, City Physician to whom the above article was brought, said: "Bon-Opto is a very remarkable remedy. Its constituents ingredients are well known to me, are good from any point of view, and I can recommend it to those who suffer from any form of eye trouble. I feel sure it will do all that is claimed for it." I feel safe in saying that it can be used for regular use in almost every family."

The Warren Drug Co., fills many Bon-Opto prescriptions and will gladly fill yours.

Glass of Hot Water Before Breakfast a Splendid Habit

Open sluices of the system each morning and wash away the poisonous, stagnant matter.

Those of us who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when we arise, suffering headache, stuffy from cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, lame back, can, instead, look and feel as fresh as a daisy always by washing the poisons and toxins from the body with phosphated hot water each morning.

We should drink, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water, with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to flush from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract before putting more food into the stomach.

The action of limestone phosphate and hot water on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast and it is said to be but a little while until the roses begin to appear in the cheeks. A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will cost very little at the drug store, but is sufficient to make anyone who is bothered with biliousness, constipation, stomach trouble or rheumatism a real enthusiast on the subject of internal sanitation. Try it and you are assured that you will look better and feel better in every way shortly.

OUR SERIAL STORY

"THE HARBOUR OF DOUBT"

BY FRANK WILLIAMS

Nellie's tears disappeared not to return. She shook her head.

"No, ma," she said; "my conscience is just like them children — sleeping so hard it would take Gabriel's trumpet to make 'em up. It's more tired than I am."

"All right," said ma, with finality; "we will now proceed to refresh ourselves."

It was two o'clock before they separated for the remainder of the night.

Code's room, with its big mahogany double bed, was given over to Nellie and the children while he gladly resigned himself to the humpy plush sofa.

By this time they had received news from half a dozen neighbours that Bill Boughton's general store had been only half destroyed and that the contents had all been saved. The wharfs and fish-houses were at last burning and property on the leeward side of the flames was declared to be safe.

A general exodus began along the King's Road.

Men who had galloped up from Great Harbor, with an ax in one hand and a bucket in the other, mounted their horses and rode away. Others from Hayward's Cove and Castalia, who had driven in buggies and buckboards, collected their families and departed. The King's Road was the scene of a long procession, as though the people of Freekirk Head were evacuating the town.

A detachment of men under Squire Hardy's orders remained about the danger-zone ready to check any further advance of the flames or to rouse the town to further resistance should this become necessary. But for the most part the people of the village returned to their homes.

Wide-awake and nervous, Schofield lay open-eyed upon the couch while unbidden thoughts raced through his brain.

The very fact of his sleeping on the plush couch was enough to bring to his mind the memory of one whom he had irretrievably lost on this memorable night. Was she not at this moment under his own roof, miserable and nearly destitute? He knew that, as long as he might live, his humble room up-stairs would never be the same again.

It had been made a place sweet and full of wonder by the very fact that she was in it. Never again, he knew, could he enter it without its being faintly fragrant of her who, all his life, he had considered the divinest created thing on earth. By her presence she had santified it and made of it a shrine for his meditative and wakeful hours.

Ever since they had gone to school together, hand in hand, the names of Nellie Tanner and Code Schofield had been linked in the mouths of Grande Mignon busybodies. Living all their lives two doors away, they had grown up in that careless intimacy of constant association that is unconscious of its own power until such intimacy is removed.

To-night the shock had come.

It was not that Code had taken for granted that Nellie would marry him. Never in his life had he told her that he loved her. It is not the habit of men who rove the seas to keep those they love constantly supplied with literature or confectionery, or to waste too many words in the language of devotion.

He admitted frankly to himself that he had always hoped to marry her when he had acquired the quarter interest in Bill Boughton's fish-stand that had been promised him, but he had not told her so, nor did he know that she would accept him. The idea had been one to be thought of only at times of quietness and confidence in his future such as come to every man.

But he had not reckoned on Nat Burns. He had not realized quite to what an extent Burns had made progress. He recalled, now that it was brought forcibly home to him, that Nat had been constantly at the Tanners' for the last four or five months. But Code had thought nothing of this, for Nat had paid similar court at times to others of the girls of Freekirk Head. He was, in fact, considered the village beau.

And Nellie herself had told him nothing. There had been a modest shyness about her in their relations that had kept him at an exasperating and piquant distance.

Well, everything was over now, he told himself. He could take his defeat since Nellie did not care for him.

Then he suddenly recalled Burns's actions and manner of speaking during the harrowing moments of the fire.

"I wonder if Nat really loves her?" he asked himself. "And if not, why did he become engaged?"

CHAPTER V.
Startling News.

The home-coming of Captain Bijonah Tanner and his wife did not provide the thrill looked for by the more morbid inhabitants of Freekirk Head. In the excitement of the fire all hands had forgotten that cable communication between Mignon and the mainland was unbroken.

The operator, in the pursuance of his duty, had sent word of the fire to Eastport, and then concocted some cable despatches for Boston and Portland papers that left nothing to be desired from the viewpoint of sensationalism. In his zeal of filling space and eking out his slender income, the operator left nothing standing on Grande Mignon except the eternal rocks and the lighthouse.

It was such an account that Bijonah Tanner fed upon that morning in the tiny cabin of the Rosan, and half an hour after he had read it he was under way. Special mention had been made of Code Schofield's rescue of little Bige, with a sentence added that the Tanner place had been wiped out.

With their minds filled with desperate scenes of cataclysm and ruin, the Tanners raced the complaining Rosan around Flag Point six hours later, only to fall upon one another and dance for joy at the sight of the village nestling as of yore against the green mountains and gleaming white in the descending sun.

An acrid smell and a smudge of smoke told of what had really been, and a black heap of ruins where the familiar house had stood for so long confirmed their fears for their own property; but to see the village content and smiling, except for a poor building or two, was joy enough to overbalance the personal loss.

So those who expected a tearful and emotional home-coming were disappointed.

Code met the dory that rowed ashore after Bijonah had made fast to his mooring in the little cove that was the roadstead for the fishing fleet. He had half expected to share the duty with Nat Burns since the recent change in his relations to the Tanners, but Burns did not put in an appearance, although it was three o'clock in the afternoon.

Bijonah shook hands with him, and Ma Tanner kissed him, the latter ceremony being a baptism of happy tears that all wer safe and alive. Bijonah cleared his voice and pulled hard at his beard.

"Understand you're quite a hero, Code," he ventured gruffly, careful to conceal any emotion, but resolved to give the occasion its due.

"Oh, rot, captain!" said Code equally bluffly, and the ceremony was over.

But not so with Ma Tanner. She wept and laughed over the safety of her offspring, and called him so many exalting names that he was glad to turn her over to Nellie and his mother at the Schofield gate.

Hot and flushed with the notoriety she had given him along the main road, he retired to the corner shop and drank wonderful cold ginger-beer out of a white stone jug until his temperature had returned to normal.

But later he returned to the house, and found the Tanners about to depart. The widow Sprague, near the Odd Fellows' Hall, who lived, as she expressed it, "all deserted and alone," had agreed to take the family into her rambling cottage. Luke Fraser had brought his truck-cart up alongside the rescued Tanner belongings, and they were already half loaded.

"Can you come down to the widdy's to-night Code?" asked Bijonah. "I've got somethin' to tell ye that ought to int'rest ye consid'able."

"Yes, I'll be there about eight," was the reply as Schofield joined in loading the truck.

He found the captain that night smoking a pipe on the low front porch of the Widow Sprague's cottage, evidently very much at home. Bijonah motioned him to a chair and proffered a cigar with a slightly self-conscious air. Inside the house, Code could hear the sound of people moving about and the voice of a woman singing low, as though to a child. He told himself without question that this was Nellie getting the kiddies to sleep.

"A feller hears queer things over in St. John's sometimes," announced Bijonah suddenly, sucking at his pipe.

"Yes."

"An' this time I heard somethin' about you."

"Me? I don't know three people in St. John's."

"Guess I met one of the three, then."

"Where? How? Who was it?"

Bijonah Tanner coughed and shifted uneasily in his chair.

"Wal," he said, "I was takin' a little turn along the water-front, just a leetle turn, as the wife will tell you, when I dropped into a — er — that is — a rum-shop and heard three men at the table next to mine talking about you."

Schofield smiled broadly in the darkness. Bijonah's little turns along the water-front of St. John's or any other port had been the subject for much prayer and supplication in the hearts of many devout persons thoroughly interested in their neighbour's welfare. And of late years Ma Tanner had been making tripa with him to supply stimulus to his conscience.

"What were they talking about?" So far from being suspicious, Code was merely idly curious of the gossip about him.

"My boy," said Tanner, suddenly grave, "I was the best friend your father had for forty years, and I'm goin' to try and be as good a friend to his son. But you mustn't mind what I tell ye."

"I won't, captain. Go ahead," said Code, his interest awakening.

"Wal, them men was talkin' about the loss of the old May Schofield, and one of 'em in particular allowed as how he didn't think it should have foundered when it did. What d'ye think of that?"

RECOVERY OF NEW JERSEY WOMAN

Due To Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Bridgeton, N.J.—"I cannot speak too highly of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for inflammation and other weaknesses. I was very irregular and would have terrible pains so that I could hardly take a step. Sometimes I would be so miserable that I could not sweep a room. I doctored part of the time but felt no change. I later took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and felt a change for the better after the second day. I took it until I was in a good healthy condition. I recommend the Pinkham remedies to all women as I have used them with good results."—Mrs. MILFORD T. CUMMINGS, 34 New Street, Bridgeton, N. J.

Such testimony should be accepted by all women as convincing evidence of the excellence of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as a remedy for the distressing ills of women such as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, backache, painful periods, nervousness and kindred ailments.

Avoid Harsh Pills! Doctors Condemn Them

Most Pills unfortunately are harsh and drastic; they cause inflammation and great discomfort. Rather like nature is the way a pill should act, mildly but effectively. Science has established nothing more satisfactory as a family pill than the old reliable pills of Dr. Hamilton's, which for forty years have had a premier place in America. Dr. Hamilton's Pills are very mild and can be effectively used by the aged, by children, and indeed by men and women of all ages. No stomach or bowel medicine is more reliable. No remedy for indigestion, headache or biliousness is so effective, so mild, so certain to quickly cure as a 25c box of Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

WAR BREVITIES.

Athens.—A large German powder factory at Dedegatch blown up, says a Saloniki despatch. The explosion kills many, among them a grandson of Premier Radoslavoff of Bulgaria.

Athens.—Losses by the Bulgarian army during the war is estimated by Bulgarian newspapers at 87,000 killed, 50,000 wounded or missing.

London.—Owing to the difficulty in procuring American wheat, bakers in Holland ordered to sell war bread, says an Exchange Telegraph despatch.

Berlin. — A Copenhagen despatch states a British warship halted the Danish steamer Gulfoss and took off mail and baggage.

Suffered No End of Pain FROM BACKACHES.

If a pain attacks you in the back you should stop and think what it is and what causes it.

If the kidneys are at fault—and in nine cases out of every ten they are—you should attend to them at once, as it is impossible to have a well, strong body unless the kidneys are performing their functions in a proper manner.

Anyone with a bad back should appreciate how to get a good one. It is a very simple matter. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. They regulate the kidneys, and there is no further excuse for any kidney trouble to exist.

Mrs. E. J. Graves, Oshawa, Ont., writes: "My complaint lies with my kidneys. I have suffered no end of pain with them, and with backaches. I had tried everything, so I thought, until a friend advised me to try a box of Doan's Kidney Pills. I did try them, and one box helped me fine, so I got another, and now feel that I cannot recommend them too highly to anyone suffering with kidney trouble."

Doan's Kidney Pills are the original kidney pills. Do not accept any substitutes put up under similar names. Always use that our trade mark "The Maple Leaf" appears on the table and wrapper.

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

GERMAN OFFICERS COMMAND TROOP OF BULGARIANS.

The Berliner Tageblatt prints a letter from its correspondent at Varna, the chief naval port of Bulgaria on the Black Sea, in which he says that Bulgarian troops stationed there are commanded by a German general and lieutenant-colonel, and a German naval officer is also attached to the small Bulgarian navy that has its home station at Varna.

"Here in Varna," he writes, "I have seen what the Bulgarian is able to accomplish by harmoniously co-operating with the intelligent will of the German officer. Starting from nothing the Bulgarian navy has created here a well defended naval port during the few months since the war began. A new power that merits respect is here being created and the same splendid spirit for offensive inspires both Germans and Bulgarians.

The immediate task of the little Bulgarian navy, the correspondent says, is to operate by means of submarines against the Russian Black Sea fleet, by hovering about the Russian ports.

Facts Worth Knowing

Take a district containing a hundred houses and a hundred families living in them. You will find that over ninety per cent. of the buildings are insured against fire loss. Of the heads of the families occupying them, according to the known average, not one in five will be carrying life insurance. Look forward fifty years: How many of the houses will have been destroyed in that period? Not over one of the hundred. Take the heads of the families in the same fifty years: How many of them will be alive at the end of that period? Not over ten out of the hundred.

We insure against fire as a matter of course, and rightly so. In the fact of a fifty-year record, how vastly more important that the two kinds of insurance be reversed, or better, that the life insurance be brought up in its totality to the volume of the fire insurance. The one house burns, insurance is paid, and the property rebuilt. The man who is in the great class of the uninsured dies, and the loss to himself and those dependent upon him is a total one. You cannot compare a fire loss with a death loss, and yet we go on and on thinking of the more meagre loss of fires and protecting against them, while overlooking and forgetting the greater loss that death brings, and neglect protecting against it.

It is a matter of congratulation that fire losses are universally recognized and protected against. How much greater a matter of congratulation it will be when the same unlimited recognition is given to loss through death, and life insurance protection becomes as universal as fire protection.

Your earning capacity is your Family's Capital. Have you considered how much your earning ability represents?

A Policy in the Sun Life of Canada is not only sound assurance protection, but an increasingly safe and profitable investment.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Cherub Whitlock

He Went to the Wild West a Rosy Cheeked Boy

By EDWARD T. STEWART

When Jimmie Whitlock come out yere to start a ranch we all larfed at him. He was nothin' but a kid. Two cheeks the color of a new red wagon and no sign of a beard on his face made him look like a gal not more'n sixteen years old. His figure was slight and small, and he wore his ha'r long and cut squar aroun' his neck.

What he got the money from to buy a ranch and stock it nobody knew, but it was understood that he was the son of a rich cotton planter in Georgia, and we reckoned that the ole man put up for him. Anyway, he bought a lot o' land and a lot o' sheep and built a fust rate ranch house.

Since he hired a good man for overseer we thought he mought do well enough ranchin', but we didn't think he would be suffered to stay in these parts very long. There was a good deal o' gun play about here in them days, and it was reckoned that he would soon be sheered away. He was mighty fresh, and we allowed that party soon he would run up agin some feller that wouldn't stand his impertance, but we didn't think any one would hurt him any more'n if he had been a real gal.

And Jim didn't seem to realize where he was. He talked about things jist as if he had been in one o' them towns where people wore clawhammer jackets with garrote collars and the rest o' the outfit to match. He seemed rather pleased with the idee o' goin' round armed, and as soon as he got yere, instead o' wearin' one gun under his coat, where it wouldn't be noticed, he wore two, one on each hip. He could not 'a' done anything better calc'lated to git him into trouble.

"He's been readin' dime novels," said his overseer, "about the wild and woolly west. He'll git over that after awhile. He's harmless. Jist you let him alone."

Mebbe Jimmie would 'a' got through without any trouble if he hadn't taken a fancy to Josh Gilson's gal. Josh was interested in the Spangler ranch and above the ordinary cowpuncher, but he was a fighter through and through. When we seen that little baby faced kid buckin' up agin him and his sweetheart we all thought 'o Mary's little lamb walkin' into the sleepin' quarters of a grizzly. I thought it a pity that such a purty little feller should stand in the way of a man like Gilson, and I says to him:

"Jimmie, if I was you I wouldn't go monkeyin' around Josh Gilson's gal what he's expectin' to marry in the spring; it's dangerous."

"Is it?" he says, lookin' interested.

"Yes, Jimmie," says I, "it's mighty dangerous."

"You don't mean," he says, "that if Mamie Walker likes me better 'n him he'd blame me?"

"He'd put his heel on you and grind you into the earth like a worm."

Jim didn't say anything to this for awhile; he seemed to be thinkin'. Then he said:

"Supposin' I got the drop on him."

I larfed. The idea o' Jimmie buckin' up at all agin Josh Gilson was funny, but that he should dream o' gittin' the drop on a man whose gun was used to goin' off almost before it left the holster and the ball plum through the other feller was enough to make a mule larf right out.

"Jimmie," says I, solemn-like, "you're a nice boy and I wouldn't like to see you git hurt, much less carried to the buryin' ground up on the hill. Take my advice and let Mamie alone."

"Much obliged for your advice, Mr. Cook," says Jimmie, "and I'll remember it. And I'll leave you somepin in my will."

"You won't have no occasion to mention me in your will, Jimmie," I says, "unless you do some fool trick that'll git yourself killed."

Fact is, Jimmie seemed not to realise things. I was afeared his readin' of dime novels about the west would lead him to fly in the face o' Providence, or, rather, Josh Gilson, and afore he understood what he was doin' he'd git a hole in him. I shook my head and looked soleman, walkin' away slow, like an actor in the theater after he has warned somebody agin somepin awful.

One day soon after this warnin' Jimmie come to me, and he says, says he:

"Mr. Cook, you was right about what you said about my 'sociatin' with Mamie Walker."

"How so?" says I.

"Josh met me on the road this mornin', and he says to me: 'You mis'able kid, what d'ye mean by buttin' in at ole man Walker's? Don't you go there no more!' And I asks him why he didn't tell Mamie to stop my goin' there. And he says that was none o' my business; if I go there again he'll let daylight through me."

"What does Mamie say about it?" I asked.

"She says she'll receive visits from anybody she likes."

"Waal, Jimmie," says I, "if I was you I'd let them two fight it out between 'em. It's my opinion that a third hand comin' in between the jack o' clubs and the queen o' hearts'll get frone out o' the game."

"Mr. Cook," says Jim to this, "that was one o' the wisest remarks you ever made. But supposin' third hand holds the ace?"

Jim walked away slowly without sayin' nothin' more. I didn't suppose he would be fool enough to come to a showdown with Gilson even if he held a royal flush. If he did I hadn't nothin' on my conscience, 'cause I'd given him fa'r warnin'.

The very next day what d'ye suppose I seen? Why, Jimmie and Mamie. Jim on his bay gelding, Mamie on her sorrel mar', carortin' along the road, talkin' and larfin' like two children on their way to a circus. Mamie was barely sixteen and as onexperienced as Jimmie. My heart went down into my boots. There was them two young things, scarcely out o' the cradle, with no apprehension o' the horrible fate awaitin' 'em in case they happened to meet Josh Gilson. Josh was ten years older'n Mamie, old enough to look on 'em like two innocent children, as they was. But I knowed that wouldn't concern him; all he thought about was that he wanted the gal and wouldn't have no mercy on nobody that tried to take her away from him.

And what was my horror to see Gilson himself comin' along the road to meet 'em. Fust thing I thought of was that no matter how fast I rode I was too far away from 'em all to git there before Josh would have a chance to murder the little cuss that was interferin' with him. But I hitched my gun for'ard and dug my spurs into my horse's flanks. While I was ridin' I seen it all.

Josh reined in and got out his gun. He seemed to be hesitatin' what to do. He put his gun back into its holster and rode on, but soon took it out again. I was watchin' the children too. Fust thing I knowed when they was comin' nigh one another, Mamie rode a little ahead o' Jim and put herself between him and Josh. That looked as if Josh wouldn't have a chance at him without hittin' Mamie. But what did the kid do but ride right before her, and that she might not be in the way o' the gun play he veered to the side o' the road.

"By thunder!" says I to myself. "The little cuss is dead game!"

I rode on across country, keepin' my eyes on what was goin' on ahead of me instead of on the ground I was travelin' over. It was mighty uneven, I kin tell you; but, instead o' givin' my horse any chance to earn up, on comin' to a hole or a ditch I spurred him on jist as much at one time as another.

You see, what I was wantin' to do was to git within range so I could drop Gilson afore he dropped the cherub. They say haste makes waste, and so it did in this case, for comin' to a gully and not seein' it I pushed right on, not even raisin' my horse for a jump. The consequence was he came down on his knees on the opposite bank, while I went sprawlin' three or four yards ahead of him.

I picked myself up and looked ahead agin to the front. While I'd been ridin' there had been a short parley between Gilson and the two kids, but by this time it was over.

Gilson made good his reputation for quick shootin', but whether Jim hadn't quite got out o' line with the gal or somepin else, he missed. Jim fired and hit bad, but I couldn't see where. Then there was a rattle of shots, and Josh fell off his horse. A few more leaps o' my horse brought me within range, but I was too late to do anything for Jimmie; he had done it all himself. When I come up he was holdin' his left arm with the hand of the other and the blood was drippin' from it.

"I've scooped the board, Mr. Cook," he says, with a smile on his baby face as innocent as one o' them little fat children with wings in pictur's.

I didn't have time to say nothin', for I seen Mamie totterin' on her horse, and I had just time to reach her and catch her in my arms before she fell. I got her off her horse and laid her down aside the road; then I looked at Jim's arm and seen it was bleedin' mighty free. I took his handkerchief and tied it tight just above the wound. He went to Mamie, and I seen she was comin' to her senses. I ran to where Josh was layin' on his face. I turned him over and made up my mind right off that he was a goner.

I didn't have no trouble in gittin' 'im back home, though I was afraid o' the bleedin' o' Jimmie's arm, and, to tell the truth, a bullet had cut an artery, and if I hadn't tied that handkerchief so tight he would 'a' bled to death. I sent a wagon out for Gilson's body, and the scrap was over.

It made a heap o' difference to Jimmie Whitlock. Didn't any one after that larf at him for comin' west with dime novel notions about the country. He was the pet o' all the decent men o' the territory, and gun men let him alone. Everybody was pleased that Mamie Walker was rid o' Josh Gilson. He wasn't up to her mark anyway. Her folks was respectable and didn't like her associatin' with him, but you know that when young folks are at the meltin' age they're liable to take up with the best there is at hand.

I've given you the record o' the cuss to this state when it was a territory of Governor Whitlock, now one o' the richest sheep raisers in the west and one o' the most prominent men every way. Half the people out yere still speak of him as Jimmie, and some still call him Cherub Whitlock. Still he owned Josh Gilson anything he was wanted o' the people round about has been his. His story only shows that you can't most always tell what kind o' stuff people, especially youngsters, is made up of until somepin happens to bring it out, just as the doctors can't tell when kids is ailin' till they break out whether they've scarlet fever or measles.

Why "Anuric" is an INSURANCE Against Sudden Death.

Before an Insurance Company will take a risk on your life the examining physician will test the urine and report whether you are a good risk. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog, you suffer from backache, sick-headache, dizzy spells, or the twinges and pains of lumbago, rheumatism and gout. The urine is often cloudy, full of sediment; channels often get sore and sleep is disturbed two or three times a night. This is the time you should consult some physician of wide experience—such as Dr. Pierce of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y. Send him 10 cents for sample package of his new discovery, "Anuric." Write him your symptoms and send a sample of urine for test. Experience has taught Dr. Pierce that "Anuric" is the most powerful agent in dissolving uric acid, as hot water melts sugar; besides being absolutely harmless it is endowed with other properties, for it preserves the kidneys in a healthy condition by thoroughly cleansing them. Being so many times more active than Lithia, it clears the heart valves of any sandy substances which may clog them and checks the degeneration of the blood-vessels, as well as regulating blood pressure. "Anuric" is a regular insurance and life-saver for all big meat eaters and those who disregard limpoints in their joints. Ask the druggist for "Anuric" put up by Dr. Pierce, in 50-cent packages.

STRENGTH AND BEAUTY

Come with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This is a blood cleanser and alterative that starts the liver and stomach into vigorous action. It thus assists the body to manufacture rich red blood which feeds the heart, nerves, brain and organs of the body. The organs work smoothly like machinery running in oil. You feel clean, strong and strenuous instead of tired, weak and faint.

Stomach Was Bad.

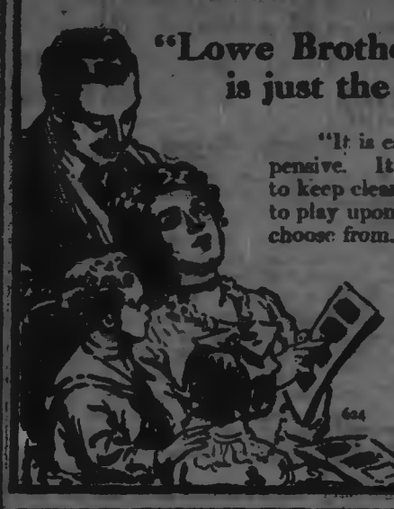
Could Eat Hardly Anything.

When the stomach gets out of order the whole system seems to become affected in the way of ill health. The breath becomes foul, the tongue furred, the appetite becomes disturbed, nausea and vomiting occur, there is a rising and spuring of food caused by the acidity of the stomach, and the stomach and bowels become distended causing flatulency. Unless these symptoms are dealt with immediately, dyspepsia or some other serious trouble is liable to follow as a consequence.

That grand old remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters, has been on the market for the past forty years, and we claim, without any fear of contradiction, that there is not another medicine on the market to-day that can compare with it for the cure of all complaints of the stomach.

Miss Lillian E. Phillips, Pleasantcamp, N.B., writes: "My stomach was so bad I was in pain and misery. I could eat hardly anything. I had been treated by skillful doctors for it, but they did me no good. I was giving up in despair when I happened to hear of Burdock Blood Bitters. You can't think how fast it helped me, for I had only taken two bottles before I was better. I will recommend your medicine very highly to all my friends and sufferers."

Burdock Blood Bitters is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.



"Lowe Brothers Hard Drying Floor Paint is just the thing for our old floors—

"It is easy to apply—we can do it ourselves—and so inexpensive. It wears well, too, and makes the floors much easier to keep clean, thus making them more sanitary for the children to play upon. There is quite a variety of attractive colors to choose from."

Lowe Brothers Hard Drying Floor Paint is made especially for use on floors where more expensive finishes are not desired. It dries hard enough in twelve hours to walk upon. Get a color card at our store.

Woman is Suing A Police Sergeant

Mrs. Gertrude Altman, Who Kept Rooming House, Makes Series of Allegations Against Sergt. Majury.

TORONTO, April 29.—Mrs. Gertrude Akman, of 70 Beverley Street, entered an action in the Jury Assize Court against Hans Majury, a police patrol sergeant, for $3,000 damages. She alleges that he entered her house on the 23rd of October last at 1.15 o'clock in the morning with another policeman by forcing the door and breaking the lock.

Mrs. Altman runs a boarding-house, and she claimed in the witness-box that he awakened all the roomers in the house and questioned them as to their knowledge concerning the plaintiff's reputation.

Sick Lady in House.

"There was a young lady in one of the rooms upstairs," said Mrs. Altman. "She was ill, and at the time Mr. Majury and the other constable broke in I was up attending to her. When I heard somebody forcing the door I thought burglars might be coming in, but when I found out who the men were I asked Mr. Majury what he wanted, but he would not give me any satisfaction.

Mrs. Altman went on to describe, after the gas was lighted, how he went into the bedroom back of the parlour and awakened two men sleeping there.

"After a while he decided to go upstairs," said she. "I asked him if he had a search warrant. He said he did not need one. I begged him not to go upstairs, as he would only excite the young woman, who was sick and make her worse."

"What did he say then?" asked her lawyer.

"He just brushed me roughly aside and went upstairs. I followed him up after a bit. He told the young lady she was only pretending to be sick. After a little he must have seen she was ill, for he went into the bathroom and got her a glass of water."

Questioned Roomers.

Mrs. Altman went on to state that when he came downstairs again he questioned the roomers. She said that when he went to go upstairs he placed her under arrest and told her to get dressed, as she was to accompany him to the station.

"One of the young men in the back room raised objection to going out into the kitchen to be questioned," she said, "and Mr. Majury grabbed him by the back of the neck and dragged him out of bed and half way across the room."

The witness said that the sergeant at first refused to allow her to telephone for the doctor, since she wanted to relieve herself of the responsibility of the sick woman after she had been arrested. He finally allowed her to telephone, however.

After two hours Mrs. Altman said the policemen left, the sergeant saying, "Well, I don't think I want you anyway."

Cross-examined, Mrs. Altman declared she had trouble twice before with the defendant, when he searched the house. On one occasion she stated he had gone into the house through the window. "He arrested me for keeping a disorderly house," she said, "and the Magistrate, when he heard my story, let me go."

Mr. Justice Chute asked defendant's counsel to point out the law whereby policemen could enter a house without an order.

The defendant, in his defence, denies the plaintiff's allegations.

Production and Thrift

CANADA'S CALL FOR SERVICE AT HOME

Produce More and Save More

The Empire needs food. If you are not in the fighting line you may be in the producing line. Labour is limited—all the more reason to do more than ever before. Grow food for the men who are fighting for you. The Allies need all the food that you can produce. Every little helps. You are responsible for your own work. If you cannot produce as much as you would like, produce all you can. Work with the right spirit. Put fighting energy into your effort and produce now when it counts. The more you produce the more you can save. Producing and saving are war-service.

Make Your Labour Efficient

In war-time do not waste time and energy on unimportant and unprofitable work. Economise labour. Put off unproductive work till after the war, and, if possible, help in producing something needed now. Let us not waste labour. Canada needs it all. If possible help to feed the Allies. Make your backyard a productive garden. Cultivate it with a will. Make your labour count for as much as possible.

Do Not Waste Materials

There should be no waste in war-time. Canada could pay the annual interest on her war expenditure out of what we waste on our farms, in our factories, in our homes. Every pound of food saved from waste is as good as a pound of increased production. The way for a nation to save is for every individual to save. France is strong to-day because of thrift in time of peace. The men and women of Great Britain are not only "doing" but are learning to "do without."

Spend Your Money Wisely

Practise economy in the home by eliminating luxuries. Wasting our dollars here weakens our strength at the Front. Your savings will help Canada to finance the war. Save your money for the next Dominion War issue. There can be no better investment.

FROM PARIS TO VERDUN IN AN AUTOMOBILE---MANY STRANGE SIGHTS ON TRIP

The Road to Verdun—It is not a highway much travelled at present by civilian feet. It leads to the place where thousands of lives have been offered up as a sacrifice to German militarism, and where death and suffering are common sights. It re-sounds to the sound of marching feet, to the rumble of the military truck or field ambulance to the shrill siren of the staff officers' speeding car.

Lincoln Eyre, staff correspondent of the New York World, drove from Paris to Verdun in an automobile, the greater part of the journey being taken at night. He describes his trip in the following interesting article, as being like a trip in phantom-land. His story is cleverly written and well worth reading.

* * * *

In one of his delightfully imaginative volumes H. G. Wells pictures a youthful giant, product of the Food of the Gods, sitting on a housetop and gazing perplexedly down upon the turmoil of a London street eddying about his enormous boots.

"What's it all about? What's it all for?" the puzzled giant inquires pathetically of an unsympathetic world.

Those two questions kept recurring to me again and again during the automobile trip from Paris to Verdun which I have just been privileged to make at the invitation of the French General Staff. The greater part of the 250-mile journey was accomplished after nightfall, and it was then, in the mysteriously alive darkness abrouding the zone just behind the front from sunset to dawn, that my sympathies went most strongly to Mr. Wells' mystified colossus.

A Touch of "Realism."

Of course one knew that all the strange things dimly visible or audible on either side of the road or glaringly illuminated for an instant by the rays of our acetylene lamps had to do with the twisting line of human and earthen dust a few miles to the north. But beyond that vague general knowledge everything was incomprehensible, abnormal, confused, except for an occasional frankly tangible incident, like a touch of realism in a nightmare.

There was nothing mysterious, for instance, in how a young infantry lieutenant rescued our far from a grave in the mud after our over-zealous chauffeur had tried to circle around a file of motor trucks blocking the road. Naturally the chauffeur's efforts caused the left wheels to slip off the roadbed and into a lake of mire, to which we seemed destined to be glued for all time.

A group of soldiers who appeared extremely familiar with every variety of mud examined our situation critically but not helpfully. Until their officer turned up the chauffeur, the staff captain, who accompanied me, and I were as much at a loss as they were. The lieutenant, himself clotted with mushy mud—he had just come from the trenches—solved the problem at a glance.

Out Came the Car.

"Move the truck up here," he ordered briskly. "Get a cable and tie it to the bonnet of the car! You, poilus, stand on either side ready to push! Everything ready? Now then, truck, go ahead slowly! Poilus, push hard! There she goes!"

With that the big car rolled easily out of the quicksand and stood once more on firm ground. The lieutenant saluted, brusquely bade his men fall in, and marched off without unnecessary words—100 per cent. efficiency.

His poilus had grinned as they put their shoulders to the heavy motor had seemed, in fact, to consider the affair most amusing. As we continued on our way I meditated that Gallic effervescence which permits a Frenchman, worn and weary from the trenches, to regard pushing an automobile out of the mud as fun.

From Paris to Chalons-sur-Marne the journey was comparatively uneventful. We encountered columns of convoys going in various directions, three military motors, and in the towns and villages, perhaps a dozen civilians all told and a few hundred soldiers. The deserted aspect of the countryside was the most impressive phase of that stage of the trip. While the fields were all ploughed and sown, they were utterly destitute of life. I never say a human being at work anywhere, yet the roads were being kept in repair and there were few signs of dilapidation in the communities we passed.

A Deserted Land.

From the summit of a hill one could gaze about for miles without observing a living thing. And before the war this part of France—the valley of the Marne—was one of the busiest sections, agriculturally, and one of the most travelled in all Europe. In June, 1914, one could not have gone for ten minutes on any main highway without meeting an automobile. We drove for hours without seeing even a farmer's buggy. Nowadays one does not motor far north of Paris unless one is on military service.

Dusk and the mystery of night in the zone behind the front overtook us at Chalons. Thence our way led northeastward, at times within range of the German guns, at times far from the firing line, but always within that busy area where lie railroads, bridge-heads, field hospitals, munitions depots and reserves of men and artillery.

Once we had to shut off our headlights, and feel our way slowly through the darkness for a space because somewhere on our left (north of us) German eyes were peering continually at that road through telescopes.

Occasionally a dim light showed to our right, but to our left the monotony of blackness was never broken. For that way lay the trenches and the hidden gun emplacements where even the flare of a match is a perilous thing. Still the road was empty.

I remember a company of soldiers bivouacking by the roadside, and a woman on a bicycle, and how startling it was to see them leap suddenly into the whiteness of our headlights.

Troops in Auto Trucks.

Now and again a waving lantern would bring us to an abrupt halt while an apologetic territorial with bayonet fixed examined our papers. But it seemed to me there was less of this scrutiny in approaching the Verdun front than there had been on the way to Schneider gun factory at Creusot, hundreds of miles from the battle line, when I motored there last summer.

Then they began. I saw them first at a distance, and thought we must be coming into the main street of an unusually well-lighted town for the lamps on the dashboard of each of them, strung out interminably, looked like a row of street lamps. They were coming toward us, and we met the head of the column before my first impression had died away.

It was a distinct surprise, therefore, to realize that this splendidly illuminated avenue was simply an apparently endless procession of motor trucks, loaded to the gunwales with troops. They were moving along at fair speed (eighteen or twenty miles an hour, I should say), and there were fully 100 of them in that first lot, which was merely an inkling of what was to come.

Each truck carries from eighteen to twenty-four men, so there could not have been more than one regiment, although it seemed as if there were an entire army corps at least.

Seemed Unreal.

Keeping twenty or thirty feet apart they lumbered steadily along, looming fearsomely above our pigmy limousine in the darkness and paying us no more attention than a herd of elephants would devote to a black and tan terrier. More than once, so forcefully did their four tons lurch about on the oily mud, we were obliged to halt and withdraw to the side of the road to let them pass.

They were like mammoths from another planet, for the occasional faces seen peering whitely from them were unreal even in the brilliance of our acetylene rays; they harkened only to a shrill voice emanating from a little cycle car which slipped in and out among them, mouselike alongside their Brobdignian bulk.

The voice was unreal, too, and I was surprised to learn that it was human and emanated from the Chief of Convoy, as the officer in command of these monsters is called.

There was a slight interval after that original column, but then the unending procession began again, and as we passed the lightless houses of Bar-le-Duc and entered upon the homestretch to Verdun there was never a moment's break in the line. My staff officer guide told me everything could be brought to the front nowadays in these trucks—men, munitions, food, supplies of all kinds. Since the Crown Prince's offensive began the French armies in this sector have become absolutely independent of the railroads.

Helped Save Verdun.

A special section of trucks transports fresh beef to the immediate rear of the firing line every day, another sections carries the daily quota of shells of all sizes, still another stands ready to shift an entire army corps from one point to another literally at a moment's notice.

"It was the truck which brought Gen. Balfourier and his famous Twentieth Army Corps to the Douaumont from in time to save the position." I was informed. "When the general arrived the commander of the corps which he was to relieve said to him: 'You are doubly welcome, general, because you did not arrive six hours later.'"

"That was all, but to those who knew those simple words told a terrible story of amazing suffering and heroism under the frightfullest torture war has yet devised. It it were not for the trucks Verdun might have fallen, for without them the Twentieth Corps could never have arrived in time."

I spent last night in Bar-le-Duc, in a hotel on the highroad to Verdun. As I dropped off to sleep the trucks were rumbling past and the sound of them through an open window resembled waves breaking upon the seashore. Twice during the night I awoke and each time I noticed a momentary lull in the infinite caravan.

When the sound began again I resumed my sleep. I had been awakened not by the noise of the trucks, but by the temporary cessation of it, just as one wakes up instantly on board a steamship when the engines stop. In the morning they were still going by.

RUSHING STAFF CARS.

Trucks are not the only obstacles one meets in a highs ride to Verdun. There are always generals and staff officers dashing about from one part of the front to another. Suddenly, darting forth from among the monotonous mass of trucks, one glimpses the powerful headlights which betoken the staff car.

It seems to fling itself toward one, and then in an instant is past, racing in and out among the trucks at fifty miles an hour. Sometimes it is followed by two or three others, all flying the red and white guidons of the army corps or the red, white and blue of the division.

One never knows who the occupants of these machines may be. Any car might be carrying Gen. Joffre or Gen. Petain, or merely a young staff lieutenant with despatches.

One slips through dark little villages, their cobbled streets lined with furtive groups of soldiers, but with never a civilian to be seen. Some of these hamlets are unharmed; others are merely blots of debris, stone houses demolished by shell fire. All of them are in complete darkness, and the walls of the houses everywhere are spattered and stained with mud splashed from the narrow roads by trucks and motor cars.

We stopped for a moment in one such community, to show our papers. Soldiers passed and repassed in the glare of our head-lamps, glancing curiously at us, and shading their only visible illumination in the entire village.

One poilu took advantage of the light to read a letter. It must have been from home, for I saw him draw his sleeve across his eyes once. Then he turned away and was lost in the blackness about us.

A battalion, evidently just out of the trenches, came by, the men gazing apathetically at us as they marched wearily along. On one side a door opened and through it I saw three officers bending over a table on which were a small oil lamp and quarters of some kind, but I didn't know for certain.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S SHIRT WAIST.

By Anabel Worthington.

Typifying the "sports model," and in the prevailing fancy for comfortable attire, this shirt waist is made with considerable fulness. It may be formed of many different materials and there is a many to choose from; there never has born a season giving such a latitude of choice, hence the fashion of combining fabrics. The pattern of this design provides for two styles of collar and sleeves and low or high neck may be used. There is a tuck in each shoulder edge which is stitched to just a little below the bust, where it falls in with the folds of the material that are slightly gathered under the girdle; at back the gathers are stitched to a stay belt of tape. A handsome collar in scalloped outline is right style for the tie that is worn to give smartness to the model, and the pocket properly belongs to this practical style of waist.

The pattern is cut in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure. To make a duplicate of the design you need only 2½ yards 36 inch material and ⅝ yard contrasting goods.

If you will send 20 cents to the office of this publication the pattern will be promptly forwarded to you.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Mitts of 1830 Mode Are Now On Every Hand

New York, May 1.—Yes, mitts are now on every hand and whatever will become of all those delicate situations that have to be handled with kid gloves goodness only knows.

If we are going into the old-fashioned fashions thoroughly it is only natural that we should look to our hands as carefully as to our hips and you must needs admit that the mitted hand is as much a part of the 1830 modes as the hooped and crinolined skirt.

Black silk mitts and white silk mitts and mitts ecru, grey and pastel tinted are ready to our hands, but the really first hand mitt is of all over black lace to add perefction to the frilly organdies and muslins so reminiscent of old lavender and Gedey's Lady's Book.

UNCOVERED IN MITTS.

Now every woman knows that nothing so shows up a mans' imperfections like a mitt. If your nails are not well shaped, your knuckles red or knotty, they will be discovered and uncovered in mitts. All the little manicures are already chortling with glee at the rich summer harvest of lady fingers that will now be theirs as long as the mitt is destined to wave on the hands of the brave and fair.

Jewelers are also taking notice, for rings will no longer hide their light under a kidskin, but will twinkle unrestrained on nude digits.

A single odd ring, original and unique of design and denoting the personality of the wearer, is most to be desired. The old fashioned cameo rings, coral rings and hair rings are being revived and the whole old fashioned sets of carved coral, cameos and jet are greatly in demand; eartings, brooch, locket, ring and bracelets in their quaint and reminiscent entirety.

SEED PEARL SETS.

Seed pearl sets also are favorites, and old fashioned sets of gold, black enameled, and set with pearls are exquisite.

Too many rings, of course, spoil the mitt, for it is an exponent of the clinging vine or ingenuous innocence mode of dress. One ring on each paddy is quite all that is permissable to her who is a stickler for good taste and the eternal fitness of things.

Hence all the more need for care in its selection, individuality and design.

Art jewelers are consequently on their mettle with their metal turning out this costume jewelry.

Happy indeed is the maid who is the proud possessor of an exquisite carved red coral set, brooch, earrings, bracelets, ring and back comb all complete, that has been handed down from a great-great aunt.

An object of envy also, the lass who cherishes a black onyx ring set with a pearl as her share of great grandmother's set that has been divided among her sisters and her cousins and her aunts.

But take heart, fair ladies, who possess no jewel hung family tree, the modern jewelers are no pikers when it comes to imitating antiques, so even you may hail with joy the advent of the mitt.

Yea, verily, I believe every woman will, since it leaves her fingers to stick in every pie.

SAGE TEA DANDY TO DARKEN HAIR

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Color and Lustre to Hair.

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost over night if you'll get a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old famous Sage Tea Recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray or becoming faded have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

This preparation is a toilet requisite and is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

How the Blood Is Purified

By the Searching and Painstaking Work of Healthy Kidneys.

In its circulation through the body, the blood not only carries nutrition to the cells and tissues, but also collects the waste material resulting from the breaking down of cells and tissues, the ashes left by the fire of life.

In due course the blood passes through the kidneys to be purified of these poisonous impurities, and these filtering organs extract each day about 50 ounces of liquids and 2 ounces of solids, 500 grains of urea and 10 grains of uric acid, the material which is found in rheumatic joints.

Sudden changes of temperature throw a great strain on the kidneys, but it is overeating and drinking that are the usual cause of trouble. In a vain effort to remove the excess of waste matter the kidneys break down, uric acid and other poisons are left in the blood and the whole system is poisoned by impure blood.

Pains in the back and limbs, severe headaches, lumbago and rheumatism are the natural result. Hardening of the arteries, excessive blood pressure, weakening of the heart's action, Bright's disease may be anticipated unless prompt action is taken.

We like to think of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills as preventive treatment, for by their timely use you can readily prevent all these dreaded disorders. Unlike other medicines for kidney troubles, they awaken the action of liver and bowels as well as the kidneys, and thereby effect a prompt cleansing of the whole filtering and excretory systems.

There is no way by which the action of the kidneys can be so quickly aroused and the blood cleansed of impurities as by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. It is therefore the greatest of blood purifiers and much sought for at this time of year, when everybody feels the need of a medicine to cleanse from the system the accumulation of poisonous matter.

Three of the Rebel Leaders Are Executed

SEC'Y FOR IRELAND BIRRELL RESIGNS

Three of the Leaders in Irish Rebellion Are Executed To-day

Peter Pearce, President of the "Irish Republic." James Connolly the Commander of the Rebel Army and a Third Leader Shot After a Court Martial Trial---Chief Secretary For Ireland Birrell Has Resigned.

NO ACTIVITY REPORTED AT VERDUN

LONDON, May 3.—Three leaders of the Irish rebellion were executed by shooting this morning, Premier Asquith announced in the Commons this afternoon.

They were the first of the rebels whose execution has been publicly announced.

Practically all rebel prisoners have now been removed from Dublin. About three hundred more, including several leaders, were brought to England to-day, and the remainder made up largely of prisoners of the rank and file were taken to Belfast under heavy guard by Irish troops.

Peter Pearce, President of the seven days Irish Republic, James Connolly, Commander of the Army of Irish Republic, and a third man whose name was not given, were men who were found guilty by court martial and shot, Asquith said.

It is thought in some quarters that Sir Roger Casement was the third man.

Premier Asquith stated later that all three of the rebel leaders executed were man who had signed the proclamation of the new Irish Republic, issued by the rebels at the beginning of the Dublin outbreak. This statement eliminated the possibility that Sir Roger Casement, awaiting trial in the Tower of London for the part he played in the conspiracy, was the unnamed third man shot to death. Casement's name was not attached to the proclamation.

The swiftness with which the Government acted came as somewhat of a surprise to Parliament.

Pearce, one of the best educated of the rebel leaders, was headmaster of a boys' school in Dublin at the outbreak of the rebellion. He had been conected with the Sinn Fein activities for some time, and at a secret gathering of the rebels immediately before the outbreak, was chosen provisional president of the new Irish Republic.

Pearce led the assault on the General Post Office, resulting in its capture by the rebels on the first day of the rebellion. He was wounded in the leg in Thursday's fighting. Later he signed the proclamation calling upon his followers to lay down their arms.

Connolly was also wounded in street fighting. British authorities received a report Saturday night that he had died of his wounds.

Connolly's name was signed to a number of passports found on prisoners with the title "Commander of the Army of the Irish Republic."

Three other men who signed the Irish Republic proclamation were given three years' imprisonment. Lesser punishment will likely be meted out to others of several hundred rebels under arrest. Nothing official has been announced of the fate of Sir Roger Casement.

Premier Asquith introduced the Government's Bill for compulsory military service in the House of Commons this afternoon.

The bill becomes effective a month after its passage. It authorizes the Government to call all males eligible for service to the colours, but provides for the establishment of an army reserve for industrial work. The Government may allot as many men as it sees fit to this reserve as industrial conditions demand.

Augustin Birrell, Chief Secretary for Ireland, has resigned from the British Cabinet as a result of the Irish rebellion. The official announcement of his resignation was made upon his return from Dublin to-day.

Birrell was a Liberal in politics.

Before appointment to the Cabinet he had written a number of books.

It was generally understood that Sir Matthew Nathan Birrell's undersecretary, following the action of the chief, would also resign immediately.

PARIS, (French Official Communique)—Only artillery activity occurred last night on the Verdun front, the War Office reported to-day.

A French long range gun bombarded the railway station at Sebastopol in the hands of the Germans.

In Argeane the Germans launched a small attack with gases near La Harazes, but were repulsed with serious losses.

Germany's Reply Will Not Meet U. S. Demands

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, May 3.—Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg, whose return from the Kaiser's headquarters is expected with a few hours, will say the final word on the draft of Germany's reply to the United States made at the Foreign Office.

The note itself has been put into diplomatic form. Foreign Secretary Von Jagow told the budget committe of the Reichstag yesterday that it could not be regarded as entirely completed, indicating that the Chancellor may make some alterations before it is forwarded to Washington.

The delay in the Chancellor's return from the conference with the Kaiser has held up the sending of the reply indefinitely.

It is the general belief, however, that the reply will go forward with a very short time after Von Beahmann-Hollweg's arrival here.

NEW YORK, May 3.—Financial circles here to-day received word from reliable sources that a member of the British Government had stated in private conversation that he expects peace within a few months.

Early Termination of American Campaign

Special to the Examiner:

WASHINGTON, May 3.—An early termination of the American campaign in Mexico is what the Obregon Scott agreement at El Paso spells in the view of the authorities here to-day. In effect the agreement is that Americans will patrol Northern Mexico scattering Villa's men while Carranzistas can chase them to the southward if they will. A short quick clean-up campaign is in prospect.

Serious May Day' Riots in Germany

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 3.—A Central News despatch from Geneva declares twenty-five persons were killed and 200 injured in May-day riots in Berlin, while three women were killed and seventy wounded in Leipsic. There were serious labour disturbances also in Munich and Kel.

100,000 MUNITION WORKERS PRESSING FOR SHORTER DAY

United States Troops Are Called Out to Preserve Order in the Westing House Strike Zone

MANY WORKERS QUIT

PITTSBURG, Penn., May 3—While several companies of State troops were on duty or en route to Westinghouse strike zone to-day to preserve order, the movement of 100,000 munitions for an eight-hour day gained strength.

The first troops to near the zone of yesterday's wild riot was the 1st Cavalry, or Governor's Troop, from Harrisburg. It entered East Pittsburg shortly after 9 o'clock. At the same time several thousand employees of McKee's Rocks plant of the Pressed Steel Car Co. walked out, tying up the works.

Berlin Citizens Are Eager For New Name

BERLIN, Ont., May 3.—The campaign to change the name of the city had an enthusiastic start this evening in a large and representative meeting of citizens to organize in order to carry the by-law on May 19. The general feeling was that an effort should be made to carry the by-law unanimously, and by means of wide publicity and numerous public meetings everything will be done to create sentiment in favour of the changing of the name.

The submitting of at least six new names to the choice of the people after the vote is taken was favoured.

THIS MORNING'S POLICE COURT

In discharging Percy Tompkins, who appeared in this morning's Police Court on a charge of vagrancy, Magistrate Dumble promised him six youths on the gaol farm in event of reappearance in court. Tompkins made a hurried exit from the courtroom after addressing a fervent thank you to the Magistrate.

Both P. C. Wigg and Detective Newhall swore that Tompkins approached a number of people and solicited alms. Tompkins was in court a month ago on a similar charge. At that time the accused was accompanied by a armless boy whom he claimed as his son. The latter, according to Tompkins, is now in Montreal.

BIG FIRE IN WINNIPEG: LOSS MAY BE $500,000

Winnipeg, May 3.—The block containing the Stovel Company, one of the largest printing and engraving plants in Western Canada, is afire. The fire is through the roof and the buildings and contents look like a total loss, which according to a rough estimate, may reach $500,000.

APPEAL IS BEING HEARD

The following case which is of local interest is being heard in Osgoode Hall, Toronto:

Drain vs. Catholic Mutual Benefit Association of Canada. C. C. Robinson for defendants. D. O'Connell, (Peterboro) for plaintiff. Appeal by defendants and cross-appeal by plaintiff from judgment of Middleton, J., of 30th March, 1916, declaring beneficiary fund law enacted by Grand Trustees of defendant association is valid and binding upon the members, and paying cash surrender values or issuing paid-up policies, which the judgment sustained, but enjoined the doing of these two things and otherwise dismissed action.

Appeal partially argued but not concluded.

SOCK SHOWER FOR THE PETERBORO' BATTALION

There appears to be a feeling by some that the 93rd Sock Shower is not necessary at present. It has been the custom to give a personal present to the men leaving for overseas, and socks were considered the best thing to give.

What have the Peterborough people done for the 93rd? We need all the assistance we can get for this, and a committee will be at the Recruiting Rooms, Simcoe street, early in the morning of May 13th, and a great shower of socks is expected on that day.

MORE LOCAL NAMES ON THE CANADIAN CASUALTY LISTS

Pte. Gordon Carveth, of Dummer, a Member of the 8th C.M.R. Killed in Action and Pte. Harvey Amos of the 39th Battalion Wounded---Rain Spoiled 93rd Battalion Trek---To-day's Orders and General Military News.

Another member of "B" Squadron, 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles, which left here in March, 1915, on the first stage of their journey to the front, has paid the supreme price, in the person of Pte. Gordon Carveth, whose name appears in to-day's casualty list, as having been killed in action. Pte. Carveth was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Carveth of Hall's Glen, Dummer Township, and was born in Dummer twenty-one years ago. He enlisted here with the Mounted Rifles early last year, and proved a fine, capable soldier. A number of letters, written by Pte. Carveth, have appeared in the Examiner, one only a short time ago. His parents have only recently returned from a long trip through the Canadian Northwest. The young soldier was well known and popular in Peterborough as well as in the township in which he was born, and the news of his death will come as a shock.

A Field Day for the Norwood Platoon was held on Monday afternoon. In spite of the frequent showers a large number assembled to witness the results of which were.

14. Run. Jump—1st Pte. Kempt; 2nd Pte. King.

15. Bicycle Race—1st Pte. Little; 2nd Pte. Killingbeck.

16. Half mile race—1st Pte. King; 2nd Pte. Earlek Aboud.

A foot-ball match which resulted in a tie, was played by the Norwood and Havelock soldiers. The prizes awarded were in money.

The Havelock platoon headed by the bugler's band from Peterborough arrived in Norwood on their route march, shortly after four o'clock on Tuesday, and attended the farewell in honour of the Norwood platoon.

ANOTHER LOCAL BOY WOUNDED

Yesterday's casualty list contained the name of another Peterborough boy who has been wounded in the person of No. 412355 Pte. Harvey C. Amos, of the 39th Battalion, formerly of the 39th. Pte. Amos enlisted here in February of last year with the 57th quotas to the 39th Battalion, and went to England with that unit afterward forming one of twelve Peterborough boys who were transferred to the 39th Battalion. Pte. Amos lived at 471 King street and his next of kin resides in Blackwater, Ont.

Mrs. Lashbrook, 310 Margaret avenue has received the following letter from Corp. D. J. Eldred of the Mounted Rifles.

France, April 9 1916

Dear Madam,—I wish to thank you for a pair of socks received per Pte. McKinlay, yesterday. They come at a time when I most needed them as I had the misfortune to lose my pack when we were in the trenches last time.

I think it is very good of you ladies to spend so much time in providing for the comfort of we soldiers and I hope when the war is over you will share in the war with us.

The weather has been very cold but it is much better to-day, quite warm in fact.

We all hope that the war will soon be over. We have had enough of it. With all best wishes.

Yours respectfully,

P. J. ELDRED.

On Saturday the Examiner will publish a third list of Peterborough boys who have enlisted outside of the city. If you know of any name which has not yet appeared please send the particulars in before Friday night. It is the Examiner's desire to have the list as complete as possible.

TO-DAY'S ORDERS.

SOUTH CENTRAL SCHOOL REPAIRS BIG PROBLEM

SAYS SIR SAM WAS INSPIRATION TO COMMITTEE

Col. Carnegie Before Shell Investigation Commission Says That Minister of Militia Left Him Inspired With Zeal

TO-DAY'S SITTING

OTTAWA, May 3. — During his cross-examination in the shell inquiry to-day, Colonel Carnegie said in reference to Sir Sam Hughes: "I cannot define anything particular that he did, but I honestly say here that the inspiration to get everything made in Canada, if there was anyone that inspire that at all, it was General Hughes, behind the Committee. I have gone down there all fagged out and like a wet rag, and I have left inspired with zeal to work for Canada, because General Hughes had inspired us."

Col. Carnegie was asked: "It is alleged that Col. Allison had very large interest in profits and commissions, and that his efforts and those of the Minister of Munitions influenced the Committee."

"Were you influenced by Col. Allison or General Hughes?"

"I was not influenced in any way by the Minister or Col. Allison," replied Col. Carnegie.

FRIDAY OPENING- MRS. BYRNE STORE

Those who have been waiting for the opening of the doors of the store formerly known as Mrs. Byrne's Hair Store, 434 George Street, will be interested in the announcement which appears in to-day's issue on Page Nine, intimating that Friday will reveal the bountiful bargains in store for them. The varied stocks of a useful and seasonable character, have all been undergoing the "marking down" process and a general rearrangement for convenient handling. The sale is advertised for eight days for quick clearance; and the reduced prices are intended to make certain that the clearance will take place within the specified time.

ANNUAL MEETING OF BELMONT CLUB

Banquet—Election of Officers —New President

The eighth annual meeting of the Belmont Club was held on Monday evening with a large attendance of members present. Dr. Frank, the retiring president who has enlisted for overseas service, tendered his resignation as an officer by a letter to the Club.

Dr. S. J. Keyes gave an opening address on Wit and Humour, as well as an address later on in the evening with views on Ireland.

Mr. T. Stratton contributed to the entertainment during the evening by songs and recitations in fine style. The supper was a good one, supplied by T. H. Hooper.

At the conclusion of the meeting the following officers were elected:

Pres., Mr. Morris Rosenburg.
Vice-Pres., R. S. Hall.
2nd Vice-Pres., C. M. Moncur.
Sec., Frank Pidgeon.
Treas., Harold F. Hall.
Executive Committee—R. A. Mackay, chairman, W. H. Wagg, A. W. Belleghem, Chas. Robertson and L. Bowes.

Very hearty votes of thanks were tendered to Dr. Keyes and Mr. Stratton for the assistance they had given in making the occasion a success.

Mr. Harold Hall, who has so successfully filled the dual offices of secretary and treasurer, owing to Lt. J. A. McNab being unable to attend to them on account of military duties, was given a hearty vote of thanks and an honorarium in appreciation of his work.

Board of Education Takes Up Proposed Alterations and Orders Specifications of Proposed Improvements—Feel New School Would Be Best.

WILL MOVE CAUTIOUSLY

The most pressing problem before the Board of Education is the South Central school. Mr. R. Denne, chairman of the Property Committee in his report last night presented Mr. Blackwell's plan of proposed improvements the estimated cost of which is $12,000.

The committee requested the Board to take immediate action as anything must be done during the summer vacation.

The discussion of this report disclosed a division of opinion as to the extent of the alterations that should be undertaken this year. Mr. Gordon finally moved that the secretary and solicitor prepare, under the supervision of the Property Committee, specifications for the necessary repairs, and that the report be considered at the next meeting. The motion carried.

Mr. Ackerman reviewing the South Central conditions emphasized its favourable location. It was centrally located in a populous district, and a school would always be required there. The old furnaces, five of them, Mr. Ackerman said, were beyond repair. Mr. Denne stated that two or three of them had been purchased twenty-nine years and had been in continuous use during all that time.

Mr. Eastwood reported that Mr. F. Bartlett had told of some old Smead Dowd patterns being somewhere in the city, and if they could be recovered some of the furnaces could be patched up for a year or two.

Dr. Burnham—Where are we going to get the money?

Mr. Ackerman—Ask the City Council for it.

Dr. Burnham—I think we should consult them first and explain the situation to them.

Mr. Eastwood suggested that only minor repairs should be made for the present and that additional property adjoining be secured for further building.

It was pointed out that if the Board attempted to build a new school the Department would interfere and prevent them because the grounds were not as extensive as desired for new school properties.

Anniversary of Murray St. Church

It was on the tenth day of May, 1846 that the organization of Murray Street Baptist church took place. Next Sunday marks the Seventieth Anniversary. The people of Peterborough will be glad to know that Rev. T. T. Shields of Jarvis St., Baptist church of Toronto will be in the city as special preacher on that occasion. Canada has no stronger preacher than Mr. Shields. He is of different type to the usual pulpit speaker and one whose convincing presentation of the gospel and its adaptation to the needs of to-day makes his message most effective.

On a recent occasion after a sermon in his own church seven young men who came to the church in civilian clothes went direct to the recruiting office and returned to their homes in the king's uniform.

Those who are not in their pews at five minutes to eleven on Sunday morning will not expect to have them reserved.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 3, 1916

CHANGE OF RAY DAY

A day or two ago The Examiner called attention to the benefit that would come from city people doing their buying at our shops through the week, so as to prevent the congestion of patronage and difficulty of service at the shops by concentrating the combined trade of city and country people on Saturday, the only day the latter come in any numbers to the city. It was argued that people living in the city should do their shopping during the mid-week days. All can do this except those who get their pay envelope on Friday or Saturday. To enable all to do mid-week shopping rest with employers. If they would pay on Monday, instead of Friday or Saturday their employees would be in funds to do mid-week shopping; to do their buying more leisurely, make better selection, and avoid making bad bargains by hurried purchases. If the Board of Trade would bring the matter of a Monday pay-day to the management of our large industries a change might be brought about that would create no inconvenience, but would be a distinct benefit to both city and country shoppers, and our merchants and business men.

SCHOOL-BOYS AND FARMING.

"Back to the land" for school boys in the holidays, is a "slogan" that can be heeded with good effect upon all concerned. In the first place it will be a help to the farmer at a time when every prospect of farm help is to be grasped as a drowning man might clutch a straw. It will be a good thing for the city boys fagged with the studies of a school term and somewhat enervated by a winter's seclusion in closed walls. They can have a chance to fill their lusty young lungs with the pure fresh air of the open, hear the cocks crow and the birds carol, and inhale the vivifying breath of mother earth sweet with the precious perfume of the upturned soil, and, in the process, earn an honest penny in slight compensation for the outlay expended upon them by parents all their lives. There will also be moral and sentimental gain. Prevented by age from going to the front, as many of them would like to do, the boys will have the pleasure and pride, if they are built right, as most Canadian boys are, of "doing their bit" in this war by filling the home place of a soldier lad on duty in the battle ranks, and helping solve the problem implied in the home battle cry "patriotism and production." If the school lads find the work harder than play they will not complain; they will be doing their share of the sacrifices all are called to make. They will have an experience that will have a place of value in all the recollections of their after lives. They can say, and tell it to their children and grandchildren, that in the third year of the greatest war that ever desolated this planet—et quorum pars magna fui—that, though not of military age, they had their share in the conflict and worked on the land, doing their help to provision the armies of Canada and the Empire—they—of military age—were where once fighting the battle for home and empire and freedom.

From a duty rests with the farmers of still patriotic good judgment. In view of war and circumstances send boys to do men's work. Farmers should welcome the help of the boys, and treat them as friends in need, as they will be, if farm help is as scarce as it was last summer, when women came to be seen driving mowers, hay rakes, hay tedders, etc. It depends upon the willingness of the boys and the reasonableness of the farmers whether or not school boys in farm work will be an all-round pleasant success.

FOREST WEALTH WASTE.

France and Belgium have taken forestry seriously; and though both countries have been peopled since the days of Julius Cæsar there were in both splendid stands of valuable forest. In the destructive operations of war many of these forests have been destroyed, uprooted or cut and slashed by the effects of explosive shells. We, in Canada, are grateful that we are spared the destruction and waste that war brings to the forests of the countries where the war is waged. We think blindly if we think that. We think it a pity that European forests are smashed, yet in Canada we destroy, or permit the annual destruction of forests to the extent of 200 million dollars by our nearly ten thousand forest fires per year. This is due, in part, to the neglect of the authorities and to the carelessness or crime of tourists and campers who neglect to carefully extinguish their camp fires, or carelessly drop lighted cigarette ends, blazing matches, or live ash from pipes, upon tinder-dry leaves, and start a blaze that may end in the destruction of tens of thousands of dollars' worth of timber, and other property. The effects of a carelessly started fire in forest areas, may be, and is often, felt in the offices of the power producers, the banker, and in the hearts of settlers made homeless. The Canadian Forestry Association has issued a striking picture in colours of the results of carelessness with camp fires, pipes, matches and cigarettes. With a background of blackened forest, we see a ruined settler's family weeping over the charred remains of the little home. With the tourist and camping season close at hand, it seems worth while to urge the practice of the greatest caution in dealing with fires in, or in the vicinity of forests. If by so doing, even one man or boy is influenced to act so as to prevent one forest fire, a tremendous good will have been done, and a tremendous loss avoided. The most of forest fires result from carelessness or indifference that makes men as virtually incendiaries as if they purposely set out a fire in a region where it would speedily get beyond control and destroy thousands of dollars' worth of potential wealth, and perhaps humble but happy homes. Every camper before he sets out for his forest camp should take a solemn vow that he will use the greatest care to avoid committing arson or becoming a great criminal.

AVOIDING MONEY WASTE.

Conservative papers, to whom Dr. Michael Clark, Liberal M. P. for Red Deer, has long been anathema, are lauding him with embarrassing praise because he has protested against pin-pricking criticism of the Government in time of war, when we should all be united. It certainly is a welcome thing to the government and government supporters to be so championed and defended, but there are other considerations of some little moment. The Liberal party in Parliament and throughout the country, is as earnestly interested in seeing that Canada does its full duty in this war as the Government and its supporters. The Liberals in Parliament have shown this interest in practice. They agreed to that necessary thing—a party truce—in regard to war work. In making this possible they became virtually supporters of the Government, and even since the war began they have voted solidly with the Government supporters for all of the immense sums that have been voted for war purposes. In thus co-operating with their Conservative fellow members, the Liberal contingent has assumed joint responsibility in respect of the money voted. Voting money is an easy thing to do—it is the facilis descensus; but, in times of peace, as well as war, the hard thing to do is to get adequate value from its expenditure — hoc labor, hoc opus est. The most pertinent criticism of the Liberals in parliament and outside of it, has been directed, with the patriotic purpose of preventing waste and diversion of the money they so willingly and patriotically voted.

While Liberals share the moral responsibility of voting money, the actual responsibility for its faithful expenditure falls upon the Government, and if the Government fails in this matter either in policy or practice; if it permits the people's money, devoted for war purposes, to be wasted in a way that weakens the efficiency of our soldiers in the field, it falls short of its duty; and Liberals in parliament or elsewhere would, too, fail in duty if they did not seek to prevent this waste—in the only way is their power, by calling attention to it, by criticism. That such criticism was justified has been proved by the results of investigation due to such criticism. If Liberals are to blame for calling attention to irregularities—involving large 'graft'—in connection with the handling of war contracts by the government, surely the Government that carelessly permitted such irregularities and their attendant "stealings," should bear some small share of the blame. The law-officer that procures the punishment of a crime is not quite so culpable as the man who committed the crime.

That the Liberal "criticism" that has been so severely denounced has done good—was in the interests of the country and Empire—is proved by one of the results of the investigation now going on in regard to shell contracts. "Already," it is stated, since the Kyte charges were made, the Shells Committee has made reductions in fuse contracts that will save the Imperial Government something like two million dollars." If it had not been for Liberal "criticism" there would have been no such saving. This and future savings is one of the benefits that will come from an earnest endeavour, no matter how originated, to see that the large moneys voted unanimously by Liberals and Conservatives, are not wasted—that the silver bullet makes a bullseye and not a magpie.

A Minister's Monologue in a Pine Forest

"A pine forest is one of the most beautiful features of nature. Of all quiet scenes it is surely the quietest. The harsh sounds of the busy human world, and even the dreamy murmurs of summer, are hushed there; no song of bird or hum of insect disturbs the solemn stillness; and only at rare intervals the mournful coo of a dove, making the solitude more profound, is heard in the deeper recesses. The weary, care-worn spirit bathes in the serenity of the silence, and feels the charm and refreshment of its highest life. The trunks of the trees have caught the ripened red of many vanished summers, and are bearded with long streaming tufts of grey lichen, which impart to them a weird, savage appearance; but they are touched with grace by the wild flowers growing in unconscious loveliness at the feet of old age. They form long drawn aisles and vistas, like the pillared halls of Karnak, or the Thousand Columns of Constantinople, which are indescribably attractive, for they appeal to that love of mystery, which exists in every mind; they reveal only enough to stimulate the imagination, and lead it onward to lovelier scenes beyond. Life itself without these vistas of expectation would not be worth living.

Beautiful indeed is the pine forest in all seasons; in the freshness of spring, when the gnarled boughs are penetrated and mollified by the soft wind and the warm sun, and, thrilled with new life, burst out into fringes and tassels of the richest green, and cones of the tenderest purple; beautiful in the sultry summer, when among its cool, dim shadows the cheerful hours all day sing vespers, while the open landscape is palpitating in the scorching heat; beautiful in the sadness of autumn when its unfading verdure stands out in striking relief amid changing scenes, that have no sympathy with anything earthly save sorrow and decay, and directs the thoughts to the imperishableness of the heavenly Paradise; beautiful exceedingly in the depth of winter, when the tiers of branches are covered with pure, unsullied wreaths of snow, sculptured by the winds into curve of exquisite grace.

It is beautiful in calm, when the tree tops scarcely whisper to each other, and the twitter of the golden wren sounds loud in the expectant hush; it is more than beautiful in storm, when the wild fingers of the wind play the most mournful music on its great harp-strings, and its full diapason is sublime as the roar of the ocean on a rock bound shore."—(From "Teachings in Nature," by Rev. Hugh MacMillan.)

The beef idea is beginning to take hold in the East and beef herds are increasing in numbers.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE FUNDS OF 93rd BATTALION

Mrs. Jarley's Waxworks upon which the public of Peterborough are to be permitted to gaze on Friday evening in the Collegiate Hall are very busy practising.

It is simply marvellous how life-like these figures are and difficult to believe that they are merely wax.

When one considers the enormous sum which must have been expended upon them to attain this perfection and the delicate and intricate mechanism of each figure which enables it to perform wonderful feats, one cannot but marvel at the reality of it all. Come on Friday evening and be introduced to Mrs. Vernon Castle, the one and only Charlie Chaplin, Pygmalion and Galatea an dmany other ancient and modern friends. In the Chamber of Horrors you can view Bluebeard and his six wives or rather their heads. The entire proceeds are for the 93rd Battalion.

How to Get It Back.

"I've lost a wallet containing $600," said Mr. Baker excitedly to a friend. "How much reward shall I offer for its return?"

"Where did you lose it?" asked the friend.

"In New York City."

"Well, if you want it back," said the friend, "you'll have to offer at least $700 reward."

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Best Part of Ottawa Ball Club Goes With Shag To Warren

Baseball fans will be interested to learn that Pete Powers and Frank Smykal, who were with Chattanooga on trial this spring and failed to make the grade, have accepted terms to play with the Warren club of the Inter-State League, of which Frank Shaughnessy is manager. According to the box scores in the St. Louis Sporting News, both Smykal and Powers had creditable records while with Chattanooga. Smykal looked brilliantly, but was weak with the stick. Powers was used behind the bat and had very few runs stolen on him. He hit above the average. Chattanooga struck a losing slump that worked against the ex-Ottawa boys, Manager Elberfield casting them aside for more experienced material. At Warren Shag will also have Dusty Bullock and Lou Peterson.

Shaughnessy is leaving to-night for Warren, Pa., and will take Frank "Cozy" Dolan with him. He has three or four other former Canadian leagues, including Red Armstrong, with Hamilton last year; Buster Burrill of Brantford, leading batter of the league, and hopes to land both Paddy Dougherty, the Hamilton port-sider, and George Dunlop, the Brantford shortstop. Shag will have the pick of the men left over from last year's Warren club, and should present a strong line-up.

Artie Schwind, back at short for Beaumont, Texas, appears to be going very well. Lefty Smithson, with London last year, pitched his first game for the same club last week, letting San Antonio down with four hits. He walked seven men, however, and two runs were scored against him. If Ed. Renfer is with Dallas this year, he hasn't yet taken his turn on the slab.

Jack Mitchell, Ottawa's crack shortstop in 1914, is playing the short field for Terre Haute in the Central League. Frank Gygli, who held down the initial sack for Erie two years ago, is first baseman for the same club.

PUBLIC SCHOOL BASEBALL LEAGUE

Queen Mary School Winners in Yesterday's Game

The junior baseball teams of the Queen Alexandria and Queen Mary schools clashed yesterday afternoon on the grounds of the Queen Mary School. The ball tossers for the Queen Mary School grabbed the long end of the score, which was 8-6, after a closely contested game.

The batteries were as follows:
Queen Mary School — Baraclough and Hamilton.
Queen Alexandria School—Nicholls and Jordan.
Frank Jobbett handled the whistle.

BASEBALL.

The Central Junior team won easily yesterday evening from the South Central team by a score of 37-1. The battery for the former team was Bergoine and McGill, and for the latter Madill and Fuller and Walton. Mr. Fred McNeilly umpired very satisfactorily.

Mr. Ackerman felt that the present building was a valuable one and with certain improvements could be adequately equipped.

Dr. Neal mentioned the present objectionable conditions, lighting, heating, ventilation and plumbing.

Mr. Crane considered it advisable to first wait upon the Council.

The Board is unanimous in regard to the exigent repairs that should be made. They have yet to decide whether these shall be extensive or only the most urgent.

Dr. Neal touched upon a salient point when he remarked that the ratepayers in that school district have a right to demand buildings as modern as the others in the city, although [illegible] circumstances they can [illegible] provation is exercised, [illegible] 000.

PAINT TWO BUILDINGS

Mr. Gordon moved, seconded by Mr. Eastwood that the tender for the painting of the Collegiate Institute and King Edward School be let to Hughson Johnstone, the lowest tender upon his entering into an agreement prepared by the solicitor.

This motion grew out of Mr. McGrath's counsel that the Board set out definite specifications of the materials and quantities of them, to be used.

The Property Committee was authorized to make necessary repairs to the schools during the holidays. About $800 will be expended, and this is the irreducible minimum.

Mr. Gordon moved, seconded by Dr. Burnham that the Board's coal purchase be left to the Property Committee with power to act.

WHAT SEAL STEAK TASTES LIKE

In the Antarctic there is not the immense variety of game which is to be found in the North Polar regions, but on the other hand it is very abundant and can be turned into food with the smallest exertion. The Weddell seal, which sometimes weighs as much as half a ton, allows itself to be killed and cut up with [illegible] ease. Its natural enemies are in the water, and for long generations it has been accustomed to bask in the sun undisturbed. Seal steak is an acquired taste, but when acquired explorers prefer it to the tinned provisions. It is a common assumption that seals' flesh tastes of train oil. That is a mistake: the flesh itself contains no fat but it is extremely rich in blood and in taste suggests the Scottish delicacy known as the black pudding.—London Chronicle.

Searchers Swarm Vessel

REPORTS OF MORE PLOTTING CAUSES DESCENT ON HOBOKEN BY NEUTRALITY SQUAD.

New York, April 27.—The reports that certain officers aboard the German steamships in Hoboken were in a vengeful mood against the United States because of the arrest of four of their number on board the Friedrich der Grosse, were attributed by many persons in Hoboken to the fact that an unusual search of the vessel was made for twelve hours yesterday.

The largest number of inspectors connected with the Neutrality Squad of the Custom House ever seen in Hoboken arrived just before 9 o'clock aboard the revenue cutter Calumet. They reported to E. R. Norwood, the Deputy Surveyor. Half an hour later the men were divided into six squads and two vessels were assigned to each set of twenty men. There are twelve German steamships now in Hoboken.

One sailor is reported to have asserted that the larger of the steamships were to be blown up in the event of war. Others had heard that officers of the vessels were scheming to take the vessels out as far as the Narrows, and sink them there to block the harbor.

In view of the fact that a bomb casing plant was discovered on board the Friedrich der Grosse and that it has been alleged that five men of that vessel were implicated in the plot the Neutrality Squad wants to see that nothing else of that kind is going on aboard the other vessels.

No information concerning what the inspectors did aboard the vessels could be obtained.

UNCLE JOE'S CIGAR SECRET

Wrong End of Smoke Lighted by the Veteran Congressman.

[illegible] that it took [illegible] Cannon, who, as many [illegible] is an inveterate smoker, says the Louisville Courier-Journal. "If you want to get the most out of a cigar, light the 'wrong end.' Any man who smokes cigars to any great extent will tell you that he gets more real enjoyment out of the last inch of his cigar. Now my plan is to light the last half first and get to the best part of the smoke as soon as you can. Of course, you have to snip off the end that is supposed to go in your mouth before you can light the cigar, but if you try my plan you won't ever go back to the old-fashioned way, unless I'm badly mistaken."

A Complete Review of The Happenings During Irish Revolts

DUBLIN, May 1. — A return to normal conditions is being accomplished gradually in Dublin, and it is now possible to give the first complete account of the happenings of the last week, in the light of information obtained from authoritative sources.

What occurred was as follows: Monday—The first move was a dash by members of the Sinn Fein into the General Postoffice. Many of these men were in the uniform of the Irish Volunteers, a body formed at the time men of Ulster organized against granting Home Rule to Ireland. The party worked quietly, compelling all officials to quit their posts while they cut all telegraphic communication, and posted sentinels at the doors and windows.

Several Officers Shot.

Soon afterwards firing opened in the neighbouring streets; the rebels immediately shot down any man in khaki. Several officers and men of the regular army thus fell.

The authorities prepared at first to deal with the uprising, and ordered the police and soldiers to retire at once to their quarters, none of them being armed. In the meantime the rebels seized other points in the city. They established themselves at the City Hall, Liberty Hall and St. Stephen's Green, and also occupied many houses in Sackville street and the side streets leading to it. Their sentries patrolled blocks in the centre of the city and sharpshooters took up positions on the roofs and at the windows of houses. An attempt was made to seize Dublin Castle, but the little guard of Royal Irish Constabulary and soldiers prevented the rebels from getting beyond the gate, at which they killed the policeman on duty.

Forget the Telephone.

The authorities were powerless with the forces at their disposal. The rebels, however, had failed to seize the telephone exchange, and the authorities were able to send a call to the military officers at Camp Curragh, thirty miles away, and a considerable body of troops was immediately despatched to the capital.

Tuesday — The rebels apparently had increased in numbers and spread in small parties about the city. Sniping was fairly prevalent in all quarters of Dublin throughout the day, and numbers of casualties occurred among soldiers, rebels and civilians particularly the latter, who failed to grasp the seriousness of the situation.

An effort was undertaken to turn the rebels out of their strongholds, as [illegible] artillery on hand was [illegible] and the [illegible] military in London had been communicated with and within a short time a large body of troops was on the way to cope with the rebellion.

Draw Cordon Around City.

Wednesday—The authorities formed a plan to deal with the situation, and began making dispositions of troops drawing a large cordon of men around the city and other smaller cordons around Sackville Street, St Stephen's Green and the Four Courts. These movements of troops led to much fighting and bloodshed. Sniping became general throughout the city, and it was dangerous to walk even a few steps in the open or to sit at a window.

By Wednesday evening the two parties of combatants and the areas they occupied were more or less accurately defined. The Sinn Feiners would not allow anyone to pass without the written authority of their chiefs, and the military, on their side, proclaimed martial law and restricted the movements of civilians.

During the course of the day a gun boat came up the River Liffey, fired several shells into Liberty Hall which was occupied by a number of rebel officers, and soon demolished it. The cordons of troops gradually drew tighter around the rebel forts, and the firing became faster and more furious.

Under Hail of Bullets.

Thursday—By this time the city was under a veritable hail of bullets, and the small-shot fusillades became a continuous roar. The Associated Press correspondent, with several other newspapermen, passed along the custom house quay by the north wall and thence over the circular road, with bullets striking the walls and the ground all around. The rebels in some force had taken a position in a flour mill on the south side from which they harried the troops on the north side until the authorities decided to use artillery to dislodge them. A dozen shells did the work, and the rebels retired to a disused distillery farther south.

Later in the day a naval gun and field artillery bombarded this point. Forty-eight shells were fired, and every one hit the distillery, but a flag-staff, over which floated a green rebel flag, was not shot away, and it hung over the side of the building, even after the rebels had evacuated the structure.

Snipers Very Troublesome.

Friday — Sniping by rebel sharpshooters had become so prevalent that it was decided to shell the post office and houses in its neighbourhood. Eight shells had been fired into the Young Men's Christian Association building, two into the Catholic Club and two into the post office, when a cessation of the cannonade was ordered by a superior officer as some houses had caught fire, and it was feared the entire city might be placed in peril. Additional fresh troops had arrived and the cordons were further tightened, although this was accompanied by much fighting of a particularly dangerous type, every shot in the streets being in the danger zone.

The rebels started fires in several places in the hope, it was reported, of the flames reaching the castle. On Friday night the sky for miles around was illuminated, and flames shot up from many points. The green rebel flag that flew over the post-office was sharply outlined by the glow. Rebels were seen walking on the roof, from which flames later increased in intensity the already brilliant light enveloping that part of the city. The rebels finally retired to the Coliseum.

Leaders are Wounded.

Saturday—The announcement was made that the leaders of the revolt had requested that they be allowed to surrender unconditionally, as their Commander-in-Chief, J. H. Pearce, had been wounded in the leg, and it was reported that James Connolly, commander of the rebel troops, had received a severe wound. How many of the rebels surrendered to the military with their leaders was not learned on this day, but their action brought about an immediate diminution of sniping, and the city became comparatively quiet. Only two areas remained in possession of the rebels at night and it was clearly seen that the military were forcing them into an ever-narrowing circle which would eventually bring about [illegible]

Isolated parties of snipers still continued to pot at the troops, being evidently unaware of the capture of their leaders. The Associated Press representative made two long tours through the city in order to obtain an idea of the sentiments of the population regarding the rebellion. Some men, chiefly of the transport workers class, were sullen, evidently having expected greater results from the movement, which had been in preparation for a long time. Most of the population, however, expressed indignation at the outbreak, which they considered the work of fanatics, and as never having had a chance of permanent success.

Final Collapse Sunday.

Sunday—The final collapse of the rebellion came on this day, the main body of the rebels in Dublin surrendering during the course of the day beginning in the morning when those in the College of Surgeons gave themselves up, one of whom was the Countess Markievicz, said to be one of the leading spirits of the revolt. In a proclamation issued by J. H. Pearse, as "Provisional President," the surrender of the rebels was advised as the members of the Provisional Government had agreed to unconditional surrender "in order to prevent further slaughter of unarmed people and in the hope of saving the lives of our followers, who are surrounded and hopelessly outnumbered." Outside of Dublin, however, fighting continued at some points, but messages were sent from the leaders in Dublin carrying the news that the movement had collapsed and ordering the various rebel bodies to surrender.

Monday — Today came the news that all the rebel leaders had surrendered, and that the total number of prisoners taken the day previous in Dublin had reached 1,000. The transportation of captured rebels to England was in full swing, and it became known that nearly 500 of them had been sent across the Channel. There was further submission of bodies outside the city, notably of the Enniscorthy rebels, who had been holding out persistently, but who were announced to have unconditionally surrendered.

Peaceable People Go Hungry.

Reverting to the beginning of the outbreak, it is known that the authorities, although fully recognizing its seriousness, were certain from the first moment that the rebels would be suppressed in areas in a very short time after the first surprise. Lord Wimbourne, the Lord-Lieutenant, expressing confidence of this from the start. The greatest sufferers from the disturbance were the hundreds of thousands of peaceable citizens, men, women and children, who were compelled to remain indoors and were unable to obtain sufficient food, although there were ample stores in the city. The authorities early began organizing relief for these people and on Friday and Saturday and Sunday they were escorted in groups to provision depots, where large supplies were handed out.

By Saturday night Dublin had resumed almost its normal aspect, except for a number of smouldering fires. The stores had not yet opened, but the street lights were turned on, and in view of the events of the week that had passed, it was interesting to reread the motto of the city on each lamp, which in Latin says: "When citizens are obedient peace reigns in the city."

The Dublin soldiers and the Irish regiments in the garrisons of Dublin who bore the brunt of the first day's outbreak expressed great indignation over the uprising, occurring as it did at a time when the British Empire was fighting a great war. Some expressed regret that English regiments had been brought over to suppress the disturbances, as they thought the English soldiers were inclined to treat the rebels too leniently.

Ford
Average first year depreciation of the Ford car is $125 as against $250 to $400 for practically any of the lower priced cars
It is difficult to set any definite figure for the depreciation of an automobile. So much depends on the condition of the individual car at the end of the season.
The average price paid for used cars in the $1000-or-less class at any time during the first year is about $250 to $400 less than the first cost. But the average used Ford sells very quickly for $125 less than the purchase price.
Compare the Ford depreciation cost of about $10 a month with the probable $30 or more a month that the other kind will cost you. Which is the better investment?

A SPECIAL GOSSARD CORSET

FOR THE SHORT SLENDER FIGURE

MORE difficult than all others to fit correctly and comfortably is this type. The small woman is chic, mainly because of her corset. Her slenderness is over half of her charm, yet the absence of a smooth hip line and rightly proportioned waist or a slightly protruding lower back ruins the appearance. Soft batiste & silk materials—few bones most skillfully placed, and the cleverest designing have made Gossard Specials for this type. A genuine blessing to the small slender woman.

33 Children Physically Unfit, 15 Tubercular, Is Opinion of School Nurse

Miss Kennedy Bases Her Report on Appearances of Children in Specially Requested Estimate to Board of Education—Appear Underfed, Under Weight and Under Size.

In her report to the Board of Education of her April work, Miss E. P. Kennedy, school nurse, at the suggestion of Dr. Neal, touched upon a subject that is gradually forcing itself before the consideration of the Board. This is the question of physically defective children.

Miss Kennedy's opinion is expressed in the following statement:

Number of inspections	508
Inspections for scarlet fever	150
Swabs taken for diphtheria	12
Homes visited	87

One death occurred from diphtheria and one case of scarlet fever at a home from which children were attending. Under the direction of the Medical Officer of Health swabs were taken from pupils suspected of diphtheria and in the other case inspections were made for scarlet fever rash.

At your request I submit the number of pupils who appear to be physically unfit to attend school.

Owing to the particularly busy month at school it was impossible to get the entire number.

The number apparently underfed undersize and under-weight is 35.

A number of these children came from poorly-kept homes, and in some cases, food is not sufficient for school-attending children, especially delicate children who require proper nourishment.

There also are a number of these children suffering apparently from greatly enlarged tonsils and adenoids. In such cases medical attention was advised.

Number of pupils apparently with tubercular infection, 15.

These children are anaemic, tire easily, susceptible to colds; some have swollen neck glands.

Upon medical examination most of these children were found with weak lungs, but in some cases, physicians said they would outgrow the trouble if proper care were taken.

At present there are three children confined to bed, with temperature and under doctor's care.

The above report was received, but it may be taken for granted that before long the condition referred to among certain children, the attention and special care they require, will be an additional problem for the Board to handle.

STORAGE FOR YOUR FURS

Necessary For Their Health and Good Looks

The life of furs depends on the care they get during the hot weather. For though you may keep them safely from moth in your cedar chests or moth bags, a very real danger lies in the fact that the warmth of the Summer months may dry the skins. And when the natural oil is lost, the pelts begin to decay and the fur loses its lustre and falls out. This, of course, can be avoided by placing your furs in storage. In our suitable Dry Air Vaults, which are kept at a temperature all the Summer, they may be kept in their natural condition. Here they are properly cared for, each garment being thoroughly beaten and combed before being hung on its own little hanger, free from dust and moths, safe from fire and burglary. Barrie's, Limited, have a complete storage system to offer at a trifling cost. The charge is very moderate, being only 3 per cent. of a fair valuation. Furs to be remodelled are stored free of charge, and the summer time is a better time to have them remodelled or repaired. Having the advance season's styles Barrie's can remodel your garments true to the coming fashion.

Board of Education's Condolence to Wife Of Former Member

At the Board of Education meeting last night Mr. G. N. Gordon moved seconded by Mr. V. Eastwood, that the Secretary of the Board be instructed to prepare a resolution of condolence to be sent to Mrs. J. R. Stratton, by reason of the fact that the late Hon. J. R. Stratton had been a prominent public-spirited citizen and had been a member of the Board of Education; also that the sympathy of the Board be extended to the members of the late Mr. Stratton's family.

In seconding the motion Mr. Eastwood referred to the interest the late Mr. Stratton had shown in the affairs of the Board, the courtesies he had extended the members, and the thoughtfulness he had manifested in forwarding maps and books for use in the schools.

Light food of a laxative nature should be used for the cow shortly before calving.

The report was adopted on motion of Mr. Eastwood seconded by Dr. Burnham.

Mr. Gordon moved that any bills relating to insurance be not paid.

Mr. Eastwood explained that the several accounts in question were for insurance that had been renewed prior to the judicial decision of January 16 last.

On that statement, Mr. Gordon withdrew his opposition.

SLIGHTLY CONTENTIOUS

Mr. Crane moved, seconded by Mr. McGrath that the supervision committee be authorized to advertise for tenders for text-books and supplies and also for Collegiate Institute supplies for the ensuing year with power to award the contract."

Secretary Thompson informed Mr. Gordon that the contract involved about $5,000.

"Why delegate it to a committee Mr. Gordon asked, remarking that this was a considerable amount to be decided upon by a committee. He moved in amendment that the committee report to the Board which would award the contract.

Mr. Crane—It's ridiculous. It means a great deal of work to go through all that contract.

Dr. Burnham moved that the entire matter be referred to the whole Board thus completely taking the matter from the Committee.

Mr. Crane reminded Mr. Gordon of the latter's presence on the Supervision Committee stating that he could have an eye on the awarding of the contract.

"That's not the reason at all," retorted Mr. Gordon.

"It seems to me too large a sum to be left to a committee" There was no other motion behind his suggestion he added.

There was no seconder to either Mr. Gordon's or Dr. Burnham's amendments and the motion was adpted.

WANTS ORDER OF SOLICITOR RE MR. F. BARTLETT'S CLAIM

Mr. F. Bartlett's claim of $1294.17 against the Board of Education in connection with his services as architect of the King George and Queen Mary Schools was again before the Board of Education, last night. A letter from Mr. Daniel O'Connell refused the Board's offer made some time ago and asked that the account be further considered.

Mr. Bartlett's statement of claim was as follows:

3 3-5 per cent. on $89,888.40 (cost of building)	$3,233.42
5 per cent. on $3,207.22 (cost of walks and grading)	160.75
	$3,394.17
Received on account	2,100.00
Balance due	$1,294.17

Mr. Eastwood explained that the Board had made his offer following a conference with its solicitor, Mr. E. A. Peak, and based on his opinion. As a further precautionary measure Mr. Gordon moved that Mr. Peak be asked to give in writing his opinion as to the liability of the Board to Mr. Bartlett, and that the Chairman be authorized to take whatever steps were recommended by the Board's Solicitor. Mr. Eastwood seconded the motion, which carried.

CHIEF HAS HORSE ON HIS HANDS

LINDSAY, May 3—Chief Short is in a quandary. He has a horse on his hands, and is at a loss to know what to do with it. The animal was left outside a barn on Cambridge street south some days ago and was taken in charge by the Chief and placed in the Butler House stables. A request was made through the press for the owner to come forward and pay for the animal's keep and take it away. The owner has failed to turn up, and Chief Short will interview the Town Solicitor as to his future course of action.

Elizabeth Spencer

Miss Elisabeth Spencer, the popular mezzo soprano, will be heard at the Collegiate Hall to-night, when she will be introduced by Mr. John Allan, President of the Peterborough Choral Society.

The affair will be a private hearing to which some of the musicians and music lovers this city, have received special cards of introduction.

Miss Spencer is rapidly becoming very popular on the concert stage because of her sound musicianship and remarkable voice.

Her voice probably has unusual range and is properly placed in all registers. Educated by the best European masters, Miss Spencer has become a great favourite in New York where she is well and favourably known.

EARL ST. ALDWYN DIES AFTER HIS SON

Heir of Statesman Famous as Sir Michael Hicks-Beach Was Killed Last Week.

LONDON, May 2—Earl St. Aldwyn, the veteran statesman, who entered Parliament as Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, and became one of the most powerful politicians of the British Empire while bearing that name, died at his country home, Cole St. Aldwyn, Fairford, Gloucestershire, in his eightieth year. He served as Chancellor of the Exchequer and Chief Secretary for Ireland, both of which offices he held for two terms, and he gave to his country his only son and heir, Viscount Quenington, who was killed on the battlefield in France last week.

First Year of Its Organization Shows Splendid Results

Annual Meeting of the Women's Patriotic League of Ashburnham Held Yesterday Afternoon—Treasurer's Report Shows Substantial Balance—Officers Re-elected.

The first annual meeting of the Women's Patriotic League of Ashburnham was held yesterday afternoon when a large number of the members was present. The president Mrs. T. H. Adams was in the chair and the reports of the Secretary and Treasurer were received. As shown by the Secretary's report, this society has done much for the "Canadian Red Cross, as well as supplying funds for various other deserving causes, arising out of the war, such as Prisoners of War and Belgian and Serbian relief.

The officers of the past year were all re-elected. Mrs. Albert Fowler was appointed to assist the treasurer and Mrs. W. H. Pretty will continue to have charge of the cent a day club. The financial statement of the Society showed a substantial balance of $334.74 in the treasury.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

The Secretary's first annual report of the Women's Patriotic League of Ashburnham.

The League was organized in May, 1915, as a result of the efforts of Mrs. R. H. Parsons and Mrs. F. H. Adams. The following officers were elected:

Hon. President—Mrs. R. B. Rogers
President—Mrs. T. H. Adams.
1st Vice-President—Mrs. R. H. Parsons.
2nd Vice-President — Mrs. J. C. Sullivan.
Recording-Secretary—Mrs. J. H. Smith.
Corresponding-Secretary — Miss Dover, and later Miss A. Erskine.
Treasurer—Miss Scott.
Convenor of Sewing Room—Mrs. Nelson, later Mrs. J. Butcher.
Convenor of Surgical Work—Mrs. G. McCartney.
Convenor of Yarn and Socks—Mrs. Sam Taylor.

The School Board kindly loaned the League two rooms in the King George School to work in, which were greatly appreciated. Tables to fix up the work rooms were loaned by Miss Calcutt, Mr. A. Comstock, Mr. J. A. McKone, St. Luke's Church and Mark St. Ladies' Aid. Machines and chairs were supplied by members of the League.

Business meetings were held the first Tuesday of each month, and the work rooms were open every Tuesday and Wednesday afternoon during the year for workers.

The Society received a financial start from Judge Huycke, Mr. R. B. Rogers, Rev. Mr. White and Dean McColl.

Mrs. Ryerson-Ritchie kindly offered to get up a concert for the benefit of the League, which was gratefully accepted and later held in the Ashburnham Hall, and was a great success.

Mrs. R. B. Rogers presented the Society with six bandage rollers.

Mother Antoinette donated 100 yards gauze.

Donations of cotton were received from Mrs. D. Lundy, Mrs. R. Lundy, Mrs. J. Kerr and Mrs. Quinn.

Donations of gum and cigarettes were received from Miss Dover and gum from Mr. J. Kerr.

Mrs. Dover presented a chair to the League to be disposed of, and Mrs. C. H. Moore a cushion.

The League buyers, Mrs. McCartney, Mrs. Craig, Mrs. Gaskins and Mrs. Taylor, have bought to the best advantage for their departments, and the thanks of the League is due these ladies for their excellent work.

The Society depends entirely on voluntary offerings. The members and their friends giving as they were able.

This source of income was supplemented by the returns of The One-Cent-a-Day Club, which was organized and managed by Mrs. Pretty. Much credit is due Mrs. Pretty and her assistants for the splendid work they have done since the club was organized.

In October the city was canvassed for old papers and magazines, and the proceeds from the use of motor greatly increased the funds considerably. The Society sent 80 boxes of Christmas Cheer to the Ashburnham boys who had gone overseas. The boxes contained writing pad and pencil, 2 candles, 1 package gum, 2 bars nut chocolate, 2 large tins O.K.O., 1 lb. of Christmas cake, 2 pieces short bread, 1 handkerchief, pair of socks, cake of soap, cards and mouth organs.

Two pairs of socks have been given to all Ashburnham boys when leaving for overseas.

The Society had a social hour after work on Wednesday, Nov. 10th, and February 9th. A good programme and light refreshments were served. A collection was taken at the door. A tea and social hour was held at Miss Scott's in March, and the following week a skating party and social hour was held at the Mark St. Boys' Club Rink and the home of Mrs. Frank Whitehouse.

During the year the League have forwarded the following articles to the Red Cross through the Montreal Branch, but in future we are forwarding through the local Red Cross.

Donations of money to the Prisoners' Fund, Serbian Relief Fund and Belgian Relief.

The League has adopted Heber Rogers who is a prisoner in Germany.

During the year the ladies of Ashburnham have nobly responded to the call for financial help and workers.

The need for the League was great when we first organized, but far greater now, and it is to be hoped that each lady will feel her responsibility and not weary in well-doing.

The Society has room for many more workers, and would like each member to put forth a special effort and not lose interest and discontinue her help. It is the very least one can do when one thinks of the boys who are giving their all in freedom's cause.

The League desires to, thank all those who have been of assistance during the year not forgetting the kindness of the Press, who have always been courteous and kind, and helped us in any and every way they could.

AGNES D. SMITH,
Rec.-Sec.

All the officers were unanimously re-elected.

RECORD IN FLYING WITH PASSENGE

NEW YORK, May 1.—De Lloyd Thompson establishes a new world record for one mile flight with a passenger in an aeroplane yesterday at Hempstead, L.I., when he flew a mile in thirty three and one-fifth seconds according to an announcement made by Walter Wellman. The previous record for the same distance, when the aviator carried a passenger, was held by Glenn L. Martin. His record was thirty six and three-fifths seconds.

Mr. Thompson is one of the best passenger carried by Mr. Thompson during his flight yesterday.

Mr. Thompson is one of the best known of the American aviators. He is the holder of experts' certificate No. 8, which was issued to him in 1912.

CIRCLES ABOVE LOWER MANHATTAN.

Philip Bjorklund, an aviator, circled above the lower portion of Manhattan and Governor's Island yesterday afternoon while trying out a new 90 horse power Curtiss aeroplane, so that the government officials could see it flight. With him as a passenger was an army officer.

Large crowds in Wall, Nassau, William and Beaver streets, as well as in other portions of the downtown district, watched him while he was in flight.

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY CHANGES BOARD PAYMENT

Mr. and Mrs. Henry to Receive a Salary Instead of Weekly Sum Per Child For Their Board—Cost of Living Increases Expenditure at the Shelter

At a meeting of the Children's Aid Society yesterday afternoon it was decided to make a change in the system of paying for the children at the Shelter. Heretofore, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Henry have been paid a certain sum per week for boarding the children. The society made enquiries as to the practice in this respect followed in other towns, and upon this enquiry decided to pay all the expenses of the Shelter in the usual way, and to pay Mr. and Mrs. Henry a regular salary for their services.

In this connection it is interesting to note that the cost of boarding the children at the local Shelter has been steadily increasing, parralleling the general advances in the cost of living.

In 1913 the board account amounted to $69.11 per year; in 1914 it was $111.64, and last year it had increased to $168.91. Another feature dealing with the society's increased burdens is the average of 1 9inmate wards a day last year. This is reported considerably higher than in previous years.

Rev. Father Phelan and Mr. G. Walter Green were appointed to the executive yesterday. Mr. W. H. Dunford's resignation was received, and Father Phelan was appointed vice-president succeeding him.

The Y. W. C. A. Gymnasium Closing Was a Great Success

The closing exercises of the Y.W.C.A. gymnasium classes, held last evening in the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium, taxed the seating accommodation of this hall, and judging from the applause that greeted the various numbers of the programme, the audience was well pleased with the entertainment provided. Miss Caroline Littlefield, physical directress, must have felt greatly encouraged by the successful conclusion of her first year's work in Peterborough. Miss Littlefield took over this department of the "Y" last fall, and the calibre of the work shown by the senior, intermediates and junior classes last night was an evidence of how painstakingly Miss Littlefield has trained her pupils.

The programme was a varied one and consisted of wand and rhythmic exercises, club swinging and folk dancing. The evening opened with a grand march by the combined classes, carrying flags. It was very prettily done, and was followed by wand exercises by the seniors. In this as in the club swinging the several difficult movements were carried out with perfect precision and ease. The folk dancing by the little girls was one of the most pleasing features of the evening, and the performance of the bunnies and croakers (also the juniors) caused great merriment.

The "Irish jig" by eight intermediate girls in attractive white dresses, bedecked with Irish shamrocks was well executed and won well merited applause.

The "Highland Schottische" by the seniors and intermediates in Scotch plaids and tam o' shanters, delighted all present. The neat manner in which they danced the difficult steps of the Highland Fling was favourably commented upon. Other numbers by these young ladies were the Russian dance and the Spanish waltz. The pretty and appropriate costumes worn by them in these two dances, combined with their graceful, easy movements lent colour and animation to an altogether attractive scene.

A vocal solo by Mr. Newton Staples was very much enjoyed and an encore demanded. Miss Edwina Palmer also gave a violin solo that was well received. Miss Gwen Smith acted throughout the evening as accompanist.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P. spoke a few words of commendation and congratulation to the different classes and particularly to Miss Littlefield for the good work she had accomplished.

Miss Littlefield was the recipient of a handsome basket of flowers and also a boquet of pink roses.

The exercises will be repeated on Thursday evening when another large audience should be in attendance.

Easter Service of The Russians Held Behind The Trenches

At the Front with the Russian Army, April 23 (by Courier to Petrograd and via London, Wednesday, May 3.—Under a small tent, dimly lighted by candles, a mile from the firing line, the Russian Pope conducted midnight Easter service to the accompaniment of occasional cannon shots and the intermittent glare of Austrian Rockets.

It rained, and the solemn-faced soldiers who stood with bowed heads before the improvised altar were drenched. The green and gold robe of the churchman contrasted strangely with the dun uniforms and the black and white gowns of a dozen Sisters of Mercy, who stood huddled in the doorway of an adjacent cottage.

Around the Pope's neck was suspended a crucifix upon a St. George ribbon awarded for service on the battlefield. Now and then the chanted words in the service were partly drowned by splashing, groaning guns and ammunition carts lumbering past through the heavy mud, but even the teamsters seemed impressed by the solemnity of the hour and urged on their struggling beasts in subdued tones.

Six rough soldiers composed the choir which assisted in the service, their voices blending with the rising and falling tones of the Pope. All the evening Austrian rockets, greater in number than usual, pierced the darkness.

Out in the trenches each little group of soldiers had a separate celebration of the greatest of all Russian holidays. The lights from their candles evidently aroused the suspicions of their enemies, and the trenches, as far as the eye could reach, fell under the glare of calcium bombs.

Finally, under the dripping teut, the Pope turned to the rain soaked troopers, elevated the crucifix and shouted: "Christ has risen."

A number of responses ran along the line and was echoed by the white faced sisters: "He has indeed risen."

BOTH DUMB AND DEAF, LAUGH RESTORED HIM

NEW YORK, May 2.—Corporal Robert Beck formerly a Chicago chauffeur and until recently in Kitchener's army, who recovered his speech and hearing lost in Flanders by a bullet from a German sniper by laughing at a moving picture comedy in England arrived from Liverpool on the Orduna Friday and left last night for Chicago.

Honourably discharged from the army on account of wounds, he will go back to his home, No. 221 South Racine avenue, Chicago, and his old job, and hopes soon to save money enough to spend for his young bride, whom he met on a recruiting rally in England and married three days later.

"On May, 26, 1915, ten kilometers from Dixmunde, where I was a despatch rider," he said yesterday. "I was humming along the road toward Haasbrouck when a sniper got me between the shoulder blades. I came to in a hospital at Boulonge, my speech and hearing gone. Later, convalescing in Maghull Military Hospital near Liverpool, and still unable to speak or hear, I went with a lot of other wounded soldiers to a matinee of the Aintree Palace Picture Theatre. I saw a comical fellow come out on the screen, but try my best I couldn't laugh at him.

"All of a sudden both my ears seemed to break open with my effort to laugh or speak. I was as if a couple of Jack Johnstons had burst near me. I was dazed for a minute, but, discovering that I could hear a train going by, I made an exclamation and found I could speak. Then I got up and shouted for joy.

"When my pals discovered I could hear ad speak they joined in shouting their glee, and the manager turned on the lights to see who was making a row. The boddies were called by somebody down stairs who thought it was a fight. Three of them jumped on us soldiers and there was a fine free-for-all before they found what we were celebrating."

Being a veteran of the Boer War Beck applied to the British Consul in Chicago when the war broke out, and was sent to London, where he enlisted as a despatch rider. He was in the battles of the Aisne, La Basse, Neuve Chapelle and the first and second battles of Ypres and the hottest engagements along the Flanders front.

When King George pinned the distinguished conduct medal on Beck for saving a wounded officer under fire by carrying him off the field on his back, the King, learning he was originally from Cork, said, "Now, don't you and Michael O'Leary, V. C. and the other Corkonians, try to whip the whole German army, or we poor English won't have anything left to do."

Beck has also the Queen Victoria medal for gallantry on the Cape Mounted Police while fighting Zulus, and the King Edward medal for gallantry at the battle of Paardeberg, where Kronje was captured in the Boer War.

EDITOR SHARPLY CRITICIZES 'EXTORTIONISTS' FOR SHOCKING PRICES OF NECESSARIES OF LIFE.

BERLIN, via LONDON, May 3.—Mr. Eugen Zimmerman, general director of the Lokalanseiger, publishes to-day in his newspaper a strong attack on "extortionists" in provisions. tack on "extortionists" in provision. He declares they are conducting "the dirtiest business ever done" and criticises of the State's organisation.

Mr. Zimmerman's article follows a number of similar attacks in the last few days, in which "the unjustified and shocking increased prices of the necessaies of life" wee pointed out, as well as "the material damage they do to Germans and the false ideas of starvation and of economic weakness they awaken abroad."

Cold and Hunger Took Ship's Crew

HALIFAX, N. S., May 3.—News of the fate which befell captain and crew of the British steamer Suffolk in the White Sea has reached Halifax. Only three of a crew of twenty-seven survived to tell of the hardships they endured. Those of the crew who did not kill themselves while in a state of despondency caused by great sufferings, were frozen to death in an effort to reach land eighty miles from the vessel.

The story of the fate of the captain and 24 members of the crew who perished was told by the members of the Newfoundland steamer Bellaventure who returned to Halifax yesterday. They left Newfoundland a year ago for Archangel. The members of the crew talked with one of the survivors of the Suffolk. He is a Russian Finn and is the only one who is physically able to talk. The other two, who were rescued by British sailors, were not expected to recover.

SHIP FROZEN IN.

The Suffolk, a cargo steamer, while on a trip to Archangel, got frozen in the White Sea before Christmas. Other steamers had been caught in the same way, but had been rescued by ice-breakers.

The food supply was running low, and the fuel was about exhausted. Finally, faced with starvation and suffering from the cold, several of the crew went insane and died. Maddened by hunger and cold, the captain shot himself.

Some ten or more members of the crew decided to reach land by foot. The distance was 80 miles. Only three of the number were later found alive. A day after leaving the ill-fated steamer a blizzard set in and the men were separated, the three keeping together being those picked up. The bodies of the others were never found.

HIS CHARITY

Man Who Offered to Finance Girls' Education is Showered with Requests of Every Type.

NEW YORK, April 28.—When Louis A. Hoffman of New York and New Orleans, announced last Sunday that he had determined to pay the expenses for the education at college of two girls, one of New Orleans and one of New York, he felt that he had found a worthy way in which to utilized part of the large profits he has made in his newspaper supply business as a result of the war. He let it be known that he would select the beneficiaries through recommendations of school authorities here and in New Orleans. All seemed well.

That was Sunday. To-day Mr. Hoffman is practically a fugitive. He had to quit the hotel in which he lives to escape incessant telephone messages, letters and calls. His office has been receiving a bushel of letters on other than office business by every mail. Mr. Hoffman candidly acknowledged last evening that he is afraid to go to his office.

At first the letters interested him. Some appealed to his pity, and all sought to touch him in the slang as well as the emotional sense. He grew puzzled, then disgusted, and finally very angry. He discovered that worthy sources of criminals were trying to prey upon him.

Hundreds of letters sent to Mr. Hoffman have been forwarded to the police. They are from men and women who make a business of selling women— "white slavers," as they are known. These letters give addresses and names, many of which are already on police records, and the letters are to be used in prosecutions wherever available.

"I am not interested in the establishment of massage parlors, courses in massage, courses in dramatic art by young girls from the country with beautiful voices and exceptional figures" and I am not looking for 'lady friends'," said Mr. Hoffman, discussing some types of letters he had received. "I cannot find places for 'attractive widows' or their sons.

"Outside of that unpleasant feature of the unsought notoriety I have had, I wish to announce that I am not a bank nor a millionaire. I do not lend money to strangers. I am not interested in the establishment of employment bureaus, boarding houses, mines, patents, schemes. I am sorry girls have to work in shops, factories and department stores for $6 a week, but what can I do about it?"

Mr. Hoffman said that the attention of the proper charity organizations is being called to writers of appeals received by him which seem from worthy sources.

MONTHLY MEETING OF 57TH I. O. D. E.

Held Last Evening—Mrs D. Walker, Regent Will Attend Annual Meeting in Toronto

The monthly meeting of the 57th Chapter I.O.D.E. was held Tuesday evening, with a large attendance.

Mrs. Walker, Regent, gave her initial address, and in a few pleasant words voiced her appreciation of the honour and responsibility of her electorate. One new member, Miss Borrowdaile was added to the membership which now totals one hundred.

The Secretary read a number of letters from our boys at the front, thanking the chapter for socks and other comforts received. Herb Rush, Wm. McKinley, H. Rogers, Lieut. Rackham, and many others wrote.

The annual meeting will be held in Toronto, May 14th to 19th. Mrs. Walker will be delegate, and as many representative members as care to go will be welcome. Miss Hay, would like the address of needy soldiers who may require socks.

Mrs. T. A. S. Hay reported seventy-five visits made to the hospitals during the month and Mrs. Sharpe, George street, twenty-nine among the soldiers families. Votes of thanks were given Mrs. Gliddon, and all ladies who assisted at the Chain Teas, and to Miss Maude Rush for so successfully conducting the candy table at the Easter Tea.

A number of ladies have kindly contributed funds sufficient to purchase three spindles of wool, and those who do not care to supply the wool, but are willing to knit for the 93rd Sock Shower, May 13th, may apply to Mrs. Hill, Brock street.

The tea-room will be continued during May and June, and re-opened September 15th. During July and August, all members are asked to contribute ten cents a week, so that the funds may not fall too low. The meeting closed with the usual form, by the regent.

PACK OF CARDS SAVED A LIFE

A letter received by Mr. S. J. King, of Bristol acknowledging a gift of books, games and other useful things tells how a pack of Fry's famous "Hello Daddy!" cards saved a man's life. The receiver of the parcel had distributed the contents.

"One of the packs of cards was never used. I gave it to a friend of mine, who placed it in his pack. He had just left his dug-out when it was struck by a shell, killing three of our boys and badly shaking him up. Upon looking for the cards later, he discovered that a piece of shrapnel had penetrated his pack and severed the cards almost in two."—Bristol "Times & Mirror", March 23rd. 1916.

Countess in Green Kisses Revolver Then Surrenders

Markievicz Gives Up in Dramatic Fashion—Dublin is Quiet Again

All Rebels in City Surrender and these in Country are doing the Same.

DUBLIN, May 3.—The Countess of Markievics, who commanded a force of 120 rebels in the Royal College of Surgeons, surrendered in a dramatic fashion. A white flag was hoisted on Saturday morning and a communication sent to the officer commanding the attacking force saying that the rebels would surrender at 11 o'clock.

At the appointed hour the Countess Markievics marched out of the college followed by the rebels, walking in twos. She was dressed entirely in green. She led her men to the British forces, saluted the officer in command, kissed her revolver before surrendering it and her cartridge bandolier, and then said "I am ready." Her followers were then disarmed and marched under an escort to the castle.

All the rebels in Dublin have surrendered and those in the country districts are doing likewise, according to the official statement issued this evening.

Man's Foot Was Almost Torn Off

PORT HOPE, May 3.—Walter Staples, while engaged thrashing at Mr. John Beighton's, Port Britain, Monday morning, met with a very serious accident. Mr. Staples was preparing to lace a belt and had it off the fanning mill. However, before the machine was shut down the belt caught Mr. Staples' foot, and he was rapidly drawn in. Mr. Henry Haskill, who was working there, shut the power off with all possible speed but not before Mr. Staples was severely injured. The ankle was pulled out of the socket and his foot bent right back on the leg. Every particle of flesh from the ankle half way to his knee was torn off and the bone of the leg was completely bare.

LARGE LOCAL MUSKRAT CATCH

Approximate Value of This Interesting Home Product $25,000

The local muskrat season this year, which has just closed, has been a phenomenally successful one. Reports of catches of "rats" and probable sales in this market alone is intended to amount to about $25,000. The prices ranged from 60c to 64c each, and the quality as exceedingly good. Local fur dealers bought almost everything offered. Barries', Limited, secured 18,000 skins, brought direct to their store. Presuming that each of the other local fur dealers handled as many skins, there must have been 40,000 skins sold, which would bring the amount paid out for this home produce up to $25,000.

All of the rat skins secured by Barries' Limited will be utilized in the manufacture of fur garments for their Peterborough store, and their three large branch stores in the West.

CHEWING GUM RACK IS SUGGESTED FOR PUPILS

Madison, Wis., May 3.—The State educational bulletin comments favorably on a suggestion of President J. W. Crabtree, of the River Falls Normal School, that there should be a "gum rack" in schools.

"Pupils have a right to chew gum" President Crabtree is quoted as saying. Permit the pupil to chew gum on the playground and on the way to and from school. But what will the poor child do with his gum while in the recitation room?

"A gum rack containing the number and peg of each pupil solves the problem. On entering he leaves his gum on his number. On leaving he simply picks his gum off as he goes by. One seldom gets the gum from the wrong number.

A countryman visiting Dublin for the first time took a seat in a train. Being next to a pompous-looking swell, he commenced conversation in a rather free-and-easy style. At length the mighty one said:

A Real Flesh Builder For Thin People

This man and woman—that big, hearty, filling dinner you ate last night. What became of all the fat-producing nourishment it contained? You haven't gained in weight one ounce. That food passed from your body like unburned coal through an open grate. The material was there, but your food doesn't work and stick, and the plain truth is you hardly get enough nourishment from your meals to pay for the cost of cooking. This is true of this folks the world over. Your nutritive organs, your functions of assimilation, are probably sadly out of gear and need reconstruction.

Cut out the foolish foods and fussy sawdust diets. Cut out everything but the meals you are eating and eat with every one of these a single Sargol tablet. In two weeks note the difference. Let the scales be the judge. Five to eight good solid pounds of healthy, "stay-there" fat may be the net result. Sargol aims to charge weak, stagnant blood-with millions of fresh new red blood corpuscles—to give the blood the surprising power to deliver every ounce of fat-making material in your food to every part of your body. Sargol, too, mixes with your food, to prepare it for the blood in an easily assimilated form. This people tell how they have gained all the way from 10 to 15 pounds a month while taking Sargol and say that the new flesh stays put. Sargol tablets are a careful combination of six of the best assimilated elements known to chemistry. They come 60 tablets to a package, are pleasant, harmless and inexpensive and all good druggists in this vicinity sell them subject to an absolute guarantee of weight increase or money back as found in every large package.

If you find a druggist who is unable to supply you, send $1.00 money order or registered letter to the National Laboratories, 79 St. Antoine St., Montreal, and a complete ten days' treatment will be sent you postpaid in plain wrapper.

BACK CAT IN FOUR WRECKS.

One closed Northern Pacific freight car, in which a black cat was locked at Auburn, Wash., is held responsible a few days ago for four accidents. The train had two derailments on the west side of the mountains, the same car figuring in both. The ill-omened car jumped the rails in the Ross canyon and spilled a shipment of flour and automobiles. After passing this city it caused another wreck in the lower valley.

When the car was opened at Pasco the cat leaped out and disappeared and no more trouble was encountered.

WHERE THE STYLES COME FROM ALCOHOL

As Prohibition approaches, a good many who still believe in the virtues of alcohol as a family medicine may be disturbed as to how they can have the bottle replenished. To all such I address this letter, asking them to examine the matter fairly and candidly.

Alcohol as medicine is rapidly being given up in all the large hospitals. This is shown by the collated reports of seven of the largest hospitals in England. In 1862 $37,403.00 was spent for alcohol and only $15,675.00 for milk. In 1902 only $13,186.00 was spent for alcohol and $43,818.00 for milk, with about the same number of patients. Sir Victor Horsely tells us that some of the present day rapid recoveries are due to the fact that after operations, the patients are no longer dosed with alcohol. Many of the most successful physicians of the day never prescribe it even in the smallest quantity. That being so, would it not be wise to leave it out of the family medicine chest.

It is now beyond dispute that alcohol even in moderate quantities, lessens efficiency, lessens power of endurance, weakens the memory and eyesight. It does not require any great intelligence to understand that what does all this must lessen the power of a patient to fight disease. If a single glass of beer lessens a man's endurance by seven per cent., and his power to remember things by fifteen per cent., it follows that it also weakens his power of recovery from disease. Dr. Welsh, of Johns-Hopkins University said "Alcohol in any form or in any quantity lessens a patient's chance of recovery". If that be true of an adult, how much truer it is of the delicate tissues of a child. Some years ago the German Government issued a poster, warning parents to give their children "not one drop of beer, not one drop of wine, not one drop of whisky or any other form of alcohol."

Not only does alcohol lessen a patient's chance of recovery from illness, but it greatly increases his tendency to contract disease. No one will accuse military men of being temperance cranks, and yet the Handbook of the Royal Army Medical Corps takes great pains to put that fact beyond question. On page 20 of that book experiments are described that would convince any man that even one glass will render a man more liable to any contagious or infectious disease.

Not long ago the Academy of Medicine of Toronto, unanimously declared against the use of alcohol in any form as a medicine. Finally let us remember that in the U.S. whisky and brandy have been left off the American Pharmacopoia, which is the official list of medicines recommended for the use of physicians. If that be so, are you not quite safe in dropping the use of it as a family medicine? Sometimes I may advise what to use in its place.—H. Arnott, M.D., M.C.P.S.

SPORT FOR THE ANGLER.

To the excellence of the fishing to be enjoyed in Algonquin Park there is undisputed testimony. Fish caught in the waters of the Park have won each year many of the National competitions open to the anglers of the Continent. The brook trout of Algonquin Park are of the genuine square tailed, red spotted or speckled variety. Black bass are plentiful in the Rock Lake district and are of the small-mouthed variety. Salmon trout are found in all the waters of the park and are much gamier than the same species in the southern part of the Province. Splendid camp sites, unlimited canoe routes and hotels if you want them. Easy of access, only 200 miles north of Toronto. Illustrated descriptive literature giving full particulars for the asking. Apply to B. A. Rose, C. P. and Ticket Agent or G. E. Hossing, D.P.A., Toronto, Ont.

STREET LIGHTING FOR MONAGHAN

Deputation Waited Upon the Utilities Commission—Report Will Be Prepared

The Peterborough Utilities Commission met last evening and among other things received a deputation from North Monaghan. Reeve McIntosh who acted as spokesman for the deputation pointed out the needs of certain sections of North Monaghan for electrical energy. Some of the streets mentioned in the request for light were McGill and King, George streets.

The matter was referred to Mr. H. O. Fisk, manager of the Utilities Commission, with instructions to prepare a report and submit it to the Commissioners.

New York Stock Market

Summary of To-day's Activities on the New York Stock Exchange

NEW YORK, May 3.—Mexican petroleum sold up at 1 3-4, at 98, at the opening of the Stock Exchange to-day, in response to favourable results of the Chregon-Scott conference. Smelters was up 1 3-8 at 98. Bethlehem Steel opened with a loss of 14 points, at 445.

Elsewhere changes were slight.

CAPT. KENNY'S TASKS.

Pastor, Conference President, Chaplain, now Head Recruiting Officer.

Cobourg, May 3.—Rev. Captain H. B. Kenny, Chaplain of the 139rd Batt., has been appointed head recruiting officer of the battalion at Cobourg. Added to this Captain Kenny has his work as pastor of the Cobourg Methodist church, and president of the Bay of Quinte Methodist Conference, which meets in Peterborough in May. The quarterly official board of the church has invited Rev. S. Sellery, M.A., B.D., of Napanee, to supply here when Rev. Captain Kenny goes overseas.

A Good Goal Keeper.—The employees in a large shipbuilding yard on the Clyde having an off Saturday recently, a football match was arranged between teams representing the fitters and the brassfinishers. The fitters were the superior side, and kept their opponents hemmed in to their goal most of the time, but were unable to score owing to the brilliant display of the "finishers'" goal keeper. The game ended in a goalless draw, and so delighted were the brass men that they treated the goalie to such an extent that they had to carry him home. "Here's yer man, Mrs. Broon," they said to the goalkeeper's wife as she opened the door to them. "If it hadna been for his guid goalkeeping the day we'd a' got hate." "Ah, well," she retorted, "if he keeps goal as weel as he keep his pay ye'll never get hate." Then they crept silently home.

Many Buildings Were Destroyed In Riots

Special to the Examiner.

DUBLIN, May 3.—A total of 179 buildings were destroyed or damaged during the seven days' rebellion, the Chief of the Dublin Fire Department stated to-day. He estimated the fire loss in the Sackville street district alone at eight million dollars.

German Reply To U.S. Expected Soon

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, May 3.—Special despatches from British correspondents in Holland agreed to-day that the German reply will not meet President Wilson's demands.

Germany's answer will make certain concessions, both for the purpose of delay, and to throw upon President Wilson the responsibility for a break, but that in the main it will be argumentive and indecisive.

published for the guidance and information of all concerned:

"You are warned against a man who goes by the name of Hugh Grosvenor. He represents himself as an agent of the British government and by other false pretences has obtained large sums of money.

"The following is a personal description of the individual:

"Height, 5 feet 11 inches or 6 feet.

"Build—Slender but broad shouldered. Has medium sized hands and feet. The right hand is withered and is notably smaller than the left hand while the right arm is also shrunken to a mere bone."

Pte. Louis M. Roche.
Pte. John Leon.
Pte. Harry B. Balfour.
Pte. Henry E. Rorabeck.

To-day's downpour of rain interfered with the mobilization plans of the 93rd Battalion to such an extent that the trek of the Havelock and Norwood platoons to Peterboro to-day was cancelled and instead the D Company men arrived on the 3.43 C.P.R. train this afternoon and were met at the station by the Battalion who escorted them to the armouries. The Lakefield and Apsley platoons are scheduled to march in to-morrow leaving Lakefield at noon.

The local members of the 93rd were the gainers by to-day's change in the arrangements. Not only did they escape a fifteen mile march but they fell heir to the lunch that had been provided for the Havelock and Norwood platoons, the sandwiches being served at 10 o'clock this morning.

Pte. Leo Phelan, a local member of the 80th Batt., charged with being absent without leave, was taken back to Belleville by an escort last evening. Three members of the 123rd Batt., Toronto, charged with the same offence are in custody here awaiting the arrival of an escort from Toronto.

WEDDING BELLS

McLEAN—AUSTIN.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at St. Paul's church on Wednesday, April 26, 1916, at 7.30 p.m., when Isabella Charlotte, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Austin, was married to Mr. William David McLean, the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. John McLean, both of this city. The young couple will reside at 704 George street, Peterboro.

A Brazilian city uses a trolley car ambulance to transport patients to and from hospitals in its suburbs.

MR. SWITZER LEAVES THE CHEESE BOARD

When the cheese board meets for the first time this year a conspicuous absentee will be Mr. William Switzer, who for the past 16 years has been the treasurer and salesman of the East Emily factory. Ever since it was established he has represented this factory, has served it ably and regularly and has reflected a certain distinction upon it in the position he held on the Board. For a number of years he was its president and during that period successfully sought to harmonize the salesmen and buyers in their trading, and thereby strengthen on the Peterboro Board. If Mr. Switzer is gone from its sessions he will be greatly missed, and it was learned that he has severed this connection. His experience and character made him a valued member but probably he felt that he had served sufficiently long.
